President Speaks Welcomes Frosh With SAC Help

President Sidney Smith speaks today at 6:45 p.m. in Convocation Hall. The President's opening address is an annual affair on the campus, and it constitutes the official welcome to all freshmen of the university.

Dr. Smith, who has been President of the University for the last eight years, usually has some sound advice to give to the students, especially of the freshman year.

This year, six members of the Students' Administrative Council will be officially present at the address. President Mike Shoemaker (IV Trinity) and five others will be in gowns at the entrance to Convocation Hall, meeting the freshmen.

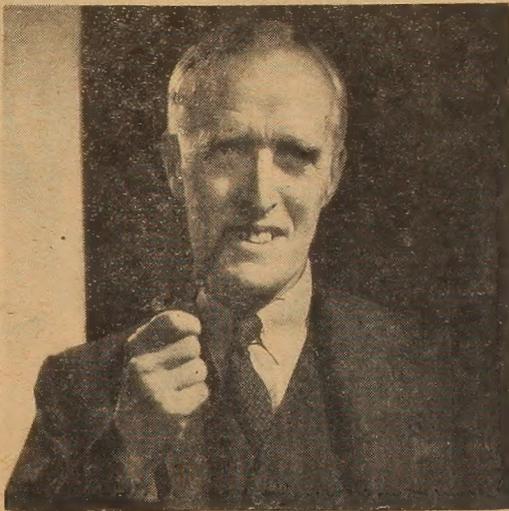

"We'll be there to greet first year students and to see that they're properly seated. In fact we'll be a sort of welcoming committee," Shoemaker said.

Directions to all Frosh: Convocation Hall is the large domed building at the south end of the campus. It is across from the Engineering building and beside Simcoe Hall.

In order that all students may attend the President's speech, classes will be dismissed at 3:00 p.m. today.

Ex-Warden Bickersteth Revisits U of T Campus

Bickersteth

Hart House 'Marvellous' After 8 Years Absence

The man who was Warden of Hart House for more than 25 years says the house today is "simply marvelous." J. B. Bickersteth, warden from 1921 to 1947, arrived in Toronto from Coventry, England yesterday.

The former Warden particularly admired the brightly colored furnishings of the Hart House Common rooms.

"I don't know why we didn't do something like this in my day", he said, "but then Hart House was supposed to be somewhat monastic".

Hart House is in good hands at present, said Mr. Bickersteth, who is a great admirer of both the former Warden, Nicholas Ignatief, and the present one, Joseph McCulley.

"I always loved Hart House," he said, "and I love it still".

This is his first visit to the campus since he retired in 1947. He will be in Toronto only a few days, before leaving on a tour of western Canada. He will return to the U of T about Oct. 24 for a longer visit.

Bickersteth said he spent four days with Governor-General Vincent Massey on his way to Toronto from England.

The Governor-General was instrumental in founding Hart House, which is named in memory of his grandfather, Hart Massey.

Mr. Bickersteth said the Governor-General is as satisfied with the present Hart House as he is. However, Mr. Bickersteth did reserve judgment on the Arbor Room.

After a short stay here, Mr. Bickersteth plans to travel west to Vancouver. From there, he will return to the East, stopping off at universities in Edmonton, Saskatoon and Winnipeg.

"I'm a westerner at heart", said Mr. Bickersteth. He said that when he first came to Canada in 1911 fresh from Oxford, he had gone out to the Canadian west.

"It was glorious in those days," he said. "It was a great trek to open up the Canadian West".

He said that it was a great thrill to watch the land developing, with the building of railroads, and the influx of settlers.

Mr. Bickersteth said that after coming out west he lectured for a while at the University of Alberta. But he "just didn't care for lecturing".

He was pleased to have the opportunity to come to Hart House as its second Warden in 1921.

"The house had just been going for a few months at that time", he said. "I was completely alone on the job—and I had an influx of 4,000 war veterans to handle".

Mr. Bickersteth said that one of the chief pleasures of his trip has been meeting many of the former students that he knew through Hart House activities.

Mr. Bickersteth also admired the many additions which have been made to the Hart House collection of contemporary Canadian paintings begun in the early 1920's.

"Vincent Massey and I realized that there was something significant in contemporary Canadian Art," he said.

"We then laid the foundation stone of one of the finest collections of Canadian pictures in the country, outside of the National Gallery".

New Course

To Offer Civic Planning

A town planning course—the only one in Ontario—is being offered at the University this year. Only McGill, Manitoba and British Columbia offer similar courses.

With co-operation from departments of engineering, geography, economics, and others, the School of Architecture will offer the course to students holding a degree or its equivalent in allied fields of study.

A similar two-year course leading to a master's degree was held here previously, but was dropped from the curriculum because of "lack of funds". Outside funds have permitted the return of the course, President Smith stated.

One of England's foremost professors of architecture, Gordon Stephenson, from the University of Liverpool, has been appointed to direct the new course.

He was principal author of England's New Town Act and the County Planning Act. Professor Stephenson has also been consultant to the government of Western Australia and to the University of Western Australia in preparing town layouts and plans.

The town planning course is expected to contribute greatly to order and economy in the unprecedented growth of Toronto and other Ontario communities, said H. H. Madill, director of the School of Architecture.

Graduates of the course, familiar with Ontario and its problems, should become qualified town planners, University officials believe. As well, graduates may be trained as civil servants, architects, and engineers, on the civic scale.

Enrolment Will Reach 11,200 Depends On The Birth Rate!

Enrolment this year at the University of Toronto will reach 11,200.

This was the prediction made yesterday by Mr. Joseph Evans, Registrar of the University. Since the various faculties and colleges have not completed registration the exact number of students will not be known for at least two weeks.

This is a large increase over the 11,059 of last year, and if the Registrar's predictions are correct enrolment will continue to increase each year.

Mr. Evans stated he based his statement on the fact that the money income available to potential students has increased, and Toronto's metropolitan area has grown enormously. Linked with this, he said, is the demand by industry and most other employers for University graduates. The Registrar also spoke of a general awareness on the part of the populus of higher education.

According to Mr. Evans' theory 1965 will see Canada's Universities with 120,000 students—a far cry from last year's 70,000.

Mr. Evans explains his predictions thus: Today's freshmen are the last of those who belonged to the low birth-rate group which eventuated from the depression years. Around 1936 the birth-rate began to rise until it reached its peak during the war years.

"When the war babies reach University age enrolment will soar," said the Registrar. "We are now receiving the forerunners of the greater numbers that will be seeking University education in 10 years."

Varsity Mauls Aggies In Exhibition Opener With 39-0 Landslide

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

Supported by a line averaging 190 lbs. the OAC Aggies entered Varsity stadium yesterday afternoon expecting to trample the Blues football in the first exhibition game of the year. The Blues put their right foot forward, however, themselves trampling the weak-looking "Aggies", 39-0. The Blues dominated throughout and going into the second half led 18-0. The great running of Rich Bethune and Jack Rogers combined with the expert ball handling of Ed Skrzypek, was all the Blues needed to send the Aggies packing.

The Blues, fresh from a two and a half week training period at Lake Couchiching, were as impressive as a short training period would merit. Offensively they countered with end sweeps and simple pass patterns in an obvious attempt not to show opposing teams' scouts too much.

Defensively, the Blues' line, led by John Bodrug, Walt Radzick and Al Watt, was excellent, tightening up and reducing the Aggies' ground attack to virtually nothing.

Quarterback Skrzypek, impressing with his two-way play, erased any doubts regarding his ability to play well after a year's absence from the Intercollegiate loop. Skrzypek outplayed Harry Wilson in the passing department, completing six out of ten for a total gain of 140 yds., compared to Wilson's three out of eight, good for 76 yds.

Skrzypek also took on a role as the defensive back Bob Masterson is looking for, intercepting one and knocking down another.

Leading the scoring parade were Gerry Lansky and Burt Kellock with two majors each. Rogers and Phil Muntz scored the other two. Pete Maik tallied nine points with six converts and a field goal.

Rich Bethune was the Blues' leading ground gainer with 78 yds. on 10 carries. Bethune's potent drives around the end were sufficient to warrant his being called the Blues leading back.

Rogers also played a good game showing much promise. The former Intermediate gained 69 yards in five tries, once going 40 yards to score.

One of the Blues' deficiencies, that of an adequate pass defence, was pointed up for a moment in the second quarter. Don Simkin, Aggies' quarterback, found a hole in the Blue tertiary and threw three passes up the centre enabling his squad to get to the Blues' ten yard line.

Max's muses . . . Blues play McMaster Marauders at Varsity Stadium at 2:00 p.m. this Saturday . . . Kellock, a veteran of three years play with McMaster, entered the U of T Law School this year . . . he's got a capable pair of hands . . . Muntz gained only 42 yards in eight tries on the ground, but scored a 50 yard touchdown on a screen pass from Skrzypek . . . The Blues suffered no serious injuries . . . Al Riva, Walt Bulchak and Earl Ford missed this game due to injuries.

Smiling Fish

This is a smiling fish who has heard the good word — One-Eyed Benny will be back in The Varsity again this year. This fish is figuring on making a mint by playing it smart and betting along with Benny's predictions on Blue Football.

Last year the fish was one dumb bunny and bet against Benny — the result being disastrous.

This year — he's waiting for Benny's words of wisdom on the front page of Friday's Varsity.

Ed Skrzypek

No newcomer to a Blue uniform is Skule's Ed Skrzypek, who returns to Bob Masterson's fold after a year's absence due to academic difficulties. Ed was a big gun in sharing quarterback duties with holdover Harry Wilson yesterday afternoon as the Blues romped to a 39-0 decision over the OAC Aggies in Varsity Stadium.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

Although it seems like only yesterday, we've been told it was about five or six months ago that we packed up this little page for the summer. And with what we thought was commendable sentimentality at the time, we talked about the great year that had been and dropped suggestives about what could be an even greater one coming up. Actually, we couldn't see much glory in store for the Blue football team last May, what with fifteen or so regulars setting out to wave their parchments under some big executive's nose. But as Little Miss Middleton has so subtly put it down there in the corner, one is supposed to take that "we are expecting great things" attitude at the end or the beginning of every publishing year, and what the hell, it makes good copy. Besides, sometimes you come pretty close to the truth.

Of course we haven't the foggiest what the truth is at this time, but to all intents and purposes it appears that the Intercollegiate Football Union will be a four-team league for the first time since well before the war. Although the Blues lost several key men, especially among their defensive halfbacks, boys like Ed Skrzypek and Peter Maik have made their peace with the powers that be, and can again don the old Blue and White. Other strong additions came from the ranks of Jack Kennedy's Intermediates, so with a week and a half to iron out the kinks, Bob Masterson may well find himself with his third championship since he arrived on the scene.

Graduation struck at Western too, and the Edmonton Eskimos grabbed top-notchers Gino Fracas and Don Getty, while the Metrasmen suffered along the line also. But little Willie Casanova, the man for whom Jovial John devised the Diamond T two years ago, now gets his chance to thump the table, and the Mustangs will probably have their usual strong contender come October first.

Rumblings from Kingston all but confirmed our midsummer choice for the Yates Cup, with the Big-S backfield of Gary Schreider, Ron Stewart, and Bill Surphlis carrying the mail for the Tricolor. Retaining last year's team almost intact, coach Frank Tindall must be looking forward to the first title for Queen's since the season of 1937.

Best news is that McGill have pulled up their gridiron socks, and are sporting a red-hot threat down in old Montreal. Quarterbacked by Dick Carr, Columbia's ace signal-caller, and strengthened up front by former Tiger-cats Buster Brown and Ron Murphy, the Redmen have already served notice that it is once again a four-team league. The new Intercollegiate ruling that classifies a former pro as an amateur and eligible for College ball, if he sits out a year, has injected confidence into the moulding of the 1955 McGill machine. And we understand that Lou Little, Columbia's long-time mentor, has been quoted as saying that he lost his whole team when Carr moved up north. Looks like McGill will wake up to Intercollegiate competition with Harry Griffith at the helm.

So with the coming season generally misty, and the winter months too far off to consider, about the only thing sure on the Canadian gridiron scene for this fall is another Western title for the Edmonton Eskimos, and maybe even retention of Lord Grey's mug in the Oil Capitol. Unlikely you say? They were running the mile in five and a half minutes in 1922.

Blues Face McMaster Saturday

McMaster Marauders invade the Toronto campus this Saturday afternoon to renew the football rivalry that was so ceremoniously cut short two seasons ago when the Hamilton lads disappeared from Senior Intercollegiate competition.

For the Macmen it will be a chance to clear the air after dropping a 24-0 game to McGill, while for the Blues it will be the last exhibition game before the league opener with Western on October first in London.

With the season opening a week earlier this year, a development brought on by the general confusion following last fall's three-way tie for first place, the Blues have only four weeks to prepare for the clash with the Mustangs. They have been hard at it on the shores of Lake Couchiching since September first, and, although the offence has proved powerful thus far, there is still room for improvement on defence. With Bob Masterson's talent for building strong defensive clubs, however, the 1955 Blues should come out with a strong bid to retain last year's title, something they haven't done since well before the war.

Word has it that McMaster have rather little to offer for competition, but the presence of sophomore quarterback Russ Jackson is likely to be felt come Saturday afternoon. Jackson was with the Marauders last season when they played a series of exhibition games, travelling down to Nova Scotia for a match with the Blue and White of St. Francis Xavier. He also was a sparkplug with the Marauder basketball team last winter, and was next high man to big Bert Raphael over the season.

At least one man on the Blue squad will be having a field day meeting Mac, could be in more ways than one. Burt Kellock, who picked up two touchdowns when the Blues trounced OAC 39-0 yesterday, has had three seasons with the Hamilton school, and is now entered in the University of Toronto's School of Law. Other Blues will be showing their wares in an effort to miss Bob Masterson's axe which will be falling soon. Game time will be 2:00.

Women Were Made

If you spared an extra moment from this big first day of lectures to take a second glance at this particular page, you would undoubtedly conclude that this particular story is an awful lot longer than it needs to be. And you can move up to the head of the class because you're dead right.

Writing to fill a big hole on the page is just one of the things you'll learn when you start to work for The Varsity, and it's a handy thing to be able to do a few months from now, say around next May.

About half-way through your story you finally get to the great message your readers are hanging on the edge of their seats to receive, and to show you we're going along with the game, we have a message of the deepest import to pass on to you.

In all dead seriousness, the sports staff of this august rag is looking for interested reporters and such to fill great vacancies throughout the department. No matter what sport you're keen about, if you want to write, or learn to write, and be another Westbrook Pegler, Damon Runyon, or Ring Lardner, come down to The Varsity office today or tomorrow between 12:15 and 2:00. Women welcome too.

on the sideline

By Flo Middleton

Although by the time you get to this column you will be rather tired of types either welcoming you back (actually marveling that you were included in the category of the fortunate few that passed) or congratulating you on the wise choice of joining the fresher ranks of our fair university, I guess I shall be forced to follow the crowd and say "welcome."

As could be expected, for this time of year, we are looking forward to an excellent year for sports on the campus and actually there is no reason why it should not be. Already swimming, archery and baseball are in the throes of being organized; so girls, let's don our bathing suits and gym suits and get our teams practising.

Last year, the women of this university brought the tennis and badminton crowns home. How about a better effort this year, girls? After all, we cannot have Western take three championships in the intercollegiate ranks again.

If you don't somehow feel that your summer was athletic enough for intercollegiate competition, there are always many vacancies on the interfaculty teams. How about making a good healthy resolution and adding your name to your college or faculty team? The lists will be going up in your college sometime in the next week for softball and it does not take too much effort or, for that matter, much mental fortitude to sign your name to the sheet. Let me assure you, you don't have to be a Ted Williams to play in the interfaculty league. Not only will you get a lot of fun out of swinging a bat for your college or faculty, but you will also meet many new friends as you slide into third base.

The fall season sees activity in softball and lacrosse although lacrosse is not a recognized interfaculty sport and is limited to the girls at Trinity and U.C. If you are a Marilyn Bell, a Gussie Moran or a William Tell, there are many vacancies on the intercollegiate teams and the coaches of their respective teams will be only too glad to see you at practice periods. It's up to you, ladies, to make this season a success, so girls let's show some enthusiasm and make this year the best ever for women's athletics on the Varsity Campus.

You are now entering a large — very large — university. You will spend from three to six years of your lives closely wrapped up in the events of this university, and then you will leave it, never to return, to begin your careers in whatever path you have chosen.

Why are you here? Some, because your parents sent you. Some, because it is now the socially accepted thing to have been to college. Some, because you realize the cash value of a degree. Some, because you want to learn — to learn the truth.

It is to serve these last that the university was founded.

The search of truth is the central core of the university tradition. The passion for knowledge, with its resultant militant scepticism combined with personal humility — this is the central theme of a university education.

It is not the proclamation of truths but the search for them: not the repetition of dogma but the shattering of superstition; not the acceptance of the status quo but the questioning of it wherein lies the glory of the university.

If this inquiry for truth can be combined with a strong sense of responsibility and moral integrity, then the end result is an educated man in the finest sense of the word. If you gain from this university these two qualities — scepticism and responsibility — then you will have acquired that which surpasses all else in life in value, and all your time and effort spent on this campus will be richly repaid. If you merely carry away from here a static knowledge of events or facts, or a degree with a good cash value, then you will have wasted your time.

We hope that, bearing this in mind, you have the good sense to realize the value of the academic course that you will be pursuing, and take a vital and living interest in it. We also hope that you will realize that education can also consist of group responsibilities well-handled, of informal bull sessions, and of work on a multitude of campus activities. These things too are an essential part of university life.

We wish you the very best of luck.

With this issue, the editors and staff of The Varsity begin the publication of the seventy-fifth year of this paper. In its pages we hope to present as accurate and complete an account as is possible of the news of this university. In addition, we aim to place before its students issues which concern them, directly or indirectly, and to help give some vent to creative talent on this campus.

We have many axes to grind, and we will grind merrily away at them during the coming months. However, it is our pledge that in so far as is humanly possible we will confine our opinions to the editorial columns of this paper.

We intend to hold the pages of this paper in trust for the students of this University, who are our publishers, and any student may have equal access to its columns subject only to the limitations of space, the laws of libel, and the canons of good taste.

We invite all, through criticism or suggestion, or through actual work for the paper, to help make this seventy-fifth volume of The Varsity worthy of its predecessors.

— The Editors.

At midnight last year the new year began, the new class-clad, bridge-brained swaggering scholastic year. No bells rang out, no couples made it an excuse to kiss, — the celebrations are rather of a different order.

New students will wander around in their new wardrobes, including patriotic bennies, their faces scrubbed and in the happy state of being ready to believe. Older students will slouch around sizing up the fresh students with admiration, or more probably cynicism.

We'll permit ourselves a few safe delphic-type predictions: some grand slams will be doubled and down, some will be checkmated, some will be mated, and some checked; some will seek greatness, and some few will find it, some will find nothing, and some will seek nothing, some will become what they are not, some will cease to be what they are; some will get made at The Varsity, and The Varsity in return will try to make them see the light with its usual presumption, the SAC will meet, professors will talk and hope to be listened to, lectures will be missed, books will be lent and late, some will talk, about sex, politics, religion, perhaps even NFCU* — and finally, most will enter the exam Casino to try their luck.

And many things will not be done, because they "aren't done" and never have been done.

We'll permit ourselves one last audacity: a suggested new year's resolution. We won't suggest you resolve to go to all/none of your classes, we won't suggest you resolve to have all assignments in on time, or resolve to get that girl/man if it's the last thing you do. These resolves are too easily broken.

We do suggest you go to convocation hall at 3:45 p.m. to hear our president. It is not often that he shows us a direction.

WRITERS, ATTENTION

Letters on all and sundry subjects may be addressed to The Editor, The Varsity, for inclusion in the pages of this newspaper.

The chances of any such letter ever seeing the light of day on a printed page are immeasurably heightened if the letter is short—under 150 words—and typewritten—double spaced and 66 spaces to the line.

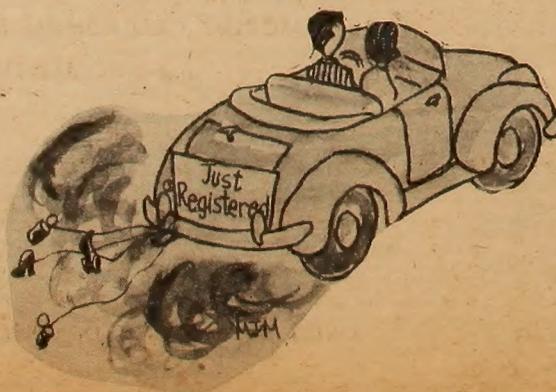

Such epistles should be delivered in person to the basement apartments of the SAC Building (the old Observatory in front of Hart House). An ATL card must be shown.

The Varsity also invites all those who are interested in joining the paper's staff to come down to the paper's office.

There are openings in all departments — including Makeup, Sports, News, Features, and CUP. Prospective staffers should come down to The Varsity Office as soon as possible for a tryout.

The Varsity is also interested in obtaining well-written feature articles from non-staffers on political, economic, or campus issues. Please consult the Editors of The Varsity beforehand as to style and length.

Nitrogenous Albatross

NITROGENOUS

How bounteous is the albatross
 He alternately squawks
 And loads his precious excrement
 High in the tropic rocks
 The people come in mighty ships
 To find it where it drops
 And send it out through all the world
 To grow the nation's crops.
 He neither toils, nor does he spin
 But makes himself a boon
 By defecating nitrogen,
 White in the tropic moon.
 Man is not like the albatross.
 He reaps where no one sows
 And where he drops his excrement
 The grass no longer grows.
 Throughout his life he robs the earth
 Of rich organic salts
 And when he dies, he locks them up
 In rot-proof concrete vaults.
 An engineer, God made the birds
 And beasts large and small,
 An artist, He created man
 Who has no use at all.

OUR READERS WRITE

What The Hell Next?

The Varsity has no tradition really to weigh it down; and that is good. The Varsity always brings surprises and I fervently hope it will surprise us this year by being different from that of the last year. Or that of the year before.

Autumn 1953: The Varsity was the paper in which all the political issues were discussed; we saw nothing of our own backyards; "the whole world was one vast plain and one boundless reach of sky".

Which is all very well for Tennyson but a bit boring for us. The paper, talked MacCarthy, McCarthy and Maccarthly, with a slight dash of Christianity to it. The trumpets trumpeted, the drums drummed, the typewriters typewrote and the editors drew words of blood and flame etc.

The problems of the long-suffering world were solved in two, well, perhaps three editorials and the world heaved sighs of relief and drew long breaths in anticipation and lost its breath in surprise. And The Varsity was the Messiah.

It was also the year of the Great Christian Debate. Now, mind you, Christianity is just like the Canadian flag and national song; whenever the editor is desperate and all topics for discussion are used up, that subject will be brought forth.

But 1953-54 was the year of the Great Debate, John Lee of Victoria wrote a glowing letter in Condemnation of Christianity. Victoria men replied and St. Michaels men replied and the haughty Trinitarians (or is it Trinitians) proffered advice, and the girls of all the faculties wrote tear-stained love-letters and we all got sick and tired of the whole damn business.

Autumn 1954: The pages of The Varsity were overflowed with the intense Weltschmerz, mal de siècle, spleen, blues, down in the dumps, depression, dementia, disappointment, impotence, "vanity, vanity, all is vanity," crying mood, all-world's-a-waste-land mood, moodiness, tears, the mood of the world being "A Thing Obscure".

Autumn 1955: What will be offered for our consumption? Anything, anything, but the previous fare.

Inconsiderate

The Editor,
 The Varsity.

I wish to protest in the most vehement terms the treatment accorded to students at this University by the authorities.

First of all, Simcoe Hall without any word of warning undertook to send to all students a letter with their class standings in June before publication of the results in the daily papers. This was instead of following their previous custom of only sending letters to those who had failed.

As a result, many students upon receiving a letter from the University Registrar before the publication of the exam standings automatically assumed they had failed.

And to top off this official inconsideration of Simcoe Hall Officialdom, all students are subjected to one big rigmarole when they come in to register.

Japanese WUS Seminar

A Tremendous Upheaval

A tremendous social upheaval is overtaking Japan, says Lewis Perinbam, executive co-secretary of the World University Service.

Recently returned with 20 Canadian students from a two-month summer seminar in that country, Mr. Perinbam said yesterday the students of Japan reflect the conflict between ancient mores and modern ideas which characterize modern Japanese life.

He said the Canadian group—including Gay Sellars (IV UC)—found the familial attitude dominated social, religious and political life in the country.

This is at odds with the growing sense of individualism imported since the war, people rarely rebel against the family complex, they found, because certain acts of nonconformity may result in an extreme sanction—being cut off from the family.

The tour was arranged by WUS as part of its program to encourage person-to-person relationships between students of various countries.

Mr. Perinbam said the students found two sets of extreme attitudes in the country—the far right and the far left—with a small group of liberal thinkers holding a middle course.

The apparent trend of the United States in supporting the conservative elements may have drastic effects in Japan, he said.

Despite a growth in democratic tendencies Japanese leaders have demonstrated a lack of leadership which is forcing the country into a state of indecision.

Joan Partridge of Queen's University said she believes the seed of understanding between the two countries has been sown but that increased personal involvement is needed for it to reach maturity.

She found Canadian students learned a great deal about their own country's attitude during their two-month stay in Japan.

New Ontario U?

Kenora, May: Ontario Liberal Leader, Farquhar Oliver said a Liberal Government would move the U of T's Forestry Department to the Lakehead.

Oliver also stated that the Lakehead Institute, which now gives courses the equivalent of the first two years of university technical courses, would be made a full-fledged university.

This new "University of Northern Ontario" might become a world-famous forestry center, Oliver said.

THE VARSITY WELCOMES THE 113th

King's College to U of T

We've Come A Long Way

This year the 113th crop of freshmen crowds into this university. But the university they attend is far different from the one that the first freshmen saw when King's College, the predecessor of the University of Toronto, was opened in 1843.

For one thing, the establishment of King's College was made in a sea of bitter controversy which was to surround the University during all of its early years. King's College, established by royal charter in 1827, was organized by Bishop Strachan under Anglican influence, using funds obtained from the sale of government lands. The majority of the inhabitants of Ontario — then known as Upper Canada — were not Anglicans, and objected to the use of public funds to finance a private religious university.

As a result of the controversy, in 1849 the university was secularized, and completely divorced from the control of the Anglican church. The name was then changed to The University of Toronto.

Since that time the University has grown steadily, although not always peacefully. Over a period of years, three other arts colleges affiliated with the University of Toronto: Trinity (Anglican), Victoria (United Church) and St. Michaels (Roman Catholic) took their places within the main university framework, while still retaining their original independence.

University College, founded in 1853, is the teaching branch of the provincial secular arts college. The University of Toronto exercises a general administrative control over Arts Colleges, as well as holding the exams and granting the degrees.

The various technical and professional schools, such as architecture and engineering, were also added over the years. Medicine was established as a faculty in 1843, and is one of the oldest of the schools.

The growth of faculties and schools at the University has been matched by the increase in buildings. At the beginning, the few university buildings were scattered about the middle of a huge expanse of land lying beyond the outskirts of York, as Toronto was then called. Today, the University campus is crowded with buildings and lies near the center of the huge and bustling metropolis of Toronto.

The newest building to be completed at the University is the new Trinity Chapel, which will be officially opened in November.

54 Years Of SAC

The Students' Administrative Council, an organization of and for the students of this University, may seem a very vague and distant object to most students.

The SAC of today was first germinated in 1901, when a Student Union was formed to handle the undergraduate activities and campus social life.

This Student Union soon gave way to the Students' Parliament, which in 1907 assumed certain duties of student government. The parliamentary method quickly proved ineffective, and in 1913 the SAC was formally created.

This early SAC was purely a male venture, with the men of each college electing their members. It was at this point that SAC took over the publication of The Varsity and Torontonensis.

The co-eds of 1916 were a brave group, and feeling the need for a similar organization, united in the Women Students' Administrative Council. Their main function was providing chaperons to the large groups of women who took the "Varsity Special" to the Queen's games. It was always hard to keep the sexes separate, in a few short years a Joint Executive was formed, absorbing powers from both Student Councils.

This triumvirate of powers became awkward, with such a division of powers. After attempting to function for a decade, a new constitution was drafted in 1930-1 doing away with the separate councils. This constitution, with amendments, has been the basis of SAC till this date.

Membership in the SAC, as set forth in the Constitution, consists of 26 elected members from all the faculties, colleges and departments, with full voting privileges. In addition there are eight ex-officio members: the Chairman, the Secretary-Treasurer and Associate Secretary, two faculty advisors, the Editor and another masthead member of The Varsity, and the Editor of Torontonensis. These members meet regularly during the year, at two-week intervals.

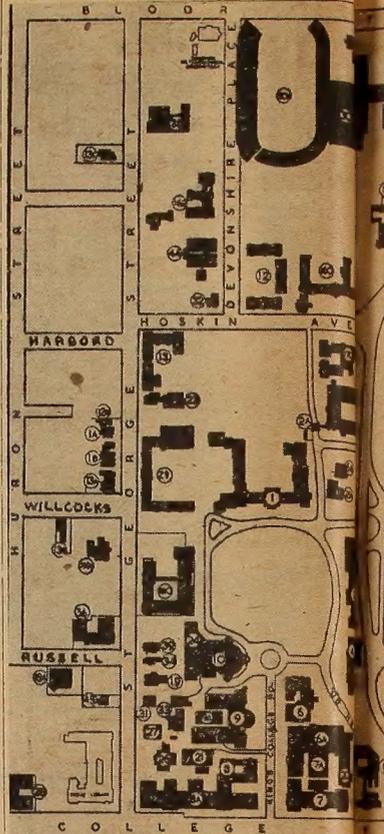

The purpose of the SAC, as set forth in the University of Toronto Act, 1947, is "to serve as a medium through which students can be represented to the Board of Governors". In addition to this very formal duty, SAC provides many practical services. In short, the SAC is responsible for any other activity, no matter how small, which cannot be delegated elsewhere. It is a very busy council.

"Above all," adds Miss Parkes, Associate Secretary of SAC, "the Council represents the viewpoint of the student body both to the University authorities and to the general public and takes the lead whenever matters arise requiring concerted action."

All Quiet On Southern Front

In contrast to last year's excitement, a group campus by Professor A. C. Davidson. of first year civil engineers are shown around the —VSP by Jack Ellis

Freshman's Eye

The place might as well be Mars for all the connection it has with ordinary civilization. I never saw so many weird people running around and making strange noises. They grabbed me with one hand and pushed me into long lines with the other. They either asked me for money and shoved bundles of paper at me, or demanded "are you interested in periology, pedantology, or just mythology?" And every time I went anywhere I had to fill in multi-coloured cards in triplicate, with all the vital statistics, including my grandmother's maiden name. (Shades of the Iron Curtain).

The people around that place must love games and amusements. To start the day off right, they played a game of musical chairs for an hour. Then they pushed me in one door of an office and out the other, throwing bunches of forms after me. Nothing daunted, I went and stood in another line. Several hours and two empty pens later, I knew that this was enough. I left.

Student Council Services

employment, housing, books

Three services of the Students' Administrative Council, the Employment Service, the Housing Service and the Book Exchange, are in full swing and operating at full capacity. The Housing Service has had to be temporarily moved to the Debates Room in Hart House as the line-up was too great in the SAC Building.

The Employment Service has been moved to the SAC Building after new office space was built this summer. The Employment office receives student applications for jobs and matches them with requests received from firms for part time and summer jobs.

The Book Exchange at 119 St. George, side door, opened today and already the crowds of students buying and selling texts promises a record year for sales. Students only are employed in the Exchange under the management of Henri LeSeuer (IV C&F).

The Housing Service is at its busiest now when lectures begin. Students, grad students and staff of the University can find all the available accommodation in Toronto listed. The SAC staff has worked all summer listing rooms and apartments. Churches and service clubs have cooperated and posters and chain stores as well as advertising in the papers have made a most complete listing. Anyone desiring accommodation may look in the files, find listings suiting their requirements, phone for an appointment, and inspect their prospective living quarters.

SAC Centre

Torontonensis

Torontonensis, the U. of T. yearbook, will be sold for the next few weeks at a special discount price of $4.00, announced the 'Nensis staff.

"We found that so many people neglected to order the Yearbook during the year, and then were disappointed when they couldn't get a copy," explained Co-Editor Dave Wood. "So this year we're using this special price for the first few weeks of school to get people interested."

His fellow Co-Editor Al Tough said that as a result of the special price of $4.00 and an intensive sales campaign directed at freshmen, that this year's 'nensis sales should top all recent records. He added that all those interested in ordering their Torontonensis early — and at the lower price — should drop in to the SAC office soon.

The Co-Editors also said that they were interested in interviewing prospective staff members for the yearbook. "Just drop into the office in the base of the SAC building," said Wood, who was also Editor of the '55 Torontonensis. "We'll be glad to see you."

How To Flunk

CUP FEATURE

1. Enter the course as late as possible. By changing your curriculum after school starts, you should be able to avoid classes until the second or third week.
2. Do not bother with a text book.
3. Put your social life ahead of everything else. Interesting conversation should be able to drown out the noise of the lecture.
4. Observe how seedy most professors look and treat them accordingly.
5. Make yourself comfortable when you study. If possible draw up an easy chair by a window.
6. Have a few friends handy during the study periods, so that you can chat when bored.
7. If you must study, try to lump it all together and get it over with. The most suitable time would be the last week of school.
8. Keep the study table interesting. Place photographs, magazines, goldfish bowls, games and other recreational devices all around you while studying.
9. Ignore dictionaries. You could never learn all the words in one anyway.

10. Never interrupt your reading by checking on what you have learned.
11. Avoid bothering with notebooks. If you plan to use one, so that you can draw pictures of airplanes during the lecture, try to follow the simple arrangement of keeping all the notes for a given day on the same sheet of paper.
12. Remind yourself frequently how dull the course is.
13. Review only the night before examinations, and confine your efforts to trying to guess what the teacher will ask.
14. Stay up all night before important exams. You can spend the first half of the evening discussing your determination to cram and the latter half drinking coffee.
15. Write your exams rapidly. Glance at the question and then put down your first impression.
16. Do not let academic work get mixed up with your daily life.
17. When in the lab work hurriedly. Do not waste time worrying about what is going on.
18. Remember that success in life is your main aim and never let extraneous matters such as grades interfere with this objective.

SUMMER MUSIC SUMMARY

A feature of the Royal Conservatory of Music's Summer School, even if not the most significant one, is the chance a wider public has to hear some great artists from within and without this city, performing under pleasant and informal conditions. This year the two top names on the Summer School slate were Mr. Alexander Schneider and Mr. Aksel Schlotz, both of whom did much to bind the School very closely, in the public mind, with the new Music Festival of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival Foundation. There is, of course, no formal connection between these two functions, but a strong sympathy of ideals, these being on the highest plane.

There were other connections between the Conservatory in Toronto and the Festival in Stratford. Dean Boyd Neel, who, with this second offspring of his genial tyranny, the Hart House Orchestra, has now established himself so firmly in the framework of this University that no further introduction is necessary, was the underpinning without which the Festival could not have achieved the proportions it did. The orchestra had been carefully bottled during the 1954-1955 season, on out-of-town visits, discreet recitals over the air, and two concerts, both full of hope, in the Great Hall. It was therefore rather startling to find it abruptly weaned on more than twenty appearances at Stratford in less than four weeks. This was truly a massive task for so young a group, and that they undertook it at all, and carried it bravely, even if sometimes a little unsteadily, must always be remembered to their credit, and to that of their distinguished leader.

The most important single production at the Festival was certainly Stravinski's 'The Soldier's Tale'. This work, whose former productions can best be described as 'scattered' has an intensity of purpose that makes a superb platform for M. Marcel Marceau's genius. But of far greater overall significance to the musical community of which the University's Conservatory forms the major part, was the opportunity for our own leading artists to appear alongside, and to stand up favourably to, some of the greatest genius of our time. This is another feature shared by Festival and Summer School alike, and one which will go a long way towards building the morale of musicians and audiences.

And not only to our performing talent does this apply, but to our composers no less. Works by three members of our own Faculty of Music — Professor John Weinzwieg, Dr. Oskar Morawetz, and Mr. Godfrey Ridout — were performed. These works, all for strings, took their place beside those of Benjamin, Honneger and Britten, to say nothing of Dr. Healey Willan.

Finally, I should like to draw the attention of the university to one of its most talented alumni of recent years. Mr. Elmer Iseler graduated from the Faculty of Music not long ago, and has since established himself in Toronto as an exceedingly successful choral director. He has, in a few short years, worked his high school chorus up to the standards of the C.B.C., and now stands securely in public esteem as the director of the new group which, set up as The Festival Chorus, will be making more public appearances through this season, and I hope, through many more to come.

— Michael Oliver.

STRATFORD SUMMERTIME

Before the third annual season of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival opened this summer, the general agreement, critics-wise, was that this summer was the one that would count—granting one successful season (they said) because of the fairy-tale fact of the Festival's coming-into-being, another because of the still-new wine of director Tyrone Guthrie's genius, it would be in the third season that Stratford would prove itself either a damp squib or a rocket to the moon.

With the third season over and more than 126,000 patrons satisfied, the Festival's position seems established, and the sky seems to be the limit after all. One company stemming from the Festival will soon be off on a tour of the midwestern and New England United States, with another heading for a New York run. Plans for a permanent theatre-structure to replace the tent, and for further expansion into music, art, and films, all indicate that Festival-founder Tom Patterson's view of Stratford as an embryo Edinburgh is completely justified.

For me, as for most of those who passed any judgment, the Festival stars again were designer Tanya Moiseiwitch and director Tyrone Guthrie, who combined to bring new colour and movement and a thought-provoking approach to a high-school standby and a Greek myth. "The Merchant of Venice" and a repeat of last season's "Oedipus Rex" were both full of Guthrie inventiveness. If at times the inventiveness tended to overshadow the action . . . well, that's Guthrie.

The biggest talking-point to come out of Stratford this summer was the problem of anti-Semitism in "The Merchant." The problem (if there really is one) was solved by portraying the entire Venetian smart set as a rather nasty bunch, with a couple of scorpions in among the butterflies. Frederick Valk's Shylock was at first a bubbly old gentleman with only a faint resentment of his treatment, to fit the Guthrie approach to the character, but the later vengeful father and degraded victim gave Stratford audiences some of the reasons for Mr. Valk's considerable reputation as an actor in Britain and on the Continent.

The whole thing was bigger, undoubtedly, and the increase in decibels and in the distance travelled by the pacing principals lost it the terrifying impersonality of last season. Douglas Campbell, taking over the title role from James Mason, made Oedipus more of a man and less of an almost overwhelming archetype.

"Julius Caesar," staged by Miss Moiseiwitch and Michael Langham, the Festival's new artistic director, drew out a wide divergence of critical opinion—it all depended on when in the season the individual critic had seen the play. Slow to start during the season, it remained slow of start in each performance. But in the swirling mob-scenes, with Toronto's Donald Davis (as Mark Antony) rabble-rousing with a vengeance, Mr. Langham showed himself as a worthy successor to Dr. Guthrie.

The sensible, though none-too-frequent, attitude to the Festival was taken by caustic Claudia Cassidy of the Chicago Tribune, who called it "something new and highly promising, of incalculable future, but of enormous potential." "I wish," she added ruefully, "we had one like it." Toronto audiences will have a preview of both companies, with the Players presenting "Macbeth" at Eaton Auditorium Oct. 7, and "Tamburlaine" running at the Royal Alex for two weeks in early January. Here's hoping they're all back in time for next year's Festival.

To Our Readers:

Only about 50 or so of you will be interested in what we have to say, so if you are not in that group of 50, don't bother to read this.

We say 50 because we feel sure that there are 50 people at this University who want to write — for newspapers, radio, advertising, or just plain writing.

We would like to meet those 50 people.

We would like to meet them because we have something they want, and they have something we want.

A newspaper needs writers: writers need newspapers, because only by seeing their work in print can they realize how good — or how bad — their writing really is.

Many of literature's great names first broke into print in this newspaper. We have a long list of distinguished graduates.

The VARSITY boasts among its alumni a Prime Minister of Canada, a professor of anthropology at the University of Chicago, a program producer for the CBC, several war correspondents, and alumni are found on newspapers across the country.

For the potential journalist, The VARSITY offers training in every form of newspaper work: copy and telegraph editing; sports, news and feature writing; layout and headline writing.

And you'll have a lot of fun — you'll meet new and interesting people — you'll explore undiscovered corners of the University you never knew existed; in very short order you'll know the workings of the University inside out. We don't pretend that we can turn you into a William Allen White or Alexander Woolcott; But we know your writing will be improved. You will learn what to expect if you ever take up professional journalism.

We'll be looking for you 50 people.

The Editors.

The Varsity office is located in the basement of the SAC Bldg., immediately in front of Hart House.

Residence Life Recommended By Jeanneret

Residence life is conducive to conference and discussion — an important part of the university experience, Principal Jeanneret told University College Convocation last night.

"I could wish that every student in University College might enjoy the priceless advantages of residential life for at least one academic session," the Principal remarked.

Dr. Jeanneret mentioned the excellent scholastic record of the incoming class and quoted President Smith in saying that "university training must be reserved for those endowed with the capacity, and imbued with the desire, to succeed in it."

However Principal Jeanneret said that he himself was a little sceptical concerning the value of the President's proposed special aptitude tests.

What's news at Inco?

DUE TO THE CORROSION-RESISTING QUALITIES of nickel and nickel alloys they are widely used for vessels in which pharmaceuticals are prepared. Even small amounts of metallic compounds in a drug can impair its effectiveness.

INCO NICKEL HELPS SAVE LIVES BY PROTECTING THE PURITY OF DRUGS

AN AMERICAN RESEARCH SCIENTIST arrived in Bolivia where a typhus epidemic was raging. He had 200 grams—the total world's supply—of a new and untested drug called Chloromycetin.

There was just enough to treat 22 patients. All were seriously ill—some with signs of certain death.

A death certificate had already been made out for one typhus victim. Forty minutes after receiving Chloromycetin, he asked for a drink of water.

Within a few hours after the drug was administered, many of the 22 showed marked improvement. All recovered! Chloromycetin went into full production.

In the processing of Chloromycetin and other pharmaceuticals, corrosive conditions develop. Nickel or nickel alloys play an important part in protecting the product from contamination by metallic compounds.

Inco research and development teams in cooperation with industry have been in the forefront of the world's metallurgical developments since 1921. The knowledge and experience gained are among Inco's greatest assets. Inco research points the way to Inco's future!

"The Romance of Nickel", a 72-page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request. Bulk copies supplied Secondary School teachers.

Osgoode Hall Hikes Law Fees $100 A Year

Toronto, August: Osgoode Hall fees were jumped $100 a year by the Law Society of Upper Canada effective this fall. This increase brings the fees up to $320 a year, in addition to a $101 entrance fee.

The total cost of law education fees to a student with a BA is $1,061. This covers three years at Osgoode Hall. In addition he must take an extra year of "practical" training before being admitted to the bar.

For a graduate of Toronto's school of Law, the total cost of law fees would be $1,516. This would cover three years at the U of T Law School, one year at Osgoode and one year of "practical" training.

These costs are in addition to the cost of a three or four year arts course, required for admission to either Osgoode or the Law School.

New UC Women's Dean

DEAN INNIS

—Ashley and Crippen

No Changes Now New Dean States

No immediate changes are planned for Whitney Hall residents, says the new Dean, Mrs. Innis.

"Any changes are for the future," she said. "This year I just want to get acquainted."

Last spring Mrs. Innis was appointed Dean of the University College Women's Residence. She succeeded Miss Marion Ferguson, who retired last year.

"I have never done anything like this before," Mrs. Innis reported. "I lived in residence myself when I was an undergraduate, but that was some time ago," she added.

She was on the national board of the YWCA for 10 years.

"I have two daughters; that should count for something," she continued.

Mrs. Innis also has two sons, and all four children are graduates of University College.

Mrs. Innis is a graduate in English and Economics of the University of Chicago. She has written several books of economic history, including The Economic History of Canada. She wrote Unfold the Years—a history of the YWCA in Canada—Stand on a Rainbow, and several short stories in Canadian magazines.

Mrs. Innis said, she now is engaged in editing new editions of her husband's books. The late Professor Innis was Head of the Department of Political Economy at the University of Toronto. He was the author of many books on all fields of economics. Mrs. Innis also plans to edit a volume of his collected essays.

Whitney Hall, Mrs. Innis' new charge, has accommodation for about 165 students. Another 22 students are accommodated at 146 St. George. There are two houses for graduate students, Falconer Hall and the upstairs section of the Women's Union. Some students from Physical and Occupational Therapy, Physical and Health Education, and Pharmacy are also accommodated.

There is some room for the professional students, Mrs. Innis said, but their applications are considered only after all the college students are settled.

There is absolutely no segregation policy in the residence, Mrs. Innis said. However the graduating years are usually in one house, while the first and second years are mixed together.

"Just A Gag"

Police Fire On Students

Toronto, April: A group of student pranksters were fired upon by a Toronto police officer as they were "serenading" Annesley Hall with firecrackers one night during the spring exams.

A Police Constable was called to the residence by several frightened girls who reported someone was firing a gun near the residence.

The officer said he saw a "shiny object" in one of the student's hands, and thought it was a gun. He ordered the group to halt, and when they did not, he fired one shot.

Later, the "shiny object" turned out to be an old fire-hose nozzle through which students were shooting off firecrackers.

The constable managed to catch one of the students, who was hand-cuffed and taken to the police station. Later, the student was released.

An investigation was held into the incident by police authorities.

One of the students who took part in the incident said he thought it strange that a police officer would open fire on a group of pranksters.

"I couldn't believe he would actually shoot," he said, "We just did it for a gag."

President Goes To Dogs

Toronto, May: Dozing Dobermans, snoring Spaniels and nodding Newfoundlands were the bone of President Sidney Smith's address to the graduates at last May's Arts Convocation.

President Smith told the grads that they were to let sleeping

"if you never recognize any (of these dogs), you have not gained much from a university education," said Mr. Smith.

President Smith gave the students a final word of warning: "Don't rouse a dozen dozing Dobermans simultaneously."

The President will address the University at 3:45 p.m. today in Convocation Hall.

dogs lie if they were none of their business—"It is better not to be a buttnisky."

However, said the President, there are some dogs—such as injustice, bigotry, corruption, and threats to individual freedom—which should be awakened and driven away.

TV 'Leviathan'

Toronto, April: Television is a leviathan which can turn and swallow man, its creator, charged Dean Woodside of the Faculty of Arts. He was addressing a convention of the Ontario Educational Association.

Dean Woodside also said that to future historians the 20th century will be marked as the time people stopped reading and began looking exclusively at pictures. However, he said, television is probably the most potent cultural influence which has been developed by man's technological enterprise.

Negro College Closed

South Africa, May: South African authorities closed down Fort Hare, South Africa's last remaining college for non-whites.

CCF's Blast UofT Governors

Toronto, April: The University of Toronto is controlled by "a small unrepresentative group of businessmen who constitute the Board of Governors," charged the U of T CCF Club in a resolution submitted to the Ontario CCF convention.

The university socialists went on to say a CCF Government in Ontario, would reform the board to make it more representative of the community as a whole, and also amend the board's powers to make them administrative rather than policy setting.

U of T Refuses Moscow Invite

Toronto, May: The University of Toronto declined an invitation from the rector of the University of Moscow to send a representative to that institution's 200th anniversary celebration.

President Sidney Smith said he refused the invitation because of academic pressure and the invitation was received only one week before the jubilee opened.

McGill University in Montreal and the University of Ottawa also received invitations.

Architecture Bad

Toronto, June: Universities teach one kind of architecture while they build another, says Professor J. A. Russell of the University of Manitoba. Speaking before a symposium of the National Conference of Canadian Universities, he deplored the "stranglehold" which Georgian and Gothic have on university architecture.

University Not Democratic — Still Freedom Of Choice Pres. Smith Tells Students

President Sidney Smith says this university is not democratic in the commonly accepted sense of that term.

In his opening address to some 1,000 students in Convocation Hall Wednesday he said "There is student self-government and self-discipline to the utmost degree that is consistent with the interests of the whole academic community, but it is not absolute."

He asked them to give serious thought to the problems of democracy. The fundamental problem, he suggested, is the balance of freedom and responsibility, and this is embodied in the University.

The problem of liberty and responsibility is very much alive in the country today, said the President.

With Walter Lippman he deplored the fact that governments in recent years have tended to shirk their responsibilities, leaning too heavily on the whims of public opinion, pressure groups and lobbies. He called it "government by decibels".

There is really no danger, under our system, of the people losing their sovereignty", the President said.

But there is a confusion of the functions of voting and ruling. The government, once elected, "should be expected to make decisions without constant reference to the momentary whims of the voters," he said.

In the University there is a similar division of functions, he added.

The President mentioned recent incidents when the University authorities have stepped in without consultation of student opinion—the refusal to authorize the fee increase suggested by the SAC, and disciplinary action by the Caput.

To remedy the present political situation, said the President, "we need a better grasp of the underlying principles of democracy."

"We need to develop a climate of opinion in which political honesty is the best policy. We need a greater respect for those politicians who will sacrifice popularity to integrity."

Among the opportunities to study democracy the President mentioned were the campus political clubs. These, he said, have a great task, in which they have "signally failed", concerning themselves with specific issues and party cant rather than broad questions and objective criticism.

In describing the privileges which accompany the obligations of University life, the President mentioned the advantages of detachment and of association with the teaching staff, who can teach the academic ideals.

"If you spend your free time playing bridge", he told them, "you will become a good bridge player... If you spend it reading, discussing and thinking of things that matter you will become an educated person".

Standards Too Low Beer Teaching Sunk

The Hon. William Dunlop, Ontario's Minister of Education, has been a disappointment, says Dr. Marcus Long. The University College professor of philosophy was speaking to the annual meeting of the Canadian Teaching Federation, in Ottawa last August.

Standards for teachers have been set that "threaten to destroy the status of the teaching profession and flood schools with incompetent teachers" under Mr. Dunlop's regime, said Professor Long. "No other profession but teaching would have accepted without revolt the arbitrary action of a minister of education in lowering the barriers to admit to the profession persons who are not required to give evidence of intellectual competence," Dr. Long said.

At the same meeting Dr. Long said poor salaries are forcing some of his colleagues to take boarders and making public speeches to earn enough pocket money, "to buy the odd glass of beer."

Salary is obviously no enticement to becoming a university professor, he said. Nevertheless many graduates would rather teach in a university than in a high school because of the intellectual challenge.

"I'm afraid Dr. Long is going in for exaggeration again," was the comment of Dean Bissell, vice-president of the university.

Those statements are "not too surprising, coming from Marcus," said Registrar J. C. Evans.

Both men agreed that university professors are underpaid, up to a point, but said the University of Toronto is noted for paying higher salaries than any other university in the country.

Pull Wrap Off New JCR Soon $6700 Supplies Wastebaskets

On Monday morning the wraps are scheduled to come off the newly renovated Junior Common Room of University College, according to a UC Lit official. The Literary Society office and the Snack Bar will not be opened before Oct. 10.

Al Millard, chairman of the Renovation Committee, said yesterday the JCR was due to open last Sunday, but was held up by a delay in furniture delivery and in finishing the floor.

Renovation during the summer months was carried on under the direction of Al Millard.

Of $6,700 spent on the project, $1,000 came from the Women's Undergraduate Association on condition they have a share in its operation and upkeep.

Al Millard said: "We don't want the JCR to degenerate into its previous state after these repairs have been made."

University College donated $700 while $1,100 came from snack bar profits. The additional $3,900 is from the accumulated surplus of the UC Lit.

Millard said the changes included a second fire exit which will provide another entrance from the Women's Union.

The snack bar has been changed into a more efficient unit handling the same refreshments as last year, said Millard. Old furniture has been repaired and new furniture, waste baskets and ash trays purchased.

Only half the funds for renovation have been acquired so other repairs and improvements cannot be made at this time, Millard said.

Don't Hoard That Penny

Bet It With Benny

By One-Eyed Benny

So I am coming back for another year after all, and this is in spite of the straight A's which I am knocking off in the exams, and it is all because I am having a heart that is so soft it squishes.

It all happens in the little alley back of Conflagration Hall just as I am about to sidle inside to get my parchment scratch-sheet. Being as I am well-swaddled in a very svelte sheepskin burnoose, the Campus bulls take no note of me and I am almost away when a greasy claw clutches at the material yanks me into a shadowy corner and splutters into my ears. "Mr. Benny, sir, it is of the utmost importance that I have an audience with you."

Imagine my surprise when I am finding that it is none other than my old colleague and longtime customer, Slippery Syd, Syd, who is lately becoming a very prominent type guy in the education gimmick, is being a heavy plunger with my agents since he comes to Varsity and regularly drops a bundle betting against the Blues.

But now I see that he is being very agitated and I can see that something is on his mind. This he confesses pleading pitifully for my help.

"Mr. Benny, sir," he sobs, "would you leave an old buddy in the lurch?" I am about to ask how much I am getting for doing this ugly and disloyal deed when I realize that it is about himself that Syd is babbling and I turn on sympathy like the rot-gut at the Bookmakers' Annual Brawl.

Syd is being impressed with my condescension and he breaks down and weeps all over my Sheepskin, which is really died Mink, as I cannot afford live ones because not all my fish pay off last season.

"Nobody I trust like, Benny, old pal," he blubbers, "nobody. All other books are crooks and they insist on prompt payment, which does not please me at all. You, old pal, are different. You are a gent, which is something a guy likes."

Now this is very startling to me as I always believe that guys like dolls, but as he is a good fellow and, what's more, his bets are like money in my piggy-bank, I let him have it his way and he goes on.

It turns out that The Slip is fearful lest he goes to some green-horn Book who is not being very discreet and he, maybe, lets it out that such a man as Syd is inclining himself to the odd wager.

There is no way out, I decide in a flash that my place is Here. With great reluctance I am shedding my skin and Syd remarks, "Why, Benny, you were a wolf in sheepskin" to which I am about to make a witty answer when a campus bull spots and blows his whistle. It is only with luck and Syd's running interference that

Former Lawyer, Jane Banfield Given WUS Co-Secretary Post

The crowded third-floor, St. George Street office of the World University Service has a new occupant.

Jane Banfield, an accredited lawyer from British Columbia, has replaced Graeme Ferguson as executive co-secretary of W.U.S.

Tilting back her chair to survey an overloaded desk, Miss Banfield described her university history as a "race to stay off committees" and her recent trip to the Caribbean as "unbelievable." Conducting a three-man WUS-sponsored tour of the Caribbean was the most recent of her travelling exploits for the service organization.

In 1953 she was one of the Canadian delegates on the India seminar.

Despite racing to stay off committees at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver, she managed to pick up two degrees—a B.A. in history and political economy and an LL.B at the law school.

After a year of articling no immediate job prospects offered themselves although a legal existence in the Yukon was briefly considered.

Bethune Out For Season With Cracked Vertebrae Blues Battle Marauders

Bob Masterson's attempts to shape his players into a winning combination are thwarted each day. On Wednesday he was informed his key halfback, Rich Bethune had suffered a broken neck in Tuesday's game against the Aggies. Bethune, in a cast from the waist up to the neck, will likely be out for the rest of the year. Not only that, the Blues will also miss the services of halfback Ross Woods, and veteran tackle, 230 lb., Bill Beamish.

Al Riva out of action with a boil on his back for the last two weeks, has recovered fully and will be ready for tomorrow's game with McMaster at the Stadium. As a result of Bethune's departure Riva will take on a role as defensive back. Ed Skrzypek and Jack Rogers will occupy the other defensive back positions.

Bethune, a product of Hamilton Westdale Collegiate, destined to have a good season, played for the Blues last season. Previously he had been the individual standout at Williams College in Williamston, Massachusetts. There he scored five of his team's fifteen touchdowns, two on ninety yard runs. He was also the team's regular kicker.

His injury occurred in the opening quarter in the Aggie game and at first it was thought

I get away, which is why I do not graduate and never get a chance to proclaim my successes from the pulpit in Consecration Hall. But, from my little hideaway under the back Campus I am preparing my calls and sending them to you by way of those grubby little rats from The Varsity who are my hirelings for Campus operations.

This is the way it goes for this weekend, McGill, which cuts itself in on the White Slave racket with its imported quarterback, befuddles the UBC Tinderbirds 14-6 while those purple Horsies from Western are having it easy by 9 points over Kitchener-Waterloo. The Gilded Gaels from Queens take the Sarnias by a singleton in touchdowns, but the greatest news is with our own, dear, (bless their winning little hearts) Blues. They are playing those Mad Rotters from Mac and they are blistering them. The Mad Rotters never see the Blue goal and they get maybe a single. For the Blues, I stop my count after their first three touches, but they keep going. That's it fish—but remember, Bet with Benny and you'll never save a penny.

BY FLO MIDDLETON

Tennis anyone? Get your racquets out of moth balls girls, and why not try one of those courts that decorate this campus for size. After all you do not want to be caught out of condition when the interfaculty championships or for that matter when the intercollegiate championships roll around.

Activity over the nets is getting under way next week; so ladies, get those already worn out pens in use again to sign your name to the lists that have gone up in the colleges in the past few days. Each college and faculty will be entering a four-member team; consequently, individual college try outs will have to be played so that teams will be definite by next week end.

Four players will be sent into the interfaculty tournament by each college and these in turn will play off in order to select the four members who will represent Toronto. The Intercollegiate Tournament is scheduled for Oct. 21 and 22 here in our fair city at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club. One-eyed Benny having overlooked the female tennis situation is placing his pennies on the girls from St. Hilda's to sweep the interfaculty championships. With Mary Nunnis, one time Junior Ladies' Champion and Mary Lynn Boys, — Intercollegiate Singles Champion of two years ago, having returned after a year's retirement from active competition, the Saints look like sure bets; however, at this time of year, it is hardly fair to make too many positive forecasts as rumour has it that Victoria has some fresher championship material. Also POT has Anne Kilgour, a member of last year's Intercollegiate squad, to lead the Huts' girls on the courts. So far, no word has come from the tennis enthusiasts in Meds and Pharmacy as to whether they are going to enter in the interfaculty matches — let's not have it said, this year, that the female doctors and druggists can't even find four girls that can

SPORTSWRITERS

In order to maintain the fine tradition of sports reporting established on this page several years ago, it is necessary that a few more of you keen types out there trot down to the office and tender your services. There are openings in all fields of sports reporting and also in make-up and headline writing. Football writers are in demand right now, and there are dozens of other sports going on too. Those who get their experience this fall in the peculiar form of writing that appears in the Varsity will be able to branch out into hockey and basketball in the winter and into the minor sports also. Women's sports, too, are a big thing on the campus, and you females are welcome to try your hand at the game. We'll be receiving from 1:00 on today in the Varsity office.

Exhibition Football Finishes With Four Games Saturday

This weekend sees all four intercollegiate teams involved in exhibition games in the last big flourish before the league opens next week.

While our own Blues are hosts to the McMaster Marauders in Varsity Stadium, the McGill Redmen, with one exhibition win to their credit, will be in Vancouver for a renewal of their Paraplegic Bowl game with the UBC Thunderbirds. The Redmen reportedly looked unimpressive in dropping McMaster 24-0 last Friday, but it is not known what UBC has to offer. Ted Duncan, the boy who nearly sank the Blues last fall when they played the Birds, is seeing some quarterback duty with the B.C. Lions, but ace full-back Jim Boulding will again don the Blue and Gold.

Queen's Golden Gaels, who romped over Balmy Beach 33-4 last week, are likely to find more opposition when they meet the Sarnia Imperials in Oiltown tomorrow. The Gaels topped St. Lawrence University 12-7 in an exhibition game earlier this week, but as yet their full potential is not known.

In London, Johnny Metras' Mustangs tangle with the Flying Dutchmen. With fast backs like Neil Desborough and Willie Casanova to carry the mail, Metras hopes to build another great Western team. Quoted as confident in his team's possibilities, Metras will have more of an eye for the opening league game against Varsity next week.

for kicking, but his departure will force Skrzypek to share the kicking chores with Dick Risk.

Earl Ford still out with an injury will be replaced by Pete Copland who will be switching from centre to right guard. Gene Chorostecki out with a bad leg, will be replaced by Harry Hall at end. Walt Bulchak, out for most of the training period with a strained leg muscle, will be ready, most likely starting at left half.

The McMaster team brings with them a good passer in quarterback Russ Jackson. His appearance will test the Blues' pass defence which appears to be weak too because of Bethune's departure. Game time is 2:00 p.m.

The University of Toronto Athletic Association held its annual tennis meeting yesterday afternoon in Hart House's Intramural Office. Representatives of Dons, Skule, St. Mike's and other faculties attended with Barry Smith of Skule in the chair. The meeting was not as well attended as was expected, and representatives not present yesterday are advised to contact the intramural office immediately.

A particularly promising season awaits those versatile tennis aspirants who engage in this year's interfaculty tennis tournament which will be held at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club commencing September 28 and running for a week to ten days. The graduation of Ken Lawson from Vic

BY JOHN WILSON

For the past seven football seasons our great Canadian game has been under the steadily increasing influence of American-bred talent, to say nothing of a set of rules peculiar to that republic to the south. We can establish the fall of 1947 as the last big year for Canadian-born backfielders, and it's about the backfield that we're going to talk because in general that's where the greatest emphasis has been laid.

The season of 1947 saw the Argonauts wrest the Grey Cup from the clutching hands of the Winnipeg Blue Bombers, under the capable direction of quarterback Fred Doty, and backed by the kicking of Joe Krol. The following year Doty, along with Argo halfback Billy Myers, aided the Blues in winning their first title since the war. It was that same season that the exodus from the south began in earnest, and one of the first to appear was Bob Masterson, as assistant to Varsity Head Coach Bobby Coulter. Since then, the Canadian quarterback has been a rarity.

That's why it was a bit of a thrill to see Don Getty, Western's all-star field-general, step in to the shoes of Edmonton ace Jackie Parker, and lead the unbeaten Eskus to a 26-9 victory over the second place Saskatchewan Roughriders. Of course there have been others who have held that second-string job; Geoff Cram served a term with Winnipeg after a big season at McGill, and Varsity's Bill Stevenson warms the bench in the stamped town while Don Klosterman calls the signals. Few have been given the chance to shine that Getty got, none have proved their ability with such dispatch.

The Edmonton brass must be fairly well chortling over their good fortune in acquiring the eastern star. Up until last Saturday night Getty's potential was only a paper record, but when Parker came down with the flu the London kid got the nod from Frank Ivy. Saturday's Regina Leader-Post proclaimed the news of Parker's illness in bold headlines, subtly indicating how valuable Edmonton's legacy from Mississippi State is. They were right too; only the week before in Vancouver Parker, suffering from the first effects of the flu, had personally been responsible for the Eskus turning back a determined bunch of B.C. Lions 18-13.

Not only is Parker a great football player and therefore a hard man to replace, but running a ball club from the split-T is no easy matter either, and it takes a quarterback with real football ability. Down here in the east we've seen Getty pass from the tailback slot in Western's Diamond T, he nearly upset the apple-cart in the final in London last year. But big-league ball is a different story. Nevertheless, he tossed three touchdown passes against the Roughies, and then, to make the personal triumph a little more convincing, stayed on the ground to defeat the Blue Bombers on Monday night. Unable to pass because of the wet weather, Getty directed the Edmonton attack with precision, and the Eskus racked up their eighth WIFU win, 14-8.

After almost a decade of big-name American quarterbacks we're glad to see a Canadian run the show so well. In fact, all over Canada the trend to Canadian backs is more noticeable this season, so perhaps we can forget about running interference and what we'll do on the third of those four downs for a few years yet.

Blue News . . . the rugged Blues open the season against the Canucks at 2:30 on the back campus tomorrow afternoon . . . student ticket sale for Blue home games is on today. Tickets may be obtained at the south end of Varsity Arena starting at 10:00 a.m. upon presentation of an ATL card and $1.50 . . . second-year men will be happy to learn that you need only one year of athletic credits before you graduate. and Robin Logie of Trinity, both of last year's Senior Intercollegiate team, has left the tennis squad with some key spots to fill.

Members of this year's Intermediate and Senior Intercollegiate teams will be chosen from amongst the best tournament players and, of course, from among last year's hold-overs Barry Smith of Skule, Ron Arnold of Meds and Bill Brown of Vic. In addition, Harold Brown of the Intermediates will be trying out. Unfortunately, Dave Alexander and Don Cummings, both of Skule, of last year's Intermediates, will not compete due to marks.

The Senior team will consist of five, the Intermediate of three. Toronto will be host in this year's Intercollegiate tournament which will be held October 12-14.

clusive. The Intermediate will play their tourney in London on the same days.

The Senior Intercollegiate Tennis tournament, held last year at McGill University, found itself rained out in the final day of competition. The University of Montreal, however, had previously established supremacy, having won eighteen matches in the first two days.

The Intermediate Intercollegiate tournament was to have been held at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club, but it became the victim of a storm and was cancelled for the year. The University of Toronto won this tournament in 1953 and, consequently has retained the championship until this year's meet.

we're conservative

President Smith, in his opening address, raised one of the most perplexing problems confronting the modern liberal democratic state—the difference between the theory that the public should govern itself through freely elected representatives, and the practice that the public is too disinterested, ill-informed, and lacking in technical competence to be able to intelligently make up its mind on any but a few issues.

We would agree with the President that the problem is an important one, and worthy of discussion. But we cannot agree with his solution.

The President seems to call for greater courage and independence on the part of politicians in their words and actions. But many men in public life seem to possess adequate amounts of these qualities now—no one has ever accused a Cabinet Minister such as the Right Honourable C. D. Howe of unnecessary kow-towing to public opinion.

And will the President inform us of some objective method by which a voter can determine whether a politician is valiantly and courageously serving the public interest, or merely being selfish and pig-headed? Unless the President can advance such a method, and persuade the voters of this nation of its usefulness, his advice to politicians to be more independent seems a trifle impractical.

Public opinion, being the averaging of many minds, lacks the personal brilliance and technical proficiency that one individual possesses. But public opinion, though slower, is less erratic, and, being impersonal, is more likely to be convinced of past errors. We hesitate to think what would have happened had certain of the more belligerent of U.S. politicians taken the President's advice about acting independently.

And the President's remark that we are in no danger of losing our liberties must be interpreted as a temporary slip of an otherwise keen mind. Therefore, we must reject the suggestion that men in public life should be allowed more freedom of action, although accepting the premise that there is a need for such men to openly debate and discuss the vital issues of the day.

Call us reactionary, call us old-fashioned, even call us conservative—we still prefer democracy on and off campus.

a fine distinction

We must give our president due credit for facing up to some of the problems that beset a university community today. "Your freedoms are immense", he said, and "You may question anything and everything". He will perhaps allow us, then, to question some of his frank opinions and to follow his recommendation to risk popularity in order to retain integrity.

The president has just said the university is governed by a distinction of functions in several governing bodies. The administration headed by himself is in charge, for example, of the prescription of courses.

In this division of labour and of responsibility we wonder more and more just what falls to the lot of the Students' Administrative Council.

President Smith suggested that their domain was that of student activities. Yet twice successively the Students' Council was denied the right to raise a fee paid by students to students for the use of students in running student services and functions. The reasons given for the Board of Governor's veto were: (1) the inability of the students to pay the raise in fees that they had asked for, (a reason given for the first time in the President's speech Wednesday); (2) the academic undesirability of the increase in student activities that this money would make possible.

President Smith states that the students of The University of Toronto do not have "absolute self-government". This is a wonderful understatement.

The Students' council cannot determine its own financing, appoint its own paid officers, or be consulted in the disciplining of any student even in an advisory capacity. The athletic associations that look after student athletic functions are influenced by student opinion only to the extent of one voice on their committees, and after a year of SAC efforts, the Caput-Student liaison committee has now three student members. The other three student voices on this committee of eleven are, in fact, not even student-appointed.

Our president bids us take responsibility upon our "in statu pupillari" shoulders. But there can be no development of a sense of responsibility without some position or power involving a free choice and use of judgement. German and French students have capably handled the disciplinary measures for student misdemeanors to their credit for some time.

If we were allowed such a responsibility, President Smith might find that we would not treat it lightly.

We may have an "immense freedom", but it is a freedom whose limits are arbitrarily defined. The same man who once said "He who pays the piper, calls the tune", should have some idea of the meaning of freedom.

Now Its Debatable!

The Democratic Fallacy

President Smith, in his convocation address, yesterday, referred extensively to Walter Lippmann, an American writer, and his book "The Public Philosophy". The President criticized the campus political clubs for not examining "broad questions such as those raised by Walter Lippmann".

The Varsity herewith presents a few brief quotations from another of Lippmann's books, "Public Opinion", so that students will now be able to debate these broad questions.

"The democratic fallacy has been its preoccupation with the origin of government, rather than its processes and results... men do not desire self-government for its own sake. They desire it for the results."

"(Using my new idea of government) the criteria which you then apply to the government are whether it is producing a certain minimum of health, of decent housing, of material necessities, of education, of freedoms, of pleasures, of beauty—not whether at the sacrifice of all these things it vibrates to the self-centered opinions that happen to be floating around in men's minds".

"It is not possible to assume that a world can be governed by universal opinions of the whole population."

A L'ombre des Batiments

The following poem is reprinted from the first issue of the QUARTIER LATIN, the student paper of the French-speaking University of Montreal. The University of Montreal is an affiliate of Laval University.

Vous avez quitte la campagne
Pour venir chercher une compagne
Et un peu pour etudier.
C'est a l'ombre de ce beau batiment que vous vivrez contents de savoir que dans peu de temps
Vous en sortirez encore vivants.

Mais sachez qu'en attendant
On vous epie scrupuleusement.
Car notre bon gouvernement
N'aime pas les garnements
Qui font de la Politique
Surtout s'ils ne sont pas de la meme clique...
Souvenez-vous en...

Nos autorites religieuses
Veulent que seules les ames pieuses
Aient le droit de dire bien haut
Ce qui se passe sous leur chapeau.
Et si vous etes anticlerical
Ne soyez pas surpris si une balle
Tiree par une mitrailleuse ecclesiastique
Vous fait office de chaise electrique.
Car vous etes condamnes
A mourir pleins de peches
Si vous osez parler
Hors du service commande
Vous etes lies par les sacrements...
Souvenez-vous en...

Vous avez choisi une profession
Pour faire beaucoup de pognon
Mais si vous ne l'aimez pas
S'il vous plait, n'en parlez pas.
Car les conseils de facultes

Peuvent vous expulser
Si vous osez contredire
Leur quatre volontes
Et attendez-vous au pire
Si quand meme vous parlez...
Vous etes encore des enfants...
Souvenez-vous en...

Si par hasard une censure
Aussi rigoureuse que sure
Vous empechait de vous exprimer
C'est a vous-meme qu'il faut vous en prendre Car qui ici vous a jamais force a penser.
Sachez que l'on pense pour vous
Et que pour eviter les coups
Vaut mieux laisser parler les autres.
Sachez que l'Universite
Est un lieu de probite
Ou on defend les institutions
Meme contre la raison.

Sachez donc vous taire.
Quand vous voudriez parler.
Vous passerez ainsi votre temps a vous amuser
Au lieu de "japper" dans l'air.
Amusez-vous comme des fous
Sans vous occuper de rien
Et vous verrez, c'est gentil comme tout,
Que Rien, s'occupe de vous...

Ici, tout ce qu'on vous demande,
C'est de payer, autant que possible comptant.
Alors on vous laissera tranquille
Souvenez-vous en...

One Man Show

The Editor,

When we consider, sometimes, the greatness of this University, the higher echelons of academic proficiency and intellectual accomplishment which are represented by such numbers on the campus, and the surplus of sheer brains and intelligence which must hang by now like a vapor in every lecture room, we are awed and impressed. We are also impressed with the progressive steps which this noble institution is taking in all directions.

You say that it is perhaps a little difficult to take steps in all directions, especially at once? Well, that just goes to show you what higher learning will do. Why the latest thing is that the S.A.C. belongs to just one student. You say you've never heard of the guy? Well, we haven't either, but just look on the front of your A.T.L. card.

There it is... Student's Administrative Council. Yep, just goes to show what a higher education'll do fer people.

P.S. We're heading for the hills tomorrow.

University Truth

The Editor,

You can't learn the truth at University. University is an expensive and socially accepted meal ticket.

University is a form of Ivory Tower, albeit a better form than most.

University now is an anomaly. A paradox. Segmentation of the unity of existence has rendered university meaningless.

We are producing segmentally and hence dangerously, educated people. A. N. Whitehead expresses the idea and I plagiarize from him.

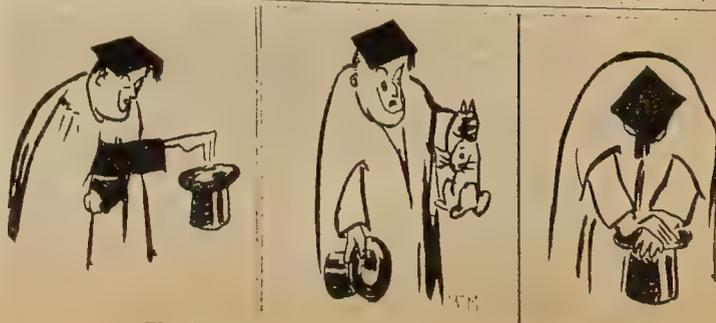

University is orienting masses toward those goals which the true intellectuals abhor; mass acceptance and universal conformity.

Sit in on a lecture sometime — you who are entering university, and see the truth fed to you and you will copy it in your notes, later to spew it back, often distorted on the fallacy called "Examination".

To the editor of The Varsity I would say bosh, (in lieu of less printable language); don't kid these newcomers.

Tell them straight what a university degree is: A damn fine meal ticket.

Jeremy Brown, II UBC.

The President Discovers the Student Character

Crest Crowd Gets What They Want

Times have changed for Frederick Valk, star of this summer's Stratford Shakespearean Festival. Audiences at the Crest's current opening production, Sidney Howard's They Knew What They Wanted, see him make a first grand entrance resplendent in brown derby, mauve suit, green shirt, and dashing yellow tie. A far cry from the Elizabethan opulence of his Shylock, but he shines in this first role of his in a modern play on the North American continent.

As Tony, a pudgy Italian-born California wine-grower who has wooed and won a mail-order bride, Mr. Valk makes the play his own. Immense and almost incoherent, he radiates unworlily warm-heartedness. At times, in fact, I felt that using his magnificent capabilities in this particular play (Pulitzer prize or no Pulitzer prize) was like using a battle-axe to slice the morning toast.

The play, with its principal character one of those endearing old fussbudgets that the 1930s seemed to be able to produce at will, showed signs of its time, including a fortuitous car accident and long, long passages of explanation and background. But after a wheezy start, the production worked into a convincing description of three people who knew what they wanted, coming to realize that they haven't got what they wanted in exactly the way they expected.

Janet Reid, as a little Frisco waitress coming to the farm to marry Tony, sight unseen, was a little disappointing. Her air of determined gentility would have had more point if it came from a blowzier type than this frightened little girl trapped by her need for security.

Lured by a proposal, a report of the farm income, and a photograph of a good-looker in his late 20's, Amy arrives to find an avuncular old gentleman who has just broken both legs. Naturally, she's disappointed, but decides to go through with it. Her growing love for Tony and her contrition for a first-night indiscretion are conveyed in a bloodless fashion that leaves us not knowing much more of Amy, and half convinced that there's nothing worth knowing.

The apex of an unusual triangle is hired-hand Joe, a rolling stone that just gathered his first boss. Bruno Gerussi plays the role with a convincing self-centred masculinity, later colored with the bewilderment of a man who has spent his life fleeing from entanglements finally finding himself entangled in the lives of two simple people.

Joe, whose photograph was sent to Amy by the bashful suitor as one of himself, is too brashly fond of the old man to have any affair with the young wife—after the impact of her apparent situation has worn off, and she has seen that she really couldn't do any better than Tony. With a twist dramatically effective but psychologically implausible, the author avoids any suggestion of a love affair after that first night. Unfortunately for Amy, one night's was enough to keep the plot boiling.

Valk has the reputation in England and on the Continent of being a very great actor, and in the last act we could see why. Honest-to-goodness goodness was supplanted momentarily by an explosive animal rage at his wife's confessed infidelity, and then by an all-pervading forgiveness. This while on crutches (sure-fire for sympathy) and in an Italian-American accent spoken by a Czechoslovakian-born actor.

A couple of smaller roles—James Edmond as Father McPee, and Grant Reddick as the doctor —turned out excellently after poor and very different starts. The parish priest was at first too much of a "character," with a tendency to sound like a Canadian's idea of a leprechaun, while the doctor at first was just a nobody. Both developed with the play, with their bumbling and their bumptiousness (respectively) becoming integrated into their all-over mental makeup, and both were fairly likeable.

Says Joe as he slouches off to look for grape-fields new, leaving a reconciled couple, "We ain't none of us got no real kicks." Neither has this reviewer—the Crest's opening play's strong emotional appeal lends it power out of all proportion to its theme; and anyway, Frederick Valk could make a hit out of a dramatized version of Three Blind Mice.

Dave Dunsmuir.

Shylock meets the press

Frederick Valk, Czechoslovakian-born star of this summer's Stratford Shakespearean Festival, talks, while the Varsity's itinerant AM&D editor listens. Mr. Valk, whose Shylock in Tyrone Guthrie's production of The Merchant of Venice proved the biggest critical talking-point of the Stratford season, plays the lead role this week and next in the Crest Theatre's season-opening offer, Sidney Howard's "They Knew What They Wanted".

Marceau Magnificent

You must go and see Marceau at the Crest. I wish you could, but after his performance in Stravinsky's A Soldier's Tale at Stratford he was at the Crest for just one week—September 12 to 17. He is now in New York for two weeks—you could catch him there. He'll be in Montreal for three weeks—try there. But, if you don't catch him during his North American tour, you'll have to go to Japan. He'll be there in December.

Marceau is very like one of his characters—BIP. Fire, wine, and gold—all very elusive substances. Out of the air he peoples a bare stage with characters that you and I have met many times. What is more, all the peoples of the world understand him: he's a travelling one-man UN. Genius or god are the only words that adequately do him justice.

He sums up the whole of life, for every man, in his style-pantomime Youth, Maturity, Old Age and Death. He starts hunched-up near the floor, in a foetal position, gradually grows taller, with his solution in every fibre of his body, reaches maturity, slightly sad, slightly bowed, but glad to be alive, and he gradually shrinks up into himself as he becomes aware of the approach of death. He shields his eyes from her gaze—or perhaps he is face to face with God—and he is now very small. His head lolls on one side. Death.

No. He's not always sad. The stage is full of people, funny people, in the Public Garden. Marceau steps down from the plint on which he's been a statue—and becomes a schoolboy. He turns round and there are two lovers. He sits down—on nothing—and becomes an old, gossipy woman, knitting. And so on.

All the emotions anyone ever felt can be expressed by Marceau, without a word. As Jean Cocteau, the French playwright, said of him; 'Marceau passes through the wall of languages.'

Varsity Awards

Six Varsity staff writers received awards at the paper's annual banquet last March.

Two types of awards are made: the Anita Freedman award, established in 1948 in memory of a former Varsity reporter who died in 1947; and The Varsity Pin given for consistent contribution to the paper.

Moishe Reiter, a former Sports Editor and movie reviewer, received the Anita Freedman award an $80 cheque—for his work during two years.

Pins were awarded to Clyde Batten, editor; Mike Pengelly, News Editor; Mary Alice Hunter, Features Editor; John Wilson, Sports Editor and Germaine Clinton, a member of the Art, Music and Drama staff.

Jazz At The Philharmonic

The usual whistling, shouting, capacity audience greeted the annual visit of Norman Granz' Jazz at The Philharmonic troupe to Massey Hall on Wednesday night. The musicians this year were Dizzy Gillespie and Roy Eldridge on trumpet, Lester Young, Illinois Jacquet, and Flip Phillips on tenor saxophone, Oscar Peterson, piano, Herb Ellis, guitar, Ray Brown, bass, and Buddy Rich, drums. After intermission the spotlight turned to the Gene Krupa Quartet with Gene on drums, Bobby Scott, piano, Eddie Shu, tenor sax and trumpet, and Whitey Mitchell, bass. The evening closed with the best of all jazz vocalists, Ella Fitzgerald, accompanied by Don Abney.

The first half of the program consisted of three jam sessions. The tune at the beginning of each was played as fast as possible so as to get to the more important business of the solos. From any musical point of view these were pretty bad, containing for the most part no attempt at expression of feeling through music or even beauty of melodic line. Nor were they devoted to displays of virtuosity. They were, as will surprise no one who has heard Granz' concerts before, largely intended to generate a brand of simple rhythmic excitement by using repeated phrases of two or three notes backed up by loud, heavy drumming. Granz has directed his musicians to play in this fashion because, in over ten years of concert promotion, he has found that this is the surest way to fill the house.

To the audience this type of playing is what the initials JATP stand for and this is what they pay to hear. The intent on both sides then is not what would normally be called musical. The audience comes to hear a loud and heavily rhythmic sound not a musical expression of thought or feeling, and the players collige

However, the musicians whom Granz employs are almost without exception the best on their respective instruments so that the concert was by no means wholly bad. Dizzy Gillespie did a fine job on the ballad, My Old Flame. Buddy Rich provided a great show of virtuosity in his drum solo, outclassing Krupa in terms of technique although the latter is a much more masterful showman. The Oscar Peterson Trio featured Oscar's imaginative solos and that powerfully swinging beat which is the backbone of jazz. And finally there was the ever delightful singing of Ella Fitzgerald with her amazing precision of timing and pitch, and her imaginative interpretations of even the most banal of songs. Perhaps in a different setting she would have picked better songs.

COTC Good Year New Major Predicts

New Resident Staff Officer with the University of Toronto Contingent of the Canadian Officers' Training Corps is Major Douglas H. Gunter, who replaces Major W. R. Chamberlain.
Born in Saint John, New Brunswick, Major Gunter's initial military training was with the COTC at the University of New Brunswick.
 On graduation from UNEB in 1942, he was with an artillery regiment in Belgium, Holland and Germany.
Following World War II, his duties as a professional soldier took Major Gunter to such far-flung points as Fort Churchill on the Hudson Bay, where he took part in artillery trials under arctic conditions, and Puerto Rico in the Caribbean, where he participated in manoeuvres with the U.S. Marines.
 He has also held staff appointments in Kure, Japan and Korea.
Major Gunter is married and has one son. His wife is no stranger to the campus, holding an MA degree in physiology from the University of Toronto.

 Major Gunter says he is delighted by the support and co-operation shown by members of the university faculties and staff, and is looking forward to an excellent year for the COTC.
 The Major attributes the increasing number of applications to "the increasing awareness among students of the professional and financial advantages of COTC training."
Of the training program, the Major says "It is probably the most worthwhile way a student can spend a portion of his spare time".

Fire!

Just Keeping In Practice

Fire trucks, emergency cars and police roared up Hoskin Avenue screaming to a stop outside Wycliffe College.

It was a false alarm. A failure in Wycliffe's warning system caused the incident. Students in the building were unaware of the alarm because the siren did not sound.

Mr. J. Thompson of Vic said, "There was a bell ringing. I thought it was an alarm clock."

Mr. E. Price of the Fire Department commented:

"It was some local failure in the Fire Alarm system."

The system, reportedly installed by the Canadian Automatic Fire Protection Company, is maintained by them. This was the second Observer, Mr. H. C. Quinn, had failure in a month. Wycliffe Fire nothing to say about the incident.

Two Grads Given Hart House Jobs New Chaplain, Undergrad Secretary

Two graduates of this University have returned to posts of leadership in Hart House. Rev. James Cunningham is the new Hart House Chaplain, and John Becker is the new Undergraduate Secretary.

"Students are individual people, spiritual and moral, as well as physical, and should educate themselves in that light", said Rev. Cunningham.

He said his efforts will be directed towards meeting as many students as possible to help them come to the understanding that all truth and knowledge come from God, not from technical books.

A graduate of University and Wycliffe Colleges, he obtained his BA in Theology from Oxford University in 1954. Last year he was assistant curate at St. Paul's Church, Toronto.

Rev. Cunningham succeeds Rev. John Rowe, Chaplain for the last two years, who has gone to Huron College, London, Ont., as Professor of Church History.

Ten minute Chapel services are being conducted twice daily in Hart House at 10.15 and 5.05. This Sunday Rev. W. R. Coleman of Huron College will be guest speaker in the first of a proposed series of All-University Church Services in the Great Hall of Hart House.

John Becker, a graduate last year in Engineering and Business has succeeded Garth McDowell as Undergraduate Secretary. Mr. McDowell has gone to the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon as director of the new Memorial Union. Mr. Becker last year was secretary of the House Committee.

Law School Growing And Crowded Too

The University Law School is suffering from 'growing pains'.

A record enrollment of sixty-two in first year has overtaxed Baldwin House—home of the Law School. This increase brings the total enrollment to about 125. The building can accommodate 75.

A school official said that as a result of the overcrowding, second year classes cannot as yet be held. It is not known when they will start.

J. C. Evans, University Registrar, says he sympathizes, but dis-claims all responsibility. So does the Buildings Superintendent's Office.

The problem is the responsibility of the Law School itself and the Board of Governors, Mr. Evans said.

Bill Corcoran, (II Law), the Law Club's second vice-president, thinks classes will probably commence on Monday either in the Wallberg Building or the School.

"In a field as important as Law, it is deplorable that the University cannot finance a better school," he said.

Students May Graduate Without P.T. Instruction

Students here will no longer have to worry about missing their year because they failed Physical Education. Instead, those who fail P.T. will have to worry about scraping up a special new fee of $50 to compensate for the lack of P.T. credits.

Some details of this disclosure, made several days ago by Simcoe Hall, were given last night by University officials.

The announcement regarding the new P.T. regulations also divulged that:

Compulsory P.T. for male students here will apply only for one year instead of two as previously. Co-eds will take the P.T. course for one year, as formerly.

M. G. Griffiths, Assistant Physical Education director said that as of this year, P.T. is no longer considered "an academic subject."

He said that a student would not be prevented from graduating because of an inaptness at physical training.

However, he pointed out, students in their first year must register for instruction in Physical Education. They are required, he said, to accumulate a total of 33 credits for attendance — the same as required for laboratory classes.

A student who fails to accumulate the credits must pay a $50 fee, "to compensate for the inconvenience he has caused the University," J. C. Evans, University Registrar explained.

Mr. Evans said that a new body had been set up to take care of matters relating to the Physical Education program. It works directly under the University Board of Governors.

It was also explained that a student who fails to accumulate the required number of first-year P.T. credits and pays his $50-fee in a subsequent year must also repeat the work leading to the prescribed credits.

However, one University official intimated that a student who year by year failed P.T. and paid his $50 fee each time, could graduate in his final year.

Mr. Griffiths said that that slash from two years to one for male students will enable the University to provide more room for individual instruction.

Students in higher years, Mr. Griffiths said, will have the same opportunities for participation in intra-mural sports without being penalized by compulsory classes in overcrowded rooms.

Whitney Hall Gift Of Vicious Feline Sneers At Skule

A dead black cat, a gift of "The Whitney Hall Toughs" was found late last night suspended from a lamppost in front of the Engineering Building.

Attached to the cat, which was swinging from the porch light of the main entrance to the building, was this note:

"Here's some real blood, you lemon livers, Compliments of the Whitney Hall Toughs."

Although Whitney Hall is the girl's residence of University College, the anonymous tipster who reported to The Varsity office was male.

One observer described the cat as "sinister, with beady eyes and sharp fangs."

Fearful Frosh Face Sophs

By JOHN GRANT

The dragon of University Initiation is losing its teeth, according to a series of reports on initiations from all over the campus.

However, the type, extent, and fearfulness of initiations vary a great deal from college to college and also from sex to sex.

Here is a rundown of initiations at the Arts Colleges:

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

Says Harry Malcolmson, Social Director for the Literary and Athletic Society, "U.C. believes too strongly in individualism to persecute the freshman. However, we do sponsor luncheons and dances which culminate in a Soph-Frosh banquet Friday night."

VICTORIA

Continuing the practice of for-

HeWentHereToo

Rome, August: Italian police arrested Giuseppe de Plata, 41, on a charge of "usurpation of false titles."

They said he had assumed the titles of doctor of jurisprudence, professor of foreign languages, disabled war veteran, and honorary doctor of literature and the English language of the National College of Toronto.

De Plata had studied at a university, but had only passed 2 out of the 20 prescribed exams.

mer years, the Sophs at Vic will play hosts to their juniors this Monday afternoon at Caledon Hills farm of Hart House. A programme of Constructive Initiation is planned, with, it is rumoured, whitewash and stables figuring prominently in the occasion. A square dance will end the day.

Tuesday is Be-Good-To-Sophs-Day. Frosh will be ordered to light cigarettes, open doors, or sing the Toronto or Victoria songs. They may be required by the occasional Soph to quote a passage from Shakespeare to indicate their intellectual preparedness. Frosh who fail to comply must appear in Mock Trial Friday.

The girls are featured Wednesday in a Soph-Frosh broomball game at 3:00 o'clock. Visitors are welcome but are cautioned to stand well back. The debate will be held on the Little Vic field.

The Bob Apple Battle, traditional melee of first and second year men begins on Little Vic field at 3 P.M. Friday. The Sophs, defending a greased pole, are the only freshman year ever to have won the battle. The attack of the 5T9 is awaited with anticipation.

The Initiations end with a Candlelight service for the girls at 7:30 in Alumni Hall and a Soph-Frosh party later in the evening, when a Mock Trial will constitute part of the proceedings.

TRINITY

The Sophomore year, under Bob Langlois, 2nd year rep., is in charge here. During the Formal Initiations, which took place Friday night, the frosh were assembled in the Buttery, Trinity's restaurant, and marched to Strachan Hall. Under floodlights they "Worms", as the freshmen are called, must wear black ties with orange stripes, the girls' placards were then interrogated. The and halos.

ST. MICHAELS'

Phil Wood, president of the St. Michaels' SAC, stated that the Initiations would probably be held Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, although no definite plans have been aired as yet.

In previous years St. Michaels' frosh have worn blooms and ties of two shades of blue and have been formed into a Snake Dance that winds about the Upper campus. Look for this Tuesday night. A Mock Trial is usually held at the end of Initiation, after which a dance unites the frosh and sophs at last.

Question Period After

"The only way to freedom is enslavement to Christ," said Rev. Dr. W. Coleman to his Hart House congregation yesterday.

Dr. Coleman, principal of Huron College, was guest speaker at the first of a series of all-University Church Services being held in the Great Hall. In the series each denomination on the campus shall hold a service in Hart House.

His address was "Light, Truth and Freedom" in our day. He branded these times as the "age of smog . . . which corrodes life, spiritual darkness where secularist and religionist were engulfed."

Speaking about the age of knowledge, massed information, and philosophies which fell short of man's spiritual needs for truth, Dr. Coleman said; "Christ has set Himself as the undebatable truth . . . and the bond between God and man."

He spoke of freedom, today's freedom which suggests "a valley of beautiful images, freedom from faith, responsibility and care." He called that freedom the "greatest capitulation of true freedom."

Dr. Coleman began his speech by a reference to The Varsity — saying it was a "rare experience" for him to read it.

"The only way to true freedom was enslavement to Christ by prayer, devotion, and discipline in our daily lives. I am the light of the world. He that fol-loweth Me shall not walk in darkness. If you keep my word, then are you my disciples indeed, and you shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," Dr. Coleman said.

The service was led by Rev. Dr. J. S. Glen, principal of Knox College.

The scripture reading was to be read by Pres. Sidney Smith, who was absent due to illness. The vice-president, C. T. Bissel, read the lesson instead.

Victoria Frosh To Paint, Mend At U of T Farm

About 180 Victoria freshmen will set out Monday for Caledon Hills Farm. Work is their object, but a little fun will be included.

The Caledon trip is part of the second annual "constructive initiation" organized by the Vic sophomores.

"They will be painting, fixing roofs, cleaning stables, plastering, and just generally cleaning up," said Cam Tolton (II Vic), 5T8 executive.

The students will leave Vic at 1 p.m. by bus.

What Is Our Generation?

By TONY KING, Former Editor, The Queen's Journal:

Several weeks ago Ann Francis delivered a series of radio talks describing the generation which grew up during the 1920's. Ever since I have been wondering just what we are going to think of ourselves twenty years from now. Will this decade be known to posterity as the fighting fifties or the phlegmatic fifties?

The college students of the twenties became famous for their rejection of the moral and social values cherished by their Victorian parents. Five terrible years of war had destroyed nineteenth century notions of inevitable progress and young people seemed no longer able to look forward to the bright future prophesied by Darwin's more naive imitators.

Scott Fitzgerald, T. S. Eliot and Ernest Hemingway expressed the twenties' dilemma in a new literary genre, but the vast majority of young men and women could do little more than escape into a tumultuous world of coon coats, jazz and souped-up automobiles. They left their staid parents far behind in a wake of bathtub gin. Of course the flappers and their beaux liked to think that they were far more wicked than they really were. Nevertheless they did regard the world in a radically different light from their parents.

We too are members of a post-war generation, and yet we and our parents are not separated by totally divergent outlooks. To be sure there is the usual talk about "this younger generation" but on the whole the younger generation draws its inspiration from the old.

We seem to share our parents' materialism and the premium they place on security and respectability. Our world is only a degree more baffling than theirs was: depression and world war have been followed by the imminent possibility of total annihilation. Our generation did not invent existentialism and the other gloomy philosophies, but pessimism is certainly one of our characteristics.

Faced with almost insoluble problems, we seem to be doing what German youth did after World War II: retreating into our shells and asking nothing more than a good job, a good home and to be left alone. The current back-to-the-twenties tendencies in music, dancing and clothing probably indicate that we are trying to escape into an era which seems at this distance to have been carefree.

The generation of the twenties was, however, something which we are not. It was hell-bent on having a good time and was willing to work hard at the arts of pleasure. But in contrast the college students of today seem serious, even solemn. The gay, mad adventurers of the twenties are almost extinct and have been succeeded by a breed of rather dull young people trying to mature as quickly as possible.

Even the more vigorous minds in the universities seem to curdle once they have left the college environment. As the traditional avenues to success are narrowed and formalized, our generation becomes ever more willing to adhere to the socially accepted patterns of behaviour and even of thought. "Conformity" is the cliché of the year, but its implications for society are vital. Our society has grown and thrived on innovation and revolution; can it survive with a population becoming increasingly wary of the agitator, the inquirer, the individualist?

The tendency for today's college students to value security ahead of opportunity and the job with the high salary ahead of the one with a future has been widely deplored and, no doubt, greatly overemphasized. Many of us still want to find our places in the sun, but on the whole the ideal of the average student is a reasonable, uninspired one. We tend to marry young; we may age young. We want a comfortable home, a fairly high standard of living, a loving spouse, a steady job and a Mercury, or at least a Chev. And above all—we don't want to be disturbed. We are beginning to show distressing signs of rejecting the radical thinker not for what he says but for what he is.

Mac Fumbles Expensive As Varsity Wins 31-5 In Last Exhibition Game

By JOHN WILSON

Fumbles spelt disaster for the McMaster Marauders and victory for the Varsity Blues Saturday afternoon in Varsity Stadium as the Blues closed their exhibition schedule posting a 31-5 shellacking against the Hamilton school. Unable to stem the powerful Varsity running attack, the Marauders struck for one lonely touchdown, midway in the third frame when Russ Jackson caught Doug Piteau behind the Blue territory defense.

The Blues scored five touchdowns in the wide-open first half, then settled for a single early in the third quarter when Jack Rome conceded a rouge on Ed Skrzypek's punt.

Rome, running out of the left half slot in the McMaster backfield, was easily the best player on the field for the Marauders both offensively and defensively. Along with sophomore quarterback Russ Jackson, the ex-Humberside star played nearly sixty minutes, and was author of the game's longest run, a 35 yard touchdown gallop that was called back early in the first quarter.

McMaster fumbled three times on Blue kickoffs, and only recovered once. Santo Martini and Pete Copland fell on the other two for the Blues, and both plays resulted in Varsity touchdowns. The other Mac fumble came late in the second quarter with the Blues already leading 24-0. Don Brown kicked deep in the Marauder end zone where Jack Cavers muffed the catch and big Al Watt grabbed the loose ball for the touchdown. Peter Maik kicked the extra point on this one and on the other four to run his string to eleven converts without a miss in two games.

Wingback Gerry Lansky was the key man in two Blue touchdowns, blocking a McMaster punt at the Varsity 54 to set up one, and throwing a beautiful block at the Mac five yard line enabling Wally Bulchak to skirt the left end early in the first period. Harry Wilson threw twenty yards to Don Smith in the end zone for the opening tally after Lansky had recovered the ball a few plays earlier.

Ed Skrzypek, engaged in a personal duel with Wilson for the starting quarterback's job, picked up a touchdown at the start of the second frame, bootlegging the ball over from ten yards out after faking to Cheeseman. Skrzypek threw twelve passes and completed eight for a gain of 132 yards while Wilson threw eight strikes, completing five for 68 yards.

Cheeseman, as well as setting up a touchdown by Al Riva with a fifteen yard plunge midway in the second frame, was the best ground-gainer for the Blues with a 10.4 average in five tries.

Skrzypek's major followed a long pass to former McMaster end Burt Kellock, who picked Skrzypek's throw out of the air at the Marauder eleven. Kellock was on the receiving end of four passes and made them all good for a total gain of 59 yards. A vicious tackler on defence, Kellock may well turn into one of Masterson's best ends, giving the harassed coach three of the best in the league, and maybe a fourth if Gene Choroestecki's injury heals for the Western game.

The Blues picked up nineteen first downs on the ground, outrushing the Macmen 299 yards to 73. With a total gain of 200 yards passing, the Blue offense was good for nearly 500 yards to less than 150 for McMaster. Costly clipping penalties, however, contributed to a total of 120 yards measured off against the Blues for rule infractions.

The Blue line, outweighing the Marauders, played well on defence, but the backfield still looked green against McMaster's pass attack. Jackson threw fifteen and completed six, one to Piteau midway in the third quarter for the lone Mac touchdown. Piteau was a good fifteen yards behind the Blue tertiary defence and galloped another fifteen for the score.

With the Blues in possession of the ball at least seventy per cent of the time, there was little chance for Bob Masterson to look at his defensive set-up. However with a week left to iron out the kinks in preparation for the opening tilt with the Western Mustangs, the coach should be able to build a pattern strong enough to halt Casanova and Company.

Ladies' Softball Practising Now

Softball lists having been up now for nigh on a week and all the smart types on campus having signed their names, practices for the women's softball will be in full swing as the league games will start sometime next week.

As yet it's anyone's guess who will walk off with the Varsity world series, but as usual it can be expected that it will be a close struggle between the four teams that compose the first division, namely Victoria, U.C., St. Hilda's and PHE; however, it would not be the first time if St. Mike's or the girls from POT slugged their way right into the championship. At any rate, no matter who comes out on top, 1955 promises to be a fabulous year, so come on ladies, let's make it the best ever.

Golden Gaels Could Cop Yates

With a week left before their opening Intercollegiate game with the McGill Redmen, the Queen's Golden Gaels, who came within a last second touchdown of a berth in last year's final, are just about ready to win their first senior championship since the fall of 1937.

Coch Frank Tindall will depend upon three stalwarts on his halfline, Ron Stewart, who holds the all-time scoring record at the Kingston school, Bill Surphis, a graduate of Toronto's East York Collegiate, and Gary Schneider, the place-kicking artist who scored 35 points in last season's play.

Little Jocko Thompson will again handle the punting chores for the Gaels. Thompson was the best kicker in the league last fall, averaging nearly fifty yards from the line of scrimmage for the season. Other veterans like Jim Cruikshank, Frank Gemard, Bob Bevan, Karl Quinn, and Ron Lane are also battling for backfield assignments with Tindall's club.

The Gaels will be aided by the return of fullback Al Koeman, now under a three-game suspension as a result of a fracas in the semi-final with Western last fall. Koeman was a driving force for the Tricolor in the 1954 campaign, and will be back in time for the last half of the league schedule.

Tindall is still, however, faced with a quarterback problem. The graduation of last year's pivotmen Norm Dysoe and Wally Mellor has left a hole in the backfield but Tindall may convert halfback Jim Cruikshank to handle the job.

Captain Gary Lewis, Jack Abraham, and ends Lou Bruce and Joy McMahon will contribute to one of the heaviest Gael lines in history. With such a promising outlook, Frank Tindall and his charges are counting on breaking the 16-year Western-Toronto hold on the Yates Cup.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

Another baseball season is ending and hockeydom's training period is beginning. Marciano floors another contender. Sonshine puts two more men on waivers. And here on the Varsity campus, isolated from such worldly events, is Bob Masterson, whose prime interest is retention of the football crown.

Gone through graduation are halfbacks Steve Oneschuk, Bob Pinkney, John Sopinka, and Bill Horton; quarterback Bill Stevenson; fullback Bob Kimoff; and linemen Bruce Day, Alex Macklin, Baz Mackie, Frank Palermo, John Prendergast, and Jack Strapp. Gone through injury is Rich Bethume; gone also are Bill Beamish and Ross Woods.

A consideration of these facts might lead Blue supporters to despair. The armchair quarterback sees that Masterson is faced with a difficult task — that of moulding the veterans and the replacements into a workable unit within the next week. To the uninitiated observer this might appear an insurmountable task. But all is not lost!

There is a brighter side to the picture. Pointed up in the Blues' two exhibition games have been the efficient blocking by ends Fred Smale and Don Smith, the excellent defensive play of tackle Walt Radzick, Santo Martini, Al Watt and centre John Bodrug; the running and pass-catching of Gerry Lansky; and the running of Jack Rogers and Phil Muntz, all of which have given the Blues a high scoring punch.

Regarding the capability of the defensive backfielders there is still some doubt. Ed Skrzypek, Al Riva, Phil Muntz, and Jack Rogers are all untested in league competition. Still, there is one factor in their favour. They have in Masterson a coach who is always seeking perfection, who is willing to give them all of his attention in the attainment of a perfect defensive set-up.

Western, Queens Bow To ORFU

Toronto's Varsity Blues were the only Intercollegiate football team able to post a win in action on the last exhibition weekend before the official league opening this Saturday.

After building up a half-time 6-0 lead, the Sarnia Imperials ran roughshod over the Queen's Golden Gaels in the second thirty minutes to score a convincing 27-0 victory in the Oil-town Saturday.

Jacobs and Kosak picked up two touchdowns each with Capeletti converting all four and kicking a field goal in the third quarter to give the Imps their win. The loss was the only one of the exhibition schedule for the Tricolor. They had earlier defeated St. Lawrence University and Balm Beach.

In London, Johnny Metras' Mustangs succumbed to the Kitchener-Waterloo Flying Dutchmen in their last exhibition start 19-1. Ted Roman's single accounted for the Western scoring while Graham, Wilson, and Learn scored touchdowns for the Dutchies. Gilchrist booted a field goal early in the fourth quarter and Graham added one convert for the K-W total.

Western had earlier lost a close one to the Sarnia Imperials, so have gone winless in two exhibition starts. However, coach Metras is still confident while preparing for the invasion of the Varsity Blues this weekend for the league opener.

Out in Vancouver, in a renewal of their annual Paraplegic Bowl, McGill University and the University of British Columbia battled to a 0-0 draw. McGill defeated McMaster 24-0 last week, but have yet to test a strong team before opening the season against Queen's in Kingston this Saturday.

Opening Tussle Blue Ruggerites Defeat Canucks

Varsity's Rugger Blues opened their season last Saturday by defeating the Canucks 14-3. Due to graduations, contagious jaundice and what is politely called academic difficulties, under half of last year's team was in Saturday's line-up. However, all the empty positions were more than adequately filled by imports (paid) from England, Wales, South Africa and by Canadians who have seen the light.

This year's Blues, in making back the Gargantuan Canucks the average weight of whose scrum is 220 lbs. per man, showed themselves to be potentially the best team that Varsity has ever had, though much improvement is still necessary before they come to their big test against McGill.

Point scorers for Varsity were Andy Barnes, Bill Thomas and Dave Fayle, This Saturday, October 1st, on the back campus; Varsity I vs Nomads II at 2:30 and Varsity II vs Nomads III at 4:30.

SATURDAY'S RESULTS
Varsity	31	McMaster 5
Sarnia	27	Queens 0
Kitchener	19	Western 1
McGill	0	U.B.C. 0 2 0.

"mother ever dear..."

As we sat with the few in the football stadium Saturday afternoon, we were driven to thoughts on student loyalty and "campus spirit".

The first is often associated with the upholding of recognized authority, and the second with snake dances and loud huzzahs.

In any circumstances, loyalty is a rather difficult concept to define. If it exists, it can have a very great moving force. If it doesn't, it cannot be engendered by any coerced copulation. And if much discussed, loyalty easily becomes stale, like long-opened beer.

In the circumstances of the University of Toronto, it is ever more difficult than usual to define loyalty. One could be loyal to one's clubs, one's fraternity, one's faculty, one's course, one's religion, one's college government, the student's council, the caput, the Board of Governors, or the President. These loyalties can easily conflict.

At the end of the Toronto yell, engineers often shout "Yea Skule" and the rest of the campus responds to their shout with a raspberry. It is not too hard to understand how a student might come to consider his Faculty or College as synonymous with the University of Toronto.

It is sometimes doubtful whether a loyalty to the University of Toronto does exist, or can exist.

We would like to think it can. We don't think of loyalty in terms of "Old Toronto" or the number of people who know the names of all the "Blues" or the number of people who go away on week-ends to "support the team". These are only symbols.

Nor do we think of loyalty in terms of supporting every action of Sidney Smith, or the Faculty or the SAC. Loyal students of the university have in the past actively opposed all of these on occasion.

We do not think of loyalty in terms of active participation in the making of the university. We do think of loyalty in terms of involving one's self about the whole of university, of knowing students from other faculties, of openly criticising The Varsity, the SAC, and the University authorities whenever they betray their loyalty.

Above all, we think of loyalty in terms of individual action based on carefully considered ideals whether "moral" or "immoral" in the usual sense of the words.

on wrappings

What's in a sweater?

Maybe not much sometimes, but when it comes to cheerleaders there can be a great deal.

What's in a blazer?

Maybe not much sometimes, but who can tell, anyway.

We would hesitate to be dogmatic on the aesthetic merits of either, but we do know that the cheerleaders of practically any other college football team can get a better cheer from our stands than our own.

The responsibility for this lies with the Blue and White Society. With an unworthy lack of imagination they can pull out the same skirts and blazers year after year. And year after year, the Toronto males look longingly towards the Queen's, Western and McGill cheerleaders.

We know our cheerleaders have the potential. Their light is being hidden under blazers.

WUS Japan Tour

Poor, But Not Primitive

BY GAY SELLERS

Gay Sellers is a fourth year student at University College and President of the Women's Undergraduate Association. She was one of three University of Toronto students chosen to go to the WUS summer seminar in Japan.

From July 1 to August 20, twenty-seven Canadian university students and faculty travelled throughout Japan under the auspices of the World University Service of Canada, who, in conjunction with WUS of Japan, sponsored this eighth International Seminar.

From August 1 to August 20 groups of Canadian, American, Japanese and Asiatic students travelling together for five weeks conducted a seminar on "The Responsibilities of Higher Education".

This was no tourist jaunt. Travelling by crowded, stuffy third-class carriage, living wherever possible in the Japanese manner, whether it be in a Japanese university, a village monastery or an inn, working as labourers in Tokyo's slums, or talking to trade union leaders in one hour and ultra-conservative management the next, we were students in search of a world within, but beyond our own. We studied, we observed, we drew conclusions—and then we scrapped them all to start over again.

We found that Japan could in no wise be considered a semi-primitive or under-developed country. Her unchallenged position in pre-war years as the leader of Asia is once more taken for granted by the Japanese intelligentsia, and is subtly underlined by her rapid recovery as the chief industrial power of the Orient. Although both India and Red China offer very real alternatives to any such dominance, moral or material, a sense of "manifest destiny," at the present wholly peaceful and non-territorial, has injected the only note of optimism into current Japanese thinking. The same resiliency which has characterized post-war reconstruction in Japan (a reconstruction which has almost completely obliterated the physical scars of war) is to be seen in Japanese civilization. Her literacy rate — 99% despite the most unpromising circumstances—ranks her far beyond Canada and the U.S.; her art displays a restraint which is classic in its perfection of force. Japan is by no means primitive. But, Japan is very definitely poor.

Poverty in material resources is evident everywhere. A population of 90 million must be sustained on an area roughly equivalent to the British Isles, and of which only 15% is arable.

Japanese agriculture is among the most intensive known in the world; yet one man produces enough to feed 1.6 persons. Japan's major cities are heavily industrialized and the solution would seem to be "export or die," yet the largest markets of the world are closed to her. Her largest single market of China has been placed out of reach by the dictates of American foreign policy; —the Western nations, professing peace and still humbling Japan for past aggression, have erected prohibitive tariff barriers which effectively exclude all but the shoddiest of Japanese manufacturers. Only southeast Asia still faithfully imports from Japan, a market which must decrease as southeast Asia industrializes on her own.

Bitterness at the practical application of peace, and disillusionment with Western business ethics are slowly increasing, dispelling the "brave new world" spirit which characterizes post-war, independent Japan. Japan's limited resources are revealed in her starkly-simple architecture which has made a virtue of necessity, and in the ubiquitous rice paddies which grow to the very doors of the largest factories; lawns are for the very rich and the imperial.

The poverty of Japan is not a destitution but rather a bare subsistence; her greatest single problem is an already over-large population pressing relentlessly upon inadequate resources.

We found the much-debated differences in thinking between East and West to be very real indeed. In particular we found it hard to accept the ever-present strain of fatalism which dominates Japanese thought, and which leads to endless speculation about the nature of a given problem but seemingly feels no compulsion at all to search for a solution. We came expecting to find a people still nursing the humiliation and resentment of defeat; we were brought up short to find instead a nation abjectly sincere in its apologies, harbouring little resentment and quite fanatically peaceful.

We found Japanese students socially fiercely idealistic, at times wholly illogical and quite emotional in their thinking; overworked, confronted with frustration at every turn, ambitious and highly intelligent, they are faced with an unequal struggle to make a living in a country where over-employment and hard labour are the only solutions to starvation.

For them learning for learning's sake is an unknown luxury, for in this highly-competitive country the end is the only justification for the means.

To us, reared in a hopelessly democratic society, it seems unreasonable that a democratic electorate should distrust, even fear, a government it had recently put into office. Yet Japan is sent into daily alarms by rumours that the no-war clause in her 1945 constitution will be removed or modified, and a formidable standing army entrusted to her new Conservative government.

Desperately afraid that the militarism of the late '30s will return and with it the old authoritarianism, yet wanting trade with Red China and disliking the American air and military bases which leave a last lingering shadow on independence, Japan worries and frets about the government which is ostensibly her servant and responsible to her. The old ties of obedience to authority are still strong.

Finally we saw our own country in a new light in getting away from it. We were overtaken by a strong feeling of North American solidarity which was as surprising as it was unexpected, and yet it was the Japanese students, who had met Americans but never Canadians before, and who had the greatest difficulty in seeing the need for any distinction, who concluded that there were indeed basic differences between the American and the Canadian, differences particularly in thinking, which proclaimed us British North-Americans. To the members from Quebec it was at best a dubious compliment.

Dr. Tomoo Odaka Continues Tour Of North America's Governments

Dr. Tomoo Odaka, Dean of The University of Tokyo Law School, left Toronto tonight for Vancouver.

Dr. Odaka, now special adviser to the Japanese foreign office, is on an inspection tour of Japanese government offices in the U.S. and Canada.

He arrived in Toronto Friday night from Ottawa, and will continue his tour from Vancouver to offices in the U.S.

Dr. Odaka was co-director of the summer seminar in Japan this year sponsored by World University Service, an international student exchange and relief organization. Dr. Odaka expressed a very high opinion of the value of the Seminar.

The seminar was attended by 21 Canadian university students including Gay Seilers (IV) U.C.

Dr. Odaka is in North America on a tour of Japanese legations, as the Japanese government believes that a person outside the civil service could provide valuable outside observations on Japanese foreign relations.

Before coming to North America, Dr. Odaka had attended the world Congress on Cultural Freedom in Milan, Italy. Delegations from all over the world attended this conference.

Student Bible

The Student Directory — "The Student Bible" to thousands of U of T students — is now available at the SAC office. The Handbook, priced at 25c, contains the only complete list of the campus' hundreds of societies and clubs. The executive of each club is given, along with its scope.

Also in the book is a full-sized map of Toronto, and a diary of all major student activities during the coming school year. A telephone directory of all university buildings is included.

The Handbook is an SAC publication.

Modern History Club

The Modern History Club provides an opportunity for students to meet informally with members of the history faculty, said Brian Burnham, club president.

The club will hold its first meeting in room 105, Flavelle House, at 1:15 p.m., Tuesday, Sept. 27. All students are welcome.

A US Program For National Scholarships

BY ROBERT D. BROWN

A new nation-wide scholarship program has recently been established in the United States. Sparked by a $20,000,000 Ford Foundation grant, a huge National Merit Scholarship system will swing into operation next fall. Students from every one of the nation's 25,000 high schools will be eligible to compete for 350 scholarships, each of a value sufficient to enable the student to attend college without financial worries.

Here are the details of the program:

1. A total of over $21,000,000 has already been raised—mostly from a grant of $20,000,000 from the Ford Foundation (created at the bequest of Henry Ford, and which earlier this year gave $50,000,000 to raise US university professors' salaries). Other contributors are: The Sears - Roebuck Foundation ($600,000), the Carnegie Foundation ($500,000), and Time magazine ($30,000).

2. The money will be spent as follows:

$10,000,000 to be spent at the rate of $1,000,000 a year for a series of four year National Merit Scholarships.

$8,000,000 to be spent over the ten years to match hoped-for extra contributions from other corporations and individuals to the program.

$2,500,000 for administration.

3. How the scholarships are awarded:

Every fall, starting in 1955, secondary schools nominate candidates for the program. These students will first take a screening test, and then the most promising in each State take a supervised examination — a scholastic aptitude test.

Those who score the highest on these tests are then judged on the basis of test results, school records, biographical sketches, and other recommendations.

4. How the amount of each scholarship is determined:

Only after the winners have been selected will the size of the scholarship be determined on the basis of the winner's financial need. Each winner will receive an amount sufficient to enable him to attend university for four years free of financial worries—although he will be expected to augment the scholarship funds by working during the summer. There is no top limit to one award. Those who do not need financial help in order to attend university get a token award of $100.

5. Other conditions:

The winners may use the scholarship to attend any accredited university of their choice in the United States. Recognizing that student tuition fees cover only a small portion of total college costs, the funds administrators give an additional grant to the college concerned above the tuition fee.

Worth Trying ?

This program will fulfill a long-felt need on American campuses for a nation-wide student aid scheme. It should do much to stimulate the intellectual life of the whole nation, and ensure that education becomes the right of those who deserve it, rather than the sport of those who can pay for it.

Canada needs such a program even more than the United States. To put it bluntly, the need is desperate. It is criminal folly to waste this nation's most precious asset, the minds of her youth, because of a lack of a relatively small amount of money.

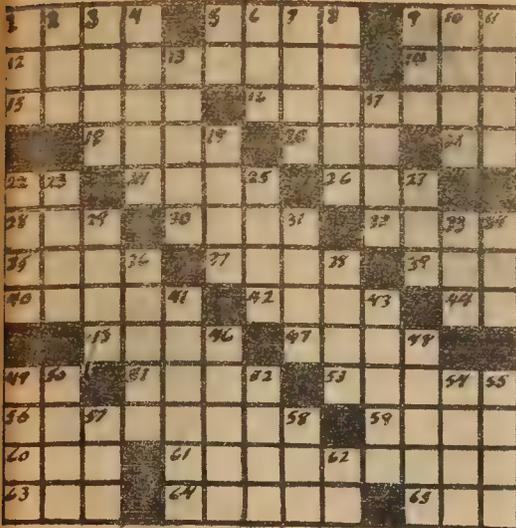

The most reasonable way to stop this waste would be the implementation of the Massey Report's recommendations for federally-financed National Scholarships.

Failing this—and the prospect for obtaining such a scholarship scheme now seems remote—some efforts might be made by NFCUS and other interested student organizations to see if a Canadian program could not be built up on the American model, financed by the private contributions of business and individuals.

It might be an idea worth trying.

Freshmen prefer "picture-magazines" as periodical literature, a poll at the University of Western Ontario proved. Life, MacLeans, Readers Digest, Saturday Evening Post and Time topped the list as freshmen literature.

New Precedent UC Undergrad Has 2 Editors

For the first time in its history the University College Undergrad will have two editors—Margaret Penman (III UC) and Orest Rudzik (III UC).

They are both in English Language and Literature, Miss Penman is also secretary of the Women's Undergraduate Association, a member of the Gargoyle staff and a debater. Mr. Rudzik is also on the Gargoyle staff.

Succeeding Les Lawrence, the literary magazine editors plan to produce two issues this year instead of one.

"We intend a more exciting and distinctive approach to the magazine," Mr. Rudzik said. "The first issue will necessarily be more in the traditional line but we hope the second will be a controlled but vigorous experiment."

Pointing to the past tradition of the magazine, Miss Penman said:

"We hope the magazine will regain some of the prestige it enjoyed during the post-war period when such notables as James Reaney, Colleen Thibeauaux and Robert Weaver were writing."

The Undergrad publishes short stories, poetry, essays and occasionally excerpts from plays and novels written by students.

poorly represented. Of the top 48 magazines, those read by three or more of the 461 students polled, only 12 are Canadian. Only one of the most popular top five magazines was a Canadian production.

The fact that so few Canadian publications are read by freshmen caused much concern. It was felt more should be done to familiarize the young people with more articles about their own country written by fellow Canadians. The poll was surprised and shocked to report that the Canadian Geographical Journal did not receive the necessary votes to permit its inclusion in the top 48 magazines, Canadian Aviation, Canadian Nature and Forest and Outdoors were others which were expected to appear in a list including rather popular publications.

Surprisingly the sixth most read magazine was the Atlantic Monthly. It may owe its popularity to the fact that it is recommended for purchase by the English department.

Students are also encouraged to subscribe to it at special student rates. Special student rates also promote Time and Life subscriptions.

The 461 freshmen in UWO's Library Science Course were asked, without warning, to name four periodicals excluding newspapers which he read frequently. The questionnaire was designed to show the reading habits of the student before the University had had much opportunity to change them.

Only a few of the periodicals which gained the most votes are found in the University libraries.

The ones heading the list are assumed to be found in the homes, public libraries, schools, clubs or common rooms frequented by students.

The poll also proved that 95.78% of the freshmen had a library in their home community.

Life, MacLeans, Readers Digest, and Saturday Evening Post headed the list which also included Canadian Homes and Gardens, Esquire, Look, and Seventeen.

Improve Your Reading and Studying Ability

IMPROVE CONCENTRATION, COMPREHENSION AND STUDY HABITS, WHILE READING 100% FASTER.

Probably eight out of ten students are poor readers — poor by comparison with the greater ability they can readily develop. This is why many of you find it extremely difficult to cover all the reading material you should or would like to read.

Recognizing that their problem was an under-developed reading ability many students have taken or are taking our Reading Improvement Course. This short course will improve reading skill by one hundred per cent. No one needs to stress the value of such improvement.

These students have told us that the cost of training is the main reason most of you have not done something about your reading problem. We understand your financial problem and have reduced our fee by $20.00 for students. Unfortunately we cannot reduce it further and still maintain the important principle of individual instruction. However, we can do two things.

1. We have instituted a new Student Payment Plan which will allow you until April 30th to complete payment.
2. Those taking the course may earn in spare time work with us, part, all or more than the cost of instruction.

Now, the only problem should be our limited training facilities. We will accept as many registrations as we can, but again because individual instruction is so important to reading improvement we can handle only a limited number. We suggest therefore, that, today or tomorrow, you take the five or ten minute walk to our office for further information and/or registration.

Dean Bans TV In Residence Its 'Oil & Water'

TV sets in the common rooms of the new UC Men's residence have been banned by Dean Bissell.

Dean Bissell said that he has always banned TV sets in the common rooms. TV sets have no place in a common room, according to Dr. Bissell, the Dean of Residence for UC men.

"You can't convert common rooms into TV viewing rooms. It's like mixing oil and water," said Dean Bissell.

Last year five of the six UC men's residences had TV sets. Four of them were rented by the students and one fellow brought his own.

There has been no student protest against the Dean's decision. Most students are neutral, said a resident who refused to allow his name to be quoted.

An attempt is being made to set up one room in the basement for a TV set to be used by the whole residence, according to some of the residents.

Earlier this year, Dean Woodside of the Faculty of Arts had characterized television as an "evil monster" which was capable of turning on man, its creator, and gobbling him up.

Dr. Billy Graham comes to the campus Thursday. But only a fraction of the University's student body will be able to squeeze into Convocation Hall to hear him.

The controversial American evangelist, who almost overnight shot into prominence as one of the most dynamic religious personalities of the century, will speak in Convocation Hall Thursday at 1 p.m., to an estimated 2,000 persons. The population of the University is over 11,000.

Graham has sensationally risen in two or three years from an obscure U.S. Bible preacher to almost global significance. Now he's been invited to visit Russia but he told newspaper reporters recently he hasn't made up his mind whether to go or not.

What will Dr. Graham talk about when he visits the campus here?

The evangelist told Varsity news reporter Joe Aziz that, "My talk will have to do with the social, political and economical problems of the world and their solutions as well as the problems of students and the answer the Bible has for them."

When asked whether his address would be pitched to a higher intellectual level especially for students Dr. Graham said it would be slightly different but would not include any secret device or artifice. "Some students know much about the Arts and Sciences and may be brilliant in these fields, but might have the religious intelligence of an illiterate," said Dr. Graham.

"This is a liberal college," he said, "you don't have to agree with what I say—I merely represent one side of the story." Dr. Graham said that he had come to offer an answer to the problems of life, not just to make us aware of them.

"I spoke to the largest audience that Duke University ever had," he said. "The editorial the next day in the University paper said, 'we might not agree with everything Billy Graham said, but he is the first man who has come here with an answer—all the other speakers have merely informed us of our problems,'" said Dr. Graham.

When asked about his previous work at other Universities he said, "I have just received an official invitation to speak at Princeton for a few days . . . and have spoken at the Universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow . . . Michigan, and Southern California, as well as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Oxford and Cambridge."

When asked if his talk was just for Protestants Dr. Graham said, "No! for all."

"It has been the speech schools on many campuses who have invited me to speak—apparently my diction is very good, although I have never had any training," he said.

It was upon the initiative of the Varsity Christian Fellowship followed by the Student Christian Movement, the Lutheran Student Association, and the Canterbury Club that Dr. Billy Graham was asked to speak at Convocation Hall.

Impressions . . .

Graham Confident

By Joe Aziz

I met Billy Graham.

In the pulpit Billy Graham appeared almost as a god. He spoke with authority — with a soul saturated in prayer. His whole being was geared and concentrated on bringing the people to whom he was speaking to an awareness of their sins and to a knowledge of Christ.

His motions were tense, jerking and dramatic — but underlying it all was a sincerity no man could doubt.

Speaking in the Coliseum here in Toronto Dr. Graham in soft but sincere tones later invited sinners to repentance. In a few moments he departed to speak to the throngs of converts who packed the counselling room — he never smiled, he remained extremely serious.

This was in great contrast to the Billy Graham I sat and talked with 20 minutes later in his private office. He greeted us warmly — not with gushing over-politeness; he was natural, confident and quiet spoken.

Dressed immaculately in a double-breasted blue suit with a blue tie to match, he did not give the impression of a dandy. The over-all effect was a clean-cut appearance.

Here was one of the greatest men of God of this century. This was readily discernable when viewing Dr. Graham in the pulpit and feeling his pointed statements "hit home" so often and with such accuracy.

But afterwards in the quiet of his office Dr. Billy Graham seemed merely like Mr. William Graham, a confident businessman without a worry in the world.

Graham 'Hour of Decision' Here

The voice of the "Hour of Decision" is coming to the campus. Billy Graham, the Bible-thumping Southern Baptist with the world-wide following, will speak in Convocation Hall 1 p.m. Thursday, but the retinue his radio and television programs feature will be missing.

Graham will be preceded only by an introduction by Dr. Graham Cotter, University College English professor. There will be no service and no hymn singing and no admission charge.

The University Christian Council, sponsoring the visit, say the meeting will be limited to students with Admit-to-lectures cards.

Doug Browne (IV UC), president of the Student Christian Movement—one of the co-members of the Christian Council—said last night attempts are being made to provide overflow capacity.

"Convocation Hall only seats about 2,000 and we would like to provide some method whereby people could at least hear him even if they can't see him."

Graham is in Toronto for a Greater

Toronto Evangelistic Crusade. So far more than 100,000 people have heard him and nearly 2,000 "decisions for Christ" have been registered in his meetings.

The athletically built evangelist with the explosive delivery told a reporter from The Varsity earlier this week:

Constructive Skulemen Initiate In Park Cleanup Philips Is 'Delirious'

Freshmen Engineers will be put to work next week cleaning up the city's parks as part of their initiation. This was announced last night by Tom Thompson, (III SPS) who has aided in making the arrangements for the Engineering Society.

"The City is delirious with joy at the prospect of getting some help in getting its parks in shape," said Thompson. "Mayor Philips is very impressed, and said that the city will give its full support to the scheme."

Thompson said that the cleanup program will take place next week. Each afternoon, Thompson said, freshmen from a different course will go out to Bickford Park (near Harbord and

The project was arranged by John Rumble, (III SPS) who is president of 5T7 and chairman of the Freshmen Reception Committee of the Engineering Society. Rumble went down yesterday afternoon to City Hall to see City officials about the project.

Rumble said that Parks Commissioner Bell and Streets Commissioner Bradley were very happy to hear of the Engineers' offer, and will be glad to provide material, supervision, and transport for the job.

This announcement by the Engineering Society adds Skule to the list of colleges and faculties that have discarded much of the traditional freshman "hazing" in order to carry on constructive projects.

Trinity also has switched to "Constructive Initiation" this year, while Vic continued with their program.

Last year the engineers donated their services to aid in the cleanup after Hurricane Hazel. However, this is the first year that initiation has been carried out on a "constructive" basis.

"It's a very good idea," said Dean E. R. McLaughlin of the School of Applied Science, when asked to comment on the Skule plan.

Constructive Initiations Prevail

Vic Freshies Pitch Hay At Caledon

"Tremendous!" This was how Tony Gray (II Trin) summed up the attitude of Trinity sophomores to their first constructive initiation, held Monday. Similar comments were voiced by second year Vic men.

At 1:30 on Monday afternoon three buses of freshmen rolled out from Victoria for Caledon Hills farm. From the time of their arrival until 'Chow' call at six o'clock the frosh, 180 strong (or possibly weak by the end of the day), and their accompanying sophs worked to clean up house, barns and brush. Freshies tried their hands at pitching hay, freshmen tackled roofing and plastering, while one of the biggest jobs accomplished was the planting of 2,000 trees.

The rest of the evening was spent in recreation such as eating hotdogs and square dancing. When the frosh arrived back at Victoria at 11 p.m. their verdict was fairly unanimous—that constructive initiations are not only more sensible but more fun.

At Trinity the story was much the same. Over a hundred members of the class of 5T9 split into two work crews. One group stayed on their home ground, moving stage scenery and swabbing walls and floors. The other group did their swabbing, and also some painting, at the Mission House on St. George St. Both agreed that this was "a sight better than the formal part of initiation."

These constructive initiations are a contrast to the more traditional forms of initiation still being carried on by other colleges and residences.

P&OT students were seen at 6:30 yesterday morning doing setting up exercises (possibly a new form of compulsory P.T.) in the quad behind Whitney Hall.

Other campus sights this week include skirts of most unfashionable lengths, odd shoes and socks, pink hair ribbons and assorted bloopers.

Vic residences have not yet adopted the constructive initiation favoured by the college. Charles St. residents are becoming accustomed to midnight serenades by pyjama-clad tenors, and the trees in front of Annesley Hall still bear traces of a recent initiation raid.

Varsity Rides Waves In Campus Program

At 7:30 tonight over radio station CJBC an all-college program, "On Campus", begins. The show will consist of records, with the emphasis on jazz, and college news submitted by colleges all over Ontario.

The program will be handled by Ted Shafer (II Vic) who has been working in radio since his high school days in Kitchener, where he started a school talent program in Grade 10. From there he proceeded to a variety of programs, culminating this summer in announcing with the CBC in Toronto.

He plans to make the program a common forum for Ontario University students.

The theme and aim of the program, he says, is "To tie together University students and to give insight into the University for others".

UC Gives Funds JCR Open Soon

Plans to open the University College Junior Common Room have been suspended for two weeks.

Allan Millard, (IV UC) chairman of the UC renovation committee, said yesterday that Monday's opening was cancelled when new furniture did not arrive.

Principal F.C.A. Jeanneret told the UC Literary Society the university has approved the spending of $3,000 on renovations.

Millard said it now will be possible to open the JCR completely refurbished, including chairs, settees and an improved snack bar.

A tentative date for the opening has been set for Oct. 17. Millard said the students at UC should remember they are indebted to the College for the use of the JCR.

"In the past we have not lived up to our responsibility to use and maintain it as civilized human beings.

"Now, we have, to all intents and purposes, a new room and another chance to prove that we appreciate all that the college has done for us.

"This will be our last chance to; we cannot afford to treat the matter lightly."

"A certain Freshman went from home to college and she fell among critics who said that she had no style, that her manners were awkward, and that she had an unattractive personality. Then they stripped her of her self-confidence, her enthusiasm and her courage, and departed, leaving her hurt, lonely, and half-dead.

"And when the Seniors saw it, they were amused, saying, 'What a good job the Sophomores are doing on that Freshman'; and they passed by on the other side.

"In like manner the Juniors also, when they saw it, smiled and said, 'Yea, verily, for she hath not the making of a good sorority girl'; and they passed by on the other side.

"But a certain special student, as she went about, came where the Freshman was, and when she saw the Freshman she was moved with compassion, and came to her and bound up her wounds, pouring in sympathy and understanding; and she took the Freshman to her room and set her on her feet again, and brought her into her own circle, and was a friend to her.

"Which of these, thinkest thou, proved a neighbour to her that fell among the critics? Go and do thou likewise!"—Charles W. Gilkey.

the college editor's plight

The Truth Of The Matter

This story is reprinted from the Queen's Journal, the student paper of Queen's University. It appeared in the Journal toward the end of the last scholastic year, and was written by the then Editor, Tony King. It tells the story of a campus Editor's sufferings.

So you want to be an editor... nobody happy... or you learn a lot about journalism... that unless you tell somebody their story is better than Hemingway... or Huxley... they won't write again... if the stuff is off-color and unprintable then we are prudish with bourgeois tastes... if we do print it... we're obscene and blasphemous... that people only consider their own desires... no one else's... that last year's paper is always better... that every other college's paper is always better... and every editor swears his paper will be better... but it isn't... because people are just the same... they never change... the clubs are always sure that the other clubs are getting more coverage... that this political party is getting more emphasis... that there isn't enough poetry on the feature page... that engineers are ignored... that mensmen are forgotten... that artists are slandered... and the letters come in... but at twelve midnight you don't worry about those things... you forget about training in journalism... all you think about is getting words counted... and stories measured... and pages made up... and heads... and by-lines... and how you are going to put everything in that you promised... because if you don't somebody is sure to holler... or how you are going to fill two more columns... and you think back to the first few weeks of school... and of all the budding writers and reporters and make-up artists that flooded the office so that you didn't have work for them all... and you wonder where they all disappeared to... and you think that maybe you weren't nice enough to them and killed genius... or at least dampened enthusiasm... so you talk to them and beg and plead... but... suddenly they remember that they have essays... or tests... or exams... and then it dawns on you that you are here to get a degree too... and you have work to do... but there isn't a paid permanent editor for The Journal, so you stay... and every Sunday... and every Wednesday... and every Monday... and every Thursday... and the rest of the week you keep on worrying...

Blues Battle Mustangs And Willie Casanova

Toronto's Varsity Blues, the defending champions of the Intercollegiate Football Union, will open the regular league season this Saturday against the University of Western Ontario Mustangs in London. For the Blues it will be a chance to test their wares against some of the stiffest opposition in the league, while for the Mustangs it will be an opportunity for Willie Casanova to fulfill Coach Johnny Metras' long-term contract.

Western's now-famous Diamond T, a formation where there are two quarterbacks on the field at once, was originally planned to accommodate the exceptional football ability of the Windsor Patterson flash. Casanova will run from the tailback slot, the position played by Don Getty during last season, where he will be able to extend his triple-threat powers to their greatest advantage.

Along with Casanova, Metras will have quarterback John Girvin in the forward pivot spot, and Ralph Simmons at fullback. Brian Britton and Neil Desborough round out the Western starting backfield.

On the front wall Ted Roman and Doug Drew bring experience and weight to the Mustang line, while all-star Don Killinger, who fell on Ron Stewart's fatal last second fumble in last fall's semi-final goes at one end, and former U.T.S. star Bob La-bett at the other.

Varsity Coach Bob Masterson has spent the better part of this week working on pass defence, a department in which the Blues have flagged noticeably in their two exhibition games. After making his final cuts Monday night the coach was able to get down to brass tacks in preparation for the tussle with the Mustangs this Saturday.

On offense he has the choice of two capable quarterbacks, Harry Wilson and Ed Skrzypek, but he is planning to use Skrzypek at the safety spot on defense. Fullback Phil Muntz has been moved to the left half slot where his explosive running power may be used to better advantage. Bill Karpinski will get some work at offensive wing-back as well as defensive half-back, while Peter Maik may run from fullback. After an excellent afternoon against McMaster, Don Cheeseman will draw the starting assignment at full-back.

Net Tournament Starting Today

The annual tournament for the University Tennis Championships gets under way on Wednesday of this week at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club.

An entry list of approximately sixty will necessitate the playing of four flights, with two on Wednesday and two on Thursday. Starting time in the morning is nine-thirty.

Last year's winners, Ken Lawson (Vic.) in the singles and Lawson and Robin Logie (Trin.) in the doubles have graduated, so this year's tournament will see a new champion. And since the doubles championship has been dropped this year, the singles winner will be the undisputed University champion. Robin Arnold (Meds) is seeded No. 1 and is favoured to take the honours. Barry Smith (SPS) and Bill Grove (Vic.) are seeded No. 2 and No. 3 respectively and each will give Arnold a run for the money. Other seeded players are Dave Alexander (SPS) No. 4, Harold Browne (SPS) No. 5, Bruce Sonley (PHE) No. 6, and John Tattle (SPS) No. 7.

The top men in this tournament will play a round robin series with any challengers to decide the Blue and White representatives in the Intercollegiate Championships in mid-October.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

Apart from their regular business of settling a small difference of opinion as to who is the rightful owner of the Yates Cup, the Intercollegiate Football Union is acting as a guinea pig for the C.R.U. this season, experimenting with a new slant on the rules of Canadian football.

Observers at last week's games with the OAC Aggies and the McMaster Marauders will have noted that every time the Blues got a yardage penalty, while losing the ground, they retained the down on which the infraction had occurred. In fact in the first half against Mac, they had begun a first down scrimmage at the Marauders four yard line, and after two stiff penalties for clipping and for talking, still had first down three plays later at the McMaster thirty-four.

The whole thing is a result of the decision to adopt a new option when one team is penalized. The team which did not commit the infraction has the choice of seeing the penalized club scrimmage with the loss of a down where the previous play had taken place, or having the penalized team lose the prescribed yardage, but not the down. Formerly, of course, a team breaking the rules lost both the yards and the down.

Of even more interest, however, is the argument that is developing over third down passes over the defending team's goal line, a situation which occurred twice in the McMaster game. At the moment the rule is that a third down forward pass over the goal line that is incomplete brings the ball out to the twenty-five yard line where the opposition takes possession. The particular phase of the forward pass rule that is on the block at the moment, and which may come up for C.R.U. revision, is that governing interceptions. On first and second down passes over the goal line which are intercepted, the ball is put into play by the defending team at the ten yard line, while on a third down interception in the end zone, scrimmage comes at the twenty-five. The essential point is that on all intercepted pass plays in the goal area, ball is dead the moment a defender catches it.

We understand that there is at least one coach in the Intercollegiate Union who feels this ruling is unfair. Either the man who intercepts the forward pass should be allowed to complete the play, possibly running for a touchdown, or else the ball should be put in play at the point where the attacking team has last scrimmaged. In other words it seems a shame that the work involved in moving the ball to, say, the five yard line should be lost to the attacking team just because of an interception. This particular gentleman thinks that a team should retain the ground it has gained through fair play, and that there is no reason for the defending team to move all the way out to the twenty-five yard line when they have done nothing but intercept a pass.

If the answer is that the interceptor should be allowed to complete the play there arises the problem of the defender being trapped behind the goal line after catching the pass. For this Hec Creighton, the C.R.U.'s Chief Referee, has suggested the allowance of a single point to the attacking team. But this could lead to teams refusing to intercept forward passes rather than taking the chance of gaining possession but not getting out of the end zone. And if, as they say, possession is nine-tenths of the game, we could end up conceding singles just to get possession of the ball. It is not, at the same time, inconceivable that the man who intercepts the forward pass might go all the way for a touchdown. A flat pass to one corner of the goal area could leave the defender a clear field after eluding perhaps only one man, and it would certainly make the game more colorful.

At any rate the whole thing appears to be of more than passing interest. The experiment with penalties and the loss of a down thus far seems to have thrown the game a little bit wider open. It's a good question whether the forward pass rule will be altered, but it's food for thought.

Blue News . . . Student tickets for the three remaining home games of the Blue football team will go on sale on Thursday and Friday of next week. Watch this rag for notices of time and place . . . Congratulations are in order for the two Blue captains, Fred Smale and Phil Muntz . . . In case of rain or other unpredictables, entrants in the University tennis tournament scheduled to begin today are asked to contact the Intramural office at WA. 3-6611, local 312 . . . Intercollegiate Swimming and Water Polo Club meets tomorrow in the Debates Room in Hart House at 5.15 . . . Watch for it because it's just about the biggest thing ever.

A permanent regulation will be discussed at the next meeting. A discussion of the revamping of the intramural volleyball league was deferred until the next meeting. The discussion will centre on whether or not to divide the league into major and minor groups. The major league would adhere to European rules and be highly competitive; the minor league would employ the former Hart House rule system and be strictly recreational. The length of playoff hockey games was discussed. Last year, length of periods in the finals was considerably longer than periods in normal league play. Al Eagleson of Law moved that the case be brought before an official hockey committee which would recommend the length of periods in all games.

Unsung and Unseen Heroes Odd Threads on Ruggerites

Oddly apparelled figures are again weaving their haphazard way about the back-campus, and as evening falls perhaps you may see them. They are no ghosts, interstellar men or any such phenomena; they are only the unsung, unseen rugger players of this University at practice. Come Saturday each week while the heroes battle it out in glory midst sedentary mobs of spectators.

This group of stalwarts play for little glory and fewer onlookers. To the casual passerby they may appear to be a collection of idiots or perhaps even a certifiable group of maniacs, but pause sometime and give your attention to the game, the grandfather of the mechanized warfare of the stadium.

It is a game primarily to be played, not watched, but with a little understanding even the most particular of professional spectators can derive a great amount of pleasure from an afternoon of running the touchlines. More and more of the students are finding an interest in the game, a fact that has enabled Varsity to add another team to the 28 already ready in existence in the city. With two fifteens for the first time for many a year, the Blues are in a strong position to take the championship from McGill. A heartening foretaste of this victory was experienced on Saturday last when the 1st team won 14-3 from Canucks. The second team play their first game on Saturday against Nomads III. The McGill games coincide with the football games and will take place around noon of the same day; so why not come and see what the sport of football was like before super-science and technology entered the picture.

Intercol Squash To Start Soon

An early start for the intercollegiate Squash team was indicated yesterday when members of the team met at Hart House and decided on twice weekly practice periods commencing next Monday. Executive elected were Norm Seagram, President, Harry Malcomson, Vice-President, and Bill Rosenfeld, Secretary. The possibility of an intermediate as well as a senior team was discussed by Ralph Rimmer, former Ontario squash champion. Rimmer will coach the team with Bill Noyes, a former T.&D. Ontario, and Canadian champion. The early start and the matches planned with other squash clubs and universities will combine to put the teams in good shape for the Intercollegiate match next March.

Yorick In Mural Grid

Our worn and tattered history book tells us that the first football was the skull of a Dane, killed in battle with the English in the 11th century. The Brits, who came across the skull on an old battlefield, amused themselves with a kicking game, the Dane's head serving as the object of their boots. This was the first "skull practice." (Alas poor Yorick, I knew him well.)

The intramural football league which has its debut Thursday, October 13, will be using the old pigskin of a Hamnus Alabamus.

The Men of Skule find themselves in the honored position of defending champions, and they hope to repeat the feat this year. On the other hand last year's runners-up teams will be out looking for revenge. Trinity, St. Mike's and Vic are expecting bigger and better teams. These will be the teams to watch.

Meds, Dentistry, Forestry and Law are the underdogs this year, but they boast teams which may provide the key upset this year. With most of last year's teams back, they may prove to be worthy contenders for the Mulock Cup come late November. The big question mark this year will be the UC team which floundered along all last season, winning nary a game. This year with more attention being focussed towards interfaculty competition, they too may surprise. These questions will be answered come the opening date of October 13th.

Directorate Gets Generous Whistlers Gain More Loot

Increased pay for football officials, clarification of the residence rule, reorganization of the volleyball league, and length of final hockey games were the principal points of discussion Monday when the Intramural Sports Committee held its first meeting of the year.

Earlier the University Athletic Directorate had announced a substantial pay increase for football officials. The increment is the result of the growing demand for improved officiating. Officials feel increases from $3.00 to $4.25 for referees, from $2.00 to $3.25 for umpires, and from $1.50 to $2.50 for head linesmen, will attract officials who have previously been drawn to high school games. The wage increase is also an indication of the feeling that the acquisition of good officials will enhance the quality of play. Not only that, as one official states, the increase is well deserved.

The Intramural Committee very briefly considered an amendment to the residence rule. Toward the end of last year, Dave Prineau, an Engineering student, left his St. Michael's College residence. Without officially notifying the intramural committee of his change of residence, Prineau commenced practicing with St. Mike's basketball team.

Doubt arose as to whether he was eligible to play for St. Mike's since he had left St. Mike's residence and was attending the faculty of Engineering. The Committee found there was no precedent and, consequently, amended the residence regulation allowing Prineau to play

the remedy is yours

Tonight at 7.00 p.m. in Falconer Hall the first meeting of this year's Students' Administrative Council will be held. The SAC, the over-all student governing body of this University, is composed of one or two representatives from each of the 24 colleges and faculties of the University.

The SAC has often been criticised — in these pages and elsewhere — for its failure to provide constructive leadership for the students. It has been alleged that the SAC is composed of do-nothing, say-nothing individuals, each far more interested in the activities of his own petty clique than in the welfare of the whole university student body.

There is a great deal of truth in these statements. But those who make them often neglect to mention an equal truth — that in a large measure both the fault and the remedy lie with the general student body.

It is not due to the machinations of a dictatorial administration, nor the manoeuvring of campus politicians that the SAC often stands helpless.

It is because there has been a general lack of interest in SAC, and in the university-wide spirit which it represents, that the SAC has been prevented from developing into a better organization.

The remedy lies in your hands — a greater interest in what the SAC is doing, and a greater awareness of what it could do.

And the best way to start might be to come to the SAC meeting tonight yourself and — like us — wish this year's SAC the best of luck.

a few clots of blood

The present illness of President Eisenhower has had startling effects throughout the entire globe.

The news of his illness, which was described as a "moderate" heart attack, sent stock market values tumbling in Wall and Bay Streets for a total paper loss of seven billion dollars.

But even more important, the entire political outlook in the United States has altered sharply. The next US presidential election will be held in the fall of 1956, and most political commentators agree that if Ike ran for re-election he would win in a landslide over any opponents the Democrats could put up. The President has an immense popularity with the American people equalled by no other president within living memory.

However, observers and pollsters alike also agree that if Ike did not run, any half-way respectable Democratic candidate would be a sure-fire winner.

Indeed, one Republican leader was so despondent about the GOP's chances without Eisenhower that, when asked what he would do if Ike was not a candidate, he replied: "When I cross that bridge, I'll jump off it."

Since Eisenhower's health was known to be a deciding factor in his decision whether or not to stand for re-election, his heart attack seems to have removed most of the possibility that he might run.

And since Adlai Stevenson seems to have a good lead over other Democratic hopefuls for the presidential nomination, it appears that he now stands an excellent chance of becoming the next president of the United States.

A few clots of blood in a man's veins — and a nation's destiny, is altered.

OUR READERS WRITE

Prayer For The Varsity

The Editor,
The Varsity:

- You say: "It is not the proclamation of truths but the search for them . . . wherein lies the glory of the university." (Editorial, Sept. 21).
- I pray: Lord grant that we may herald and hold fast to your truth, and not flee from its demands under pretense of search. Lord, grant that we may seek in order to find, and not just for the sake of our seeking, or for the pleasure of our seeking, or most of all for the pain of our seeking (for we will suffer rather than love—to love is harder, it is more than acceptance).
- Lord, grant that we may look not so much to possess the truth as be possessed by it; for to possess it is to turn it to our advantage, which is to our mere selves, mere pleasure, merely human . . . but to be possessed by it is to be at the disposal of truth, a slave to truth, which is to rule indeed; to be conformed to truth is to be like you, O God.

- Grant that facts may not overpower us, but that we may use them for knowledge. Grant that knowledge may not inflate us, but may lead us to wisdom, and to you who are Subsistent Wisdom, who made us for yourself; and to your Son who is Incarnate Wisdom, who saved us for Wisdom; and to your Holy Spirit, who is Love in Wisdom, and who forms us in Wisdom here and now, and so long as we will.

Poor Eyesight

The Editor,
The Varsity:

If, as your editorial "on wrappings" implies, Toronto males have been looking longingly towards the Queen's, Western and McGill cheerleaders—they'd better take another look.

Until this year, as far as I know, McGill cheerleaders, albeit wearing sweaters, have been males themselves. And I haven't heard that they are introducing the female variety, sweated or not.

Come, now!

Name Withheld.

Ed. Note: Is our face red!

In Poor Taste

The Editor:
The Varsity,

We would like to bring to the attention of the students of this university, and in particular those of the Engineering Faculty, a glaring example of poor taste demonstrated by a member of the executive of the Engineering Society at the recent Freshman Dance at the Drill Hall.

We make no pretence of being puritans by any means; but we heartily disapprove of the method used by this executive member in trying to impress the Engineering Freshmen and the ladies present.

We feel that the type of so-called joke he used was entirely inappropriate, ill-suited, and extremely demonstrative of bad judgment in mixed company, as it creates a harmful impression among both the ladies and the uninitiated Freshmen, and certainly does not help to bolster the engineer's struggling reputation.

We would recommend that hereinafter he confine his type of jokes to the Engineering stores where they will be better appreciated.

a plea for tolerance

Toronto is an intolerant town, and people who come here with odd or unpopular ideas are always going away insulted. Such persons as Dr. Hewlett Johnson and Mr. Tim Buck get hooted whenever they come here, and the loudest hoots, (we blush) often rise from eager young U. of T. throats. As a group, we frequently confuse our agreement with what a man says, and his right to say it.

So look. If any of you do go to hear Dr. Billy Graham, don't heckle. Don't throw things or snap your bubble gum. Don't get up and leave. If you try, someone's liable to escort you to the altar. Remember that democracy can only exist while every idea, no matter how ridiculous it sounds, is given a courteous hearing.

Dr. Graham may go away thinking us unsaved, but let's not let him go thinking us uncivilized.—E. S.

Plain Speaking

So off we go again, and as usual I'm not ready for it. That's the trouble with being a cat, you're never ready for it.

Then bang and you're badgered again. I mean bang and registration is here and lectures start and The Varsity is trying to destroy everything and . . . oh hell!

I suppose I've got to do it sometime. I mean really. Every year rolls around and it catches me off balance every time.

All kinds of bodies come back from the bush and British Columbia and some don't come back at all, especially if they've been down in Florida and I'm caught napping.

Before I know I won't have enough time to get it done because the KCR will be serving and Cal will wear out two sets of vibes and weekneds in Montreal and editors being fired and Sidney Myth suggesting to the SAC, and the SAC agreeing and all kinds of nonsense.

And everybody will be giving good advice to the Frosh which they never followed themselves and are glad as hell they didn't, but they're counting on me to set a good example but I didn't have time to get it done this summer like I promised so the same thing is going to happen all over again this year and I'll be in disgrace all over again.

But by god its fun . . . I'll just have to call a spayed a spayed.

Billy Graham On The Campus

Billy's Sunday: Crowds And A "Good Time"

Noting that Billy Graham is coming to the campus Thursday, we decided the other day to take a sneak preview of the American gospelier and have what one of his chief aides calls "A good time with the Lord."

It was a pleasant Sunday afternoon—so pleasant, in fact, that some 30,000 others converged with us for a day in the open at the Exhibition grandstand.

As we rode down Bathurst Street the crowd atmosphere became somewhat deceptive. The young lad behind us on the streetcar had to be told sternly by his mother more than once that this was no ball game he was going to. No ball game indeed!

Yet our sympathies went out to the confused young sportsman, especially as we left the street car and joined the crowd in a spirited sprint across to the grandstand. En route we were offered worldly sustenance by a peanut vendor. He wasn't doing much business.

We arrived just as the last seats in the grandstand were being filled. A grey-haired official sporting a "Billy Graham usher" badge promised, however to lead us and a hundred others to seats if we would just follow him. His seats turned out to be standing room on the cinder track. Slightly disillusioned, we turned from him and made our way to our working brethren in the press section.

Here we had not only seats and a table to write on, but the co-operation of another Billy Graham official whose badges and ribbons proclaimed him both "Billy Graham Counsellor" and "Billy Graham Aisle Captain."

This authority first showed his usefulness as the platform announcer praised the volunteer choir of "over 1200 voices".

"Do you want to know exactly how many singers we have," our minor Poo-bah asked. "Exactly four times 288!"

When we pointed out this was somewhat less than 1200 he explained, "It's all we can hold."

"They're mostly sopranos," he added. Proudly, we think.

By this time, most of the preliminaries were over, though we had managed to hear in passing Dr. Graham's appeal for contributions to his weekly "Hour of Decision" radio program. Not only would not a cent of the offerings go to anyone of his platform party, he had promised, but not a penny would go to the United States. Every cent, Dr. Graham guaranteed, would be spent in Canada, to put the program over Canadian radio stations. And contributions could be deducted from our income tax.

This short plea was no preparation for Dr. Graham's major address, which began shortly after we sat down. To put everything in fair proportions, he assured us early in the game that as Canadian citizens and human beings we had every right to renounce God if we so desired. Then, for 45 minutes, he urged us not to exercise that right.

"Before you is eternal life!" the tall blonde Carolinian shouted. We weren't sure whether he was referring to some Elysian fields beyond the bright blue sky or to his own nattily blue-suited self.

At any rate, there was no time to lose. "The rope of salvation, swings toward you today. I beg of you to catch it. It may never come again," the American accent boomed over the loudspeakers.

We found ourselves a little confused, however, by Dr. Graham's use of an Old Testament text (Joshua 24) in honor of the Jewish Day of Atonement which began the next day. (The friendly counsellor-aisle captain hurriedly turned to Joshua 24 in his Bible so that we would be able to follow the talk.)

Billy—as President Eisenhower and others in his parables always addressed him—seems more at home with New Testament material. Before we knew it, he had Joshua apparently preaching Christianity to the Jews, while he himself urged the crowd to "say like the children of Israel, I stand with Christ." We doubt if any Child of Israel we know is aware of saying any such thing.

Such slips were lost, though, in the force of Billy's oratory and gestures. Though he breaks no chairs in true Billy Sunday fashion, the modern Billy uses his arms pretty effectively.

Sometimes shouting, sometimes whispering through clenched teeth, he kept the attention of most of the 30,000 people in the audience. The chattering which had gone on previously now stopped.

About the only person who seemed to be having the promised "good time" was a two-year-old sitting at the very front who had discovered a new game. He kept throwing his mother's key ring down on the concrete pavement as hard as he could, then when she picked it up, throwing it down again.

His was about the only laughing face as the attack on "the sin of idolatry" and worship of "the false gods of greed, pleasure and behaviourism" continued.

The true power of Dr. Graham's message was shown as the converts—some ?? of them—filled down the stairs to the front in answer to his call. A few teenagers, then some middle-aged people. A married couple, and two sweethearts holding hands. An elderly lady leaning on her granddaughter's arm. A blonde in a pea jacket and a brunette in a fur coat. A group of 10-year-old boys. A middle-aged woman kneeling on the pavement, crying.

Still, as the final benediction sounded over the packed grandstand, we wondered how effective the service really had been. We noticed Dr. Graham had donned a trench coat to protect him from the growing chill. The setting sun had left the platform on which he stood, and now lighted only the varicolored Exhibition midway in the distance and, nearby, a tattered scarlet backdrop left over from the old grandstand show.

FORUM

Who's Boss?

This Dr. Graham's tactics seem to represent a deterioration of the Christian religion. I can see little relation between his crusade and the humbler efforts of the man he calls Master.

Mike McMorde, III SP5

High Pressure

Though I haven't seen or heard him, I feel awfully suspicious of high pressure methods in religion, and of the argument that religion has to compete with modern day commercial enterprise.

Les Lawrence, IV UC

Declines TV

He seems to be a modern version of the time-honoured "soul-saver" yet he declines to use our most modern device of mass-communication, TV. Probably the reason for this is that he realizes that religion appeals primarily to the emotions, so he could not elicit his famous frenetic responses on TV the way he can by appearing personally to a select (i.e. made up of those who came to hear him) audience.

Alan Auerbach, III UC

Lucky

It's fortunate that a man with such proven forcefulness is using it for religious purposes, and not for solely commercial ones.

Gerry Weinberg, III UC

Impressed

I was very much impressed with his speaking, and don't think University students hear enough of what he is trying to say.

J. Brewin, II Trinity

Mass-Produced

Billy Graham will be immortalized as the Mr. Ford of Religion for his successful introduction of mass-production methods to the manufacture of hysteria. This is making him rich, in the same tradition.

O. Pidhaini, II UC

If Nothing Else

The average person needs leadership and will seek it from those with convictions. I think the man may have a message. How authentic it may be, I don't know. He will stimulate controversy if nothing else.

Elizabeth Cain, III UC

Modern Luther

He's a modern day Martin Luther without the Reformation. I admire him, but don't find his theology acceptable at present. I think and I hope that he will stir some of the students to at least reconsider their religion.

Les. Green, II UC

Distinguish

As a religionist, there are many others I would prefer, judging by quality of message rather than by size of audience.

As an educator, I hope we will make an educational use of the visit—to observe what goes on, and to practice distinguishing the phony from the real.

Prof. W. J. McCurdy.

Supporter

I hope there's a big crowd there to hear him. I've been down to several of his rallies. I think he knows what he's talking about.

Marion Burgess, II UC.

Great Guy

I think he's a great guy and everybody should have a chance to hear Mr. Graham for himself. To form his own conclusions about him and about what he has to say. What better chance than having him come here? We're all searching for something or we wouldn't (or shouldn't) be at U of T. Will he help us to ask ourselves the kind of questions that will plunge our buckets deeper into the well of truth? These he will!

Robert Freeman, I UC

This is the first of a series of Forums which will appear periodically throughout the year. These try to give opinions, both student and faculty, on the various controversial issues which will crop up from time to time.

Topic this week was: "What do you think of Billy Graham's visit to the campus?" Opinion was not as definite in general as these quotes show. Many students, and some faculty, when approached, were non-committal, had no opinion or wished to reserve their opinions until they had had greater opportunity to study the man and his methods.

Low Morals?

It'll afford me an opportunity of going to hear him speak. Perhaps it will make the students aware of the low moral standards here on the campus, and perhaps he can offer some inspiration to help them overcome them.

Frank Mader, III Dents.

Not the Answer

Billy Graham is making people more aware of religion and prayer, but I feel religion is a much more mystical and personal thing. I don't think mass evangelism is the answer.

Anne Kilgore, III P&OT

None Can Judge

Upon inadequate grounds Mr. Graham evaluates and condemns the moral standards and religious confusion in each country that he visits. Although he is prepared to utter his ill-founded and necessarily inadequate generalizations, I believe that he has stepped beyond the capabilities of any man. For example, he was forced to withdraw his hasty and ill-considered evaluation of the Danish nation. No man can pass just judgment in the name of God upon the affairs of the world.

J. E. Vickers, II Vic.

For Open Minds

Graham's visit to the campus will give non-Christians an excellent opportunity to hear and appreciate the methods, values and purposes of Christianity, as long as he delivers a reasoned, intelligent talk. If he gives an evangelical exhortation, it will be a waste of time.

George Brown, II Premeds.

Dangerous

Dr. Billy Graham is a man of God, and he is dangerous. Dangerous, because any attempt to bring, by the power of Christ, the actual kingdom of God on earth is a disruptive and revolutionary force in our too secular world. In this sense, Dr. Graham's danger is a most challenging and positive force.

On the other hand, Dr. Graham's Christianity seems flimsy, his theology unorthodox, and his preaching, in the minds of some, can lead to misunderstanding of the Christian faith.

In concluding, one might stress his undoubted honesty, and his humility and sincerity.

If God sees it fit to use him as the instrument of His work, then we cannot but see it fit to pay heed to him. On the other hand, he should be listened to with caution and a great deal of searching.

Marie Perinbam

Definition

Religion is an art. Unfortunately, Mr. Graham is a plumber.

Outclasses Smith

Of course he should come here, because he is a far better speaker than Sidney Smith.

HJ, I Trin.

I Was Saved

The reason for attending the 1954 Crusade was to satisfy my own curiosity, not to seek the truth. Once there, I was immediately impressed by Graham's frankness and his dynamic nature. However, his message held no special significance in that it did not differ from the run of the mill salvationist theme.

There existed an element in his invitation to 'accept Jesus', and the manner in which he delivered it, which I found difficult to explain. As he pleaded I felt an embarrassing compulsion, a force tugging from within, urging me to descend and make my commitment. And, with tears of emotion and/or spiritual enlightenment, I did.

Perhaps another sinner had found joy and love in his Saviour's arms. However, the prescription proffered and its resulting effects caused a form of mental agony. Every action was preceded by the determination of its moral worth; joys and pleasures became hollow evidences of sin. Always sin. Man lost his position of achievement and respect and became a dirty sinner, beneath the gutter rat. To some, this concept is appealing—to me it was neither rational nor satisfying. In consequence I rejected it, and therefore the accompanying plan for salvation.

As a final word let it be said that this particular exposition is by no means conclusive. There have been some who found a better way of life through Dr. Graham's influence.

Enrollment Up

But No Room

Universities across the continent are facing the problem of abnormally large enrolments this year. Not since the influx of the Vets in the mid-forties has Varsity had to accommodate so many students.

At Duke University in North Carolina, a Social Room was converted into a barracks with the installing of six double bunks and twelve unhappy students.

The Macdonald Institute at Guelph has relaxed its veto on off campus residence for girls in face of the largest enrolment in its history.

Reports of similar situations from colleges across Canada suggest that accommodation is becoming the university's number one headache.

Students See Eye to Eye With Simcoe Hall On P.T. Poll Says

What a change!

Students and University authorities here see eye-to-eye! At least that is the consensus after polling half-a-dozen students for their opinions on Monday's Simcoe Hall announcement about new physical education regulations.

The announcement revealed that:

1) physical education can no longer prove a stumbling block to academic progress—including graduation.
2) So-called compulsory "P.T." is compulsory in the first year only.

Said John Hill (II Chem.) gleefully: "I'm in favour of it (the regulations). One year is enough.

In second year there are other things that are more interesting. I didn't like the running back and forth from gym classes to lectures."

Stuart Wong (III Physiology and Biochemistry) thought P.T. "very important."

But Wong added: "I don't think it should be compulsory, although I would take it all through college. . . . Students should realize the importance of a physical education program."

Said Mike Grinvalds (II General): "I'm in favour of abolishing it!"

Malcolm Couttz (I Maths Phys. & Chem.) said he was in favour of the Simcoe Hall ruling, but that he "wouldn't mind taking P.T. for a couple of years."

David Shaw (I U.C.) also shared the popular view that the University powers-that-be had made a wise decision, "I'm in favour of it," Shaw said. "It's a good regulation. Students should be allowed to make their own choice."

art, music and drama

Televised MacBeth

Shakespeare did not write television scripts, and Sunday night's Macbeth has not altered my conviction that television cannot supersede the theatre as a means of communicating drama. But the new medium can illuminate Shakespeare, and Shakespeare can in turn make good TV.

David Greene's production was like the curate's egg. Parts of it were excellent. The failures, however, seem more memorable than the successes; and challenges typical of TV would be met in one scene with complete and therefore unobtrusive, effectiveness, and in another so mishandled that the viewer almost wondered whether the producer had not hit upon his first perfection by chance instead of art.

Perspective, for example, in television goes crashing away from the camera much more quickly than it does from the human eye in the theatre. This fact was well exploited when the tiny figure of Macbeth mounted the long and arduous stairway to murder. To climb that stair required a screwing of courage to the sticking point; and perspective emphasized the loneliness of Macbeth. But to dangle a huge white hand in front of a normally proportioned head was troubling. Macbeth may be unnatural in the Shakespearean sense, but his hands were bloodstained, not elephantine.

Then again, the intimacy of the television screen was used beautifully for close-up work. Barry Morse showed a range and intensity of facial expression that made his torments of doubt dramatically close to us; but when finally a soliloquy was shot from a distance I found myself thanking heaven for a variation far too long denied.

The conspiracy between Macbeth and Banquo's murderers was given a new dramatic concentration only possible on a small screen so that one saw vividly how ill-assorted were the heads that were laid together. Why then, in a scene in which Shakespeare's choppiness needed unifying, flip the camera from witch to witch until the viewer could hardly tell which of what?

Yet in the sleep-walking scene, the banquet scene and the scenes surrounding the murder of Duncan, there were times at which the production became a lucid medium for Shakespeare, and his drama so enthralled us that all other considerations were lost. This power of acting coupled with the compression of time and space are the aspects of Greene's production that I hope to see developed. Then we will have the vitality of television without any of its concomitant evils.

Have Fun... Win Pocket Money

Here's a chance to have some fun while trying to win twenty-five dollars. Every Monday and Wednesday an anagram will appear in The Varsity. The correct answer will be either the name of a student or staff member, with clues provided, or a word from the back of the special time table cards which we have made especially for you. If you haven't received one, pick one up in the S.A.C. Building.

The prize each week will be twenty-five dollars. To win you must print the correct answers to both Wednesday's and Monday's anagrams on a slip of paper together with your name and address. The slip should then be deposited in the special box in the S.A.C. Building by 2 p.m. each Wednesday. This means, with the contest starting today, that your first entry with answers to today's and next Monday's anagrams must be in by October 5th.

In the case of a number of correct answers the winner will be decided by lot. Winners will be announced each Monday.

Contest open to students and staff of the University of Toronto. If there are any questions simply call WA. 2-3157.

Further Staff Changes Announced By Smith

The President of the University has announced further staff changes for the year.

Dean R. G. Ellis left for Australia in June and during his six months there, besides practising dentistry, will undertake a program of refresher courses and of visiting dental schools.

Jean R. Burnet of the Department of Political Economy has received a Guggenheim Fellowship and will continue her research on the Puritan Movement in Ontario. Another member of the department, Prof. Alexander Brady, an expert in the field of Commonwealth Relations, is spending the summer months at the University of Otago, Dunedin, New Zealand, as William Evans Visiting Professor for 1955.

Prof. J. M. S. Careless of the History Department will spend his leave completing his book on George Brown, aided by a Rockefeller Foundation grant.

Prof. C. F. Comfort of the Department of Art and Archaeology will use his Canadian Government Overseas Award in Holland to study Dutch paintings of the 1550-1750 period.

Prof. C. Barnes of the Physics Department is on loan to the Defense Research Board.

Prof. W. C. Hood also of the Political Economy Department, has been appointed to the Royal Commission on Economic Development.

Professor H. Mehlberg of the Department of Philosophy will spend the year at Princeton University, his special subject being the Philosophy of Science.

Prof. Gilbert Bagnani of University College's Department of Classics will visit the Mediterranean area to do research on a Canadian Government Overseas Award.

Prof. G. E. McCasland of the Chemistry Department will be at Ohio State University, specializing in sterol chemistry.

Dr. F. E. J. Fry, a limnologist in the Zoology department, has accepted a visiting professorship in the University of Hawaii, Honolulu.

Crooners Craved

"During the past few years the Hart House Glee Club has become one of the most attractive organizations to the men of this university, and again we have planned an interesting year," says Director Ward McAdam.

Perhaps the best feature of the club is the great variety of personalities, interests and ideas from which it is formed. The members come from all faculties, with abilities ranging from top soloists to mediocre "shower crooners."

"It is not necessary to have an excellent voice," said Mr. McAdam. "As a matter of fact, many of the present members' friends were surprised when these fellows passed the audition tests. As long as a candidate has a reasonable appreciation of music and a desire to have fun singing, he can be certain of a place in the club."

Auditions are at 5:00 p.m. in the Hart House Music Room today and tomorrow. Rehearsals for the fall concerts will begin in the next few weeks.

The first concert will be the annual Inter-University Concert featuring the A Cappella Chorus of Cornell University, the Philharmonic Choir of the Ontario Agricultural College, and the Glee Club.

At Christmas a CBC Trans-

Canada broadcast is scheduled, and an appearance at the Blue and White Society Christmas Tree in Hart House.

In the spring term each year the club attends an out-of-town concert. Last year the trip was to Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, and this year plans are being made to visit Queen's University, in Kingston.

The Glee Club will wind up the season by presenting the last of the Sunday Evening Concerts in the Great Hall of Hart House.

International Affairs Editor Will Speak on "Germany 1955"

"Germany 1955" will be the subject of a talk to be given to the International Relations Club tomorrow. The speaker will be Prof. H. I. Nelson, editor of the International Journal, the publication of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs.

Under the presidency of Ron Price (IV Vic), the club, which is associated with the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and the Association of International Relations Clubs, is planning an active year. Projects include a weekend at Caledon Hills Farm in October, as well as a trip to New York in November.

There will be regular meetings throughout the year featuring outstanding guest speakers.

Carolina University, and Joel H. Sterns, 21, of Northwestern University, will be vice-presidents for Student Affairs and Educational Affairs.

Mihiko Sails Pacific OK But Baffled By Enrollment

A new student on the campus this year is Mihiko Shimizu, here from Japan on a World University Service scholarship.

Mihiko finds that Toronto, in comparison with Tokyo — is relatively quiet — with the exception of her Whitney Hall room overlooking Harbord St. And here it is the streets, rather than the sidewalks, which are crowded.

"In Toronto you do not have so many workers," she adds.

As a special student Mihiko has her choice of subjects from any course. She is concentrating on physical education and hygiene, to prepare for her job as head of this department in her university — a small women's college near Tokyo, where she graduated in British and American literature.

Registration was a confusing experience for Mihiko as for any newcomer to the University. "At home it is one place, one day; here there are so many places." But thanks to the help of several Canadian students, whom she finds "very kind and sociable," she finished registration within a day of her arrival.

Mihiko's scholarship is only part of the WUS campaign to cement personal relationships with Japan and other countries. Last summer a group of Canadian students, including Gay Sellars (IV UC) attended a seminar in Japan, which they felt taught them much about the attitudes of both countries. Symbolic of WUS work was the construction, finished last year, of Japan's first tuberculosis sanitarium, the foundation of which was built by students from all countries.

Last year WUS brought an Egyptian student, Mohammed Khalifa, to Toronto; the year before it was Raj Mirtra of India. The scholarships are available to Canadian students also, with a choice of almost twenty countries.

Finds Oxford Students Are Bright Students, No Snobs

"Oxford students are an exceedingly bright group, who are not exposed to the traditional snobberies," said Ian MacDonald, a Toronto Rhodes Scholar of 1952.

MacDonald has spent three years at Oxford since his graduation in Commerce and Finance from University College. At Oxford he obtained a B.A. with an economics major. In his third year he combined two years in one obtaining a Bachelor of Philosophy degree which strangely enough is another economics major.

"Oxford was most stimulating—it made travelling easy," said MacDonald who referred in part to his International Union of Students sponsored trip to Moscow in 1954.

Before he visited England, MacDonald had the impression that the English possessed a superiority complex. He was further biased by "people who try to be English".

"The real Englishman is very hospitable," he said. "They're not as naturally easy as North Americans. They're sizing you up all the time but once they accept you you couldn't find better friends." MacDonald found the sombre, serious Englishman quite out of place.

Although Oxford still is concerned with a predominately classical approach to education, many of its students, MacDonald said, are quite interested in a business training such as that offered at Harvard's Business school. "Many progressively-minded Oxford students are interested in North America," he said.

Referring to teaching at Oxford, MacDonald said that the university employed "top men" who are contemporary minded. Their course in economics begins for instance with Keynes, he said (about 1936) and proceeds to current history.

MacDonald said industrial organization and marketing of goods in the U.K. lag far behind America, because she cannot catch up to U.S. progress.

When asked why England has not taken full advantage of modern advertising techniques, MacDonald said that the Englishman thinks "it is not the thing to do and that the choice should lie with the consumer."

SAC Hopes To Bring Adlai Here Meanwhile Talks About NFCUS

Two students' conferences will occupy the most important part of the agenda at tonight's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council.

This is the first meeting for the school year and Michael Shoemaker, president of the SAC, expects a "quiet meeting." Several of the 35 members of the council are new — replacing those from Graduate School, OCE and similar student bodies, and also three who failed their years.

The two conferences to be discussed are those at Edmonton and Saskatoon. The National Federation of Canadian University Students will meet in the oil capital in mid-October and the World University Service in the Saskatchewan city about the same time.

Two delegates from Toronto will be going to each convention and they will be approved by the SAC at its meeting. Peter Martin, regional vice-president and NFCUS vice-president, will also be at the Edmonton meeting.

Tom Symonds, retiring chairman of the SAC, is expected to be approved by council for a further term. His name has been submitted by the nominating committee.

The Blue and White Society, a committee of the SAC, hopes to have Adlai Stevenson, Democratic nominee for the U.S. presidency in 1952, here to speak during the year. The society also plans a jazz concert.

Mr. Shoemaker added that apart from discussion of finances, there would probably be nothing else of major importance discussed. He thought the meeting would afford a good opportunity for new members to become acquainted with proceedings.

All Varsity staff photographers are requested to meet in The Varsity office today at 1:00 p.m. Assignments for the coming week will then be handed out at this organizational meeting. It is essential that all photographers be on hand.

Critical Period In Our World Graham States

This is the most critical period in all human history, Dr. Billy Graham told University students yesterday.

Addressing approximately two thousand persons in a packed Convocation Hall he said: "We're in a mad arms race. Every generation has had to fight it out. There have been only 277 years of peace in the last 2,000 years."

The blue-suited evangelist described the enormity of destruction which new weapons could wreak on opposing civilizations. By pressing a button a rocket can now be propelled for 5,000 miles bringing obliteration to its target. "Who's going to keep some mad man from pushing a button in 'x' point in history?" said Dr. Graham.

Graham quoted Sir Winston Churchill as having said, "Our problems are beyond us," and Arnold Toynbee with "the survival of the world depends upon a religious revival."

"I want to ask you young people the answer," he said. "We don't have a hundred years to find an answer like our forefathers did, we've got to decide it in our generation."

He described the history of the human race as being one of lying, cheating and killing. "A man from Mars, if he were to come here today, would report that the major industry of the world is war," he said.

"I have an answer, and, of course, it is your academic privilege to disagree," said Dr. Graham. "The Bible says these problems are caused by the fact that the human race has a

MOVE TO BURY NFCUS IS DOWNED BY COUNCIL

SAC Debaters

NFCUS Must Not Die Says 10-7 SAC Vote

Students at this university decided last night not to bury NFCUS — for the time being, at any rate.

Students' Administrative Council voted 10-7 against a motion recommending the organization be suspended for five years. "NFCUS" stands for National Federation of Canadian University Students and all students here are technically members.

The motion to wrap up NFCUS operations came from Murray Mogan (III Law) who wanted future students to meet on a national level in 1960.

Mogan stated: "Too many people in this Council don't familiarize themselves with NFCUS—only the few who go and exchange a lot of hot air at the Conference."

This University, Mogan maintained, was "bludgeoned into coming across with the 50c; otherwise NFCUS would eject us from the organization. This seems a case of the tail wagging the dog."

Mogan demanded, out of a total allocation of $14,000, was $12,000-$13,000 necessary for administration? Was a full time presidency, with a salary of $3,150, essential? "$5,500 from this university—four what? There is only a very small

Volunteers Needed For Social Work

An appeal is being made to potential part time social workers to "exchange a small part to their leisure for worthwhile services for their community".

Speaking to a Varsity reporter Mrs. Lloyd Richardson, director of the Volunteer Department of the Welfare Council of Toronto and District said: "People are lonely, and aimless social activities are not satisfying".

Working as a liaison between the department and the public, Mrs. Richardson said that her group provides volunteer workers for those organizations too small to possess their own hiring and screening agencies. She said the department also funnels the requests of individuals who have no contact with active groups into the work of these smaller organizations.

Mrs. Richardson also processes the requests of people who offer their services. Through films and lectures Mrs. Richardson said that she tries to attract interested people into the ranks of the volunteer workers.

When asked how she became interested in this work she said, "I was at home, bored to the teeth with housework when I received a call on the telephone requesting me to aid in a community project. I accepted and have been working part time with the department ever since." She explained that the job was part time because she has a family.

Music Ushers in OCE Council

Industrial Arts students at Ontario College of Education captured five positions, including the presidency, in Students' Council elections held there yesterday morning.

This is the first time that a student from this division of the college has been elected president.

The successful candidate, Jim Devlin, gave his policy speech to the accompaniment of a glee club chorus and a twanging mandolin.

The student meeting was marked by the first public performance by the OCE Little Symphony, and although still short of players, the orchestra performed well. This, too, in spite of the fact that members had only one practice session. Speakers—55 of them—were limited to one minute apiece and the meeting rolled along quickly, with balloting going on as candidates for each post made their way to the stage in the auditorium.

There were speeches short and snappy, apologetic and mumbling, egotistical and factual—some quite humorous. One candidate for treasurer assured the gathering he was a graduate of Queen's, not Kingston.

Ex-members of students' councils from all the Ontario colleges and from further afield, pressed their claims to election.

A Bronx cheer from a trumpet, or clarinet left no doubt in anyone's mind when the 60-second time-limit had expired.

Gordon Edgett and Bob Horwood, successful music committee nominees, delighted the audience with a well-sung parody of an excerpt from "The Pirates of Penzance".

Results included—President—Jim Devlin; Vice-president—Ruth Gardner; Recording Secretary—Ann Newman; Corresponding Secretary—Margaret Coates; Treasurer—Jim Thayer.

QUOTE

Chairman Michael Shoemaker opened the first SAC meeting last Wednesday, by quoting from his favorite cracker-barrel philosopher:

"As Abe Hubbard mentioned that he hated to break in a clean towel, in the same way it becomes hard for us to open the first meeting of the year. But we can further listen to old Abe when he claims some people are so sensitive that they feel snubbed if an epidemic overlooks them. I hope we will not be so self-conscious, but will get something real, something pertaining to the U of T as a whole from these meetings."

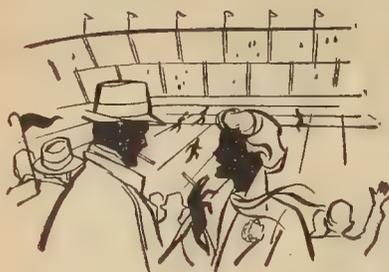

proportion that goes back to the students."

"Our delegates should be left with something concrete to take to NFCUS such as a plea to cut down administrative costs and provide more benefits, such as scholarships for creative writing."

In reply, Michael Shoemaker, IV Trinity, President of SAC and (Continued on Page 8)

Varsity Faces Western As Grid Season Opens Smale May Be Injured

"You might say we're an unknown quantity," says Bob Masterson, casting a cloak of mystery over tomorrow's opening Intercollegiate football game in London. Minus the services of speedy back Rich Bethune, out for the season with a cracked vertebra, and with all-star end Fred Smale and halfback Dave Cresswell doubtful starters, Masterson will lead his charges against John Metras' colorful Mustangs tomorrow afternoon in a renewal of the gridiron rivalry that has been the backbone of the Intercollegiate Union ever since the second world war.

With two exhibition games under their belts, a 39-0 rout over the OAC Aggies and a 31-5 win from the McMaster Marauders, the Blues should be about ready for their opening tussle with Western. Bob Masterson has been stressing pass defence all this week for insurance against the passing arm of triple-threat tailback Willie Casanova. But the injury bug is still plaguing the Varsitys and Smale and Cresswell are both doubtful starters, and a big question mark follows Gene Chorostecki's name.

Out for both exhibition games with a leg injury, the veteran end could be a great help to the Blues both offensively and defensively, if he can play Saturday. But if Chorostecki is out, and Smale too, Masterson runs into a problem at end, a position that was considered strong just a week ago. McMaster grad Burt Kellock will probably go at one end, along with Don Smith, and Dick Risk or Bill Karpinski at the other.

Harry Wilson will likely draw the starting assignment at quarterback, but Masterson plans to use both the Riverdale grad and Ed Skrzypek equally at the pivot spot. The way the two of them have been throwing the ball in pre-season games, the Blues could be dangerous in the air, especially with Kellock and Smith to haul the strikes in.

Veteran John Wismer will likely start at centre with John Bodrug playing the linebacker spot on defence. All-star Bobby Waugh and Don Johnston will likely be the guards, while Big Al Watt and Walt Radzick will bring one year of senior experience to the Blue line.

Conflicting reports from Western indicate an injury sustained by Casanova against the Flying Dutchmen last Saturday, but there is no confirmation of this rumor. John Girvin will probably start in the close quarterback slot, with Ralph Simmons going at fullback, and Neil Desborough and Brian Britton on the half line.

Metras will be able to throw a big experienced line against the Blues tomorrow afternoon, and this may make the difference. On the other hand, with Ted Roman handling the kicking chores for the Mustangs, the Blues could make a single point the margin of victory. Ed Skrzypek's punting improves with every practice, and Dick Risk can boot 'em a fair distance too.

Elsewhere in the Intercollegiate Queen's face McGill in Kingston in the other opening game. Gael

Coach Frank Tindall has definitely said that import quarterback Gus Braccia will be in the lineup against the Redmen. Braccia joined the Tricolor only this week after being out from the Ottawa Roughriders. A graduate of Temple University in Philadelphia, there could be some question as to his eligibility, although there has been no indication of this. The arrival of the American flash has for the moment erased any fears Tindall might have had about the Gaels' strength at quarterback.

After three tight games last year when the Blues tied the Mustangs twice and then won the title by a single point in the championship game, the outcome of this Saturday's game is highly doubtful. Both teams have lost key men in the backfield and on the line. You might say they're both unknown quantities.

Record Soccer Entry Received

The increasing popularity of the rugged sport called soccer is becoming evident as this year's record enrollment of twenty teams in the intramural soccer league proves. UC, Skule, and Knox have been able to send out an extra team each to supplement last year's groups.

Sr. Skule, Sr. Meds, UC-1, and Vic compromise the first group of the Division I. There will be three four team groups in Division One and one four team group in Division Two.

As in preceding years, the two Division champions will have the opportunity of having a challenge match, in which the winner will be crowned Campus Champions. Last year, Emmanuel bested Victoria in an exciting final.

The increase in the number of teams presents a problem to the Intramural Office. Miss Boyd is in need of soccer referees and those persons who feel that they can do the job, should contact her at the Intramural Office as soon as possible. All will be welcome.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

Personnel shifts in the university of Toronto coaching staff will facilitate an early basketball start this year. During the summer, Warren Stevens, Director of Athletics, appointed John McManus to coach the Senior Intercollegiate Basketball team, and Dalt White to handle the Intermediates. Bob Masterson, former coach of the basketball team, has been replaced because of the overlap between the football and basketball seasons. McManus' appointment will allow Masterson to concentrate on football. The new senior basketball coach intends to start his practices Monday, October 3 in the main gymnasium at 5:00 p.m.

In basketball circles McManus is well known. During 1947-50 he played with the University of Toronto hoop team. A standout, McManus was for three years chosen on the Intercollegiate all-star team. During that time he was also elected to the all-time all-Varsity team.

His prodigious ability was reflected during 1950-52. In 1950 he went to Acadia University, Nova Scotia, in the capacity of head basketball coach. The squad there had not won one game in four years. After spending a year teaching fundamentals and basketball routines, McManus organized a team. Not only did it win the Intercollegiate Championship, but also it took the Halifax and District, and Maritime Championships. McManus' record with the club was 41 wins and 4 defeats. He also organized the track and field teams, the former winning the Intercollegiate championships two years, the latter one year. The facts speak for themselves.

In 1952, McManus was invited to coach the University of Toronto intermediate football and basketball teams. On the six Varsity teams he has coached or helped to coach there have been five which have taken Intercollegiate championships. Two of the championships have been with the Intermediate basketball squad, two with the Intermediate footballers, and last year he was assistant senior football coach.

John McManus is a definite asset. Without his presence on away-from-home-trips, players usually remained keyed up. His wit is always a welcome distraction on trips. During a game, however, he has the forcefulness to get the most from his players.

The New Intermediate Coach . . .

. . . Dalt White is equally prolific. When White graduated from the Varsity in 1938, he went to Port Colborne High School, where in his second year he guided his team to the Central Ontario High School Championship. He moved to Toronto Western Technical School where he coached such greats as Walt Karabin, Jack Gray and Ken Stanley. White's hoopsters were undefeated in one season, winning the city and Ontario basketball titles.

Extremely versatile, White played senior lacrosse with Hamilton Tigers, Brampton Exelsiors and Toronto Marlboros as well as senior basketball with Toronto West End "YMCA". From 1947 to 1951 he was the assistant Director of Physical and Health education for the Ontario Department of Education. He joined the University staff in 1951 as assistant football coach and assistant basketball coach.

Good luck, John and Dalt!

Netmen Finish Opening Round

At press time two days of the University Tennis Championships have been completed with no major upsets. Only one minor upset has been recorded and in that, John Berkeley (U.C.) defeated Ray Cornish (Pharm.) 3-6, 7-5, 6-3.

Robin Arnold, seeded No. 1, drew a bye into the second round as did John Tattle and Dave Alexander. Bill Grove, seeded No. 3, made short work of Don Wright 6-0, 6-1; Bruce Sonley swept aside Tony Sterbenk 6-2, 6-1. Harold Browne advanced into the third round by whipping John Wilson (Vic.) 6-1, 6-1.

The first and second rounds will be completed this week, and on Monday the semi-finals will commence. Barring bad weather, the final round should get under way on Wednesday afternoon.

BY FLO MIDDLETON

Although Marilyn Bell has not registered at Toronto this year, Marg Harrington, this year's University of Toronto swimming coach, seems quite undaunted and is looking forward to an excellent season both at the intercollegiate and intercollegiate levels. At the first practice held this week there was a 50% increase over last year's first gathering for the clan and the mermaids splashing around in the pool at UTS looked, on the whole, quite promising.

With the intercollegiate meet scheduled for Nov. 5 at Hart House, the girls of this institution are reminded that practice periods have started and that it might be an excellent move if they made their way to the UTS pool on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings, in order to take full advantage of an early start in making their college team a sure bet for the swimming crown. For the female speed specialists, the hour is 5:30 and for the Esther Williams, your practice time is an hour later at 6:30.

The problem at present is that there are too many girls who are excellent swimmers who are under the impression that they are not good enough for either an intercollegiate or an intercollegiate team. The trouble with you girls is, that you have never taken the time to find out what standards are required and exactly how stiff the competition is. The best suggestion I can offer you misguided ones is to wander up and see Miss Harrington and find out just where you stand or should I say sink. (A word, nothing can be lost.)

The Intramural Football Standing Committee held its first meeting of the year at Hart House yesterday. Norm Williams was elected chairman by acclamation. Dpug Wilson of Meds was elected vice-chairman and Ken Wheeland, SPS, won the post of secretary.

The Meds representative asked that the Meds team be allowed to be moved into Group Two of the two groups which make up the football league. They asked to be changed mainly on the basis of low enrollment and the many injuries sustained during the previous years.

The First Group last year contained SPS-1, Vic, UC, and Meds. Trinity, St. Mikes, Forestry, Denis and SPS-2 made up the Second Group. The only logical teams to move out of the second group would have been Trinity or St. Mikes in order to allow Meds to come into the second group. After much debate, the matter was referred to the Intramural Sports Committee since a vote held on the issue was deadlocked.

Skule, asked, for permission to have two teams this year divided by their ability. Permission was granted last year for the past year only. One objection that was raised to this, this year was that the Skule team was too powerful the way it was being formed. One delegate suggested that Skule divide its teams according to years, that is: first and second year students would form one team while third and fourth year students would form another

A vote was taken on Skule's proposal, but this was deadlocked also. Both matters were then referred to the Intramural Sports Committee which meets next Monday at 5 p.m.

Since both matters could not be settled at the meeting, the delegates could not settle the matter of how the playoffs should be run this year. It was decided that the delegates would meet once again before the playing season began in order to settle this

There will be a brief but important meeting for all members of the sports staff today at 1:15 in the Varsity office. This includes John Vojtech, John Brooks, and Bill Lambie.

There are still openings for keen sportswriters on the Varsity. Those of you who have discovered that surplus of time that all students are finding about now are welcome to join us in the office at 1:15 today.

Intramural football teams will be using the Canadian Rugby Union rules for the year 1954. They will not be using the new amended football rules which are being experimented with in the Intercollegiate League, this year. The Intramural Office is in need of experienced football referees. It is hoped that the recent increase in wages will entice the odd soul to come forth. The wages compare favorably, it is said, with those received by referees in the high school leagues.

SHAKE THOSE M

The Blues met McGill in Montreal the week after absorbing a 20-0 shellacking from Queen's. Led by a twenty-two point effort by Steve Oneschuk they trampled the Redmen 43-6, then won again 36-12 the following week in Toronto. Wally Bulchak saw plenty of action in the second game, and is seen here being stopped by a McGill defender. Rick Adrian moves in for the kill. Bulchak should have a tremendous season this year, after moving to the half line.

Halfback Rich Bethune makes a large gain in the third quarter of the crucial final league game with Queen's. Counted on heavily this year to take the place of Steve Oneschuk, both offensively and defensively, Bethune broke a bone in his neck in an exhibition game with the OAC Aggies just last week, and will be lost to the Blues for the balance of the season.

Not Empty-handed

The Toronto representatives to the conference of our National Student Federation might have been going out to Edmonton with no policy whatsoever. This has happened many times before and has resulted in similar sounding conferences for year after year as delegates repeatedly battle over the same points, often unwittingly.

Fortunately, they are not.

We would like to congratulate Mr. Murray Mogan, the law representative to the SAC for his courage and fortitude in declaring his dissatisfaction with the present state of well-paid inaction in NFCUS, a dissatisfaction obviously felt by many of the SAC members present Wednesday night.

We would like to congratulate him for daring to propose even a radical measure in order to achieve some noticeable result.

We would like to congratulate Mr. Mogan for realizing that reform begins at home and stirring up the council and president to "new business" in taking a little forethought about NFCUS.

Is it possible that Mr. Mogan's "breath of fresh air" may carry over to the conference? Or is it too much to hope?

Some Football History

This Topped Them All

As last Saturday's 31-5 win, over McMaster shows, the Blues can chalk up some impressive victories. But they're not within shouting distance of what is undoubtedly the world's record set in Atlanta Ga., on Oct. 7, 1916.

Alumni of both Cumberland University and Georgia Tech look with pride on that game—the former because their team received the worst drubbing in football history, the latter because at the end of the game the score stood:

GEORGIA TECH 222 - CUMBERLAND 0.

"We took a glorious licking", said Cumberland manager George Allen. "There were several plays on which we lost only three yards."

By 1916, Cumberland, once Southern champion, had turned from football to Law. Its baseball team, however, soundly trounced Georgia Tech in the spring of that year. With students and Alumni burning for revenge on the gridiron, Tech football coach "Wizard", Heisman offered Cumberland a $500 guarantee to come to Atlanta for a football game. Cumberland rashly accepted.

Heisman decided to use two teams alternating by quarters with a steak dinner to the team that rolled up the biggest score. As only sixteen Cumberland players arrived in Atlanta, Heisman agreed to shorten the quarters to twelve and one-half minutes.

At the end of the second quarter the score stood 126-0 with both Tech teams tied for the steak dinner. When it appeared that Cumberland would run out of reserves, the second half quarters were shortened to ten minutes.

On one of the plays Cumberland's Allen attempted a punt. Unfortunately the ball struck his own centre on the back of the head and knocked him over.

Perhaps the most unusual play of the game occurred when Tech kicker Jim Preas punted over Cumberland's goal line. The ball struck a Cumberland player and bounced back into Preas' hands for a touchdown.

Late in the game a Cumberland player shouted to a team-mate to pick up a fumbled ball. Glancing at the Tech steamrollers hearing down on him the second player shouted back, "Pick up yourself, you dropped it."

The records established that day have yet to be broken: biggest score; greatest number of touchdowns; most converts kicked by one player (18); greatest number of yards gained (978) by many others. Neither team made a first down. Cumberland couldn't and Georgia Tech made no touchdowns instead.

and even greater era for Varsity ball teams. Ever since the season of 1937 the Blues had gone winless in London, and the sportswriters spoke gloatingly of the Western jinx.

Year after year the Blues would come within an ace of breaking the time-honored jinx, and year after year, the Mustangs would stop them dead. Sometimes they tied, as in 1951 when they won the championship because Western couldn't beat them in Toronto. Other times they were trampled, as in 1948, and then went on to win the championship, again because the Mustangs failed in Toronto. But they couldn't win in London.

It remained for the '54 Blues to crack that jinx, and in the best way possible, with hard-headed, down-to-earth ball-playing. In small print they call it guts. When Bobby Kimoff gathered in Don Getty's desperation punt with less than a minute left, they knew they had those Mustangs beaten, and right in their own back yard.

And now we sit in on the new era. Can't say we'll be around when it ends.

With the chips down the Blues faced Queens in the last game of the schedule. A loss meant elimination, while a win created a three-way tie for first place. Here, an unidentified Queen's tackler pulls down Al Riva, with Jack Strapp moving up in the background. With Queen's ahead 9-0 in the dying minutes of the fourth quarter, the Blues struck for two touchdowns to pull the win out of the fire 11-9.

While Western and Queen's fought for the right to test the Blues the following Saturday, Varsity played the first east-west Intercollegiate bowl game in Vancouver. Here, in the fourth quarter, Steve Oneschuk eludes Thunderbird fullback Jim Boulding for a small gain. Sparked by the inspired quarterbacking of Ted Duncan, the Birds held the Blues to a slim 5-3 margin.

The Blues tied the Mustangs twice during the regular schedule to force an unprecedented three-way tie for first place between Queen's, Western and Toronto. Western's John Girvin is being brought down by an unidentified Varsity tackler in the first half of a thrilling league opener played in Varsity Stadium. Blue centre John Wismer is on the right. Steve Oneschuk kicked a field goal, and scored and converted a touchdown for the 9-9 draw.

1954 captain Don Smith reaches for a pass against Queen's in the last game of the regular schedule. Tricolor defensive fullback Jim Cruikshank moves in to stop the catch. Back for another season with the Blues, Don appears headed for his best season in Intercollegiate ball yet.

Cheerleaders Chosen

Cheerleaders, Bloops and the Float Parade were featured in the Blue & White report read at the last SAC meeting.
The final results from the cheerleading tryouts were announced. From 45 aspirants, there were 8 chosen: Helen Mitchel, II POT; Mary Jane Champ, III Music; Pat Eiseley, III PHE; Pam Cooke, II UC; Barb Gratton, II St. Mikes; Mike McEwan, I POT; Sandra MacFarlane, II Vic; Gay Rainey, I Nursing; Don Bassin, III UC; Frank Wawrychuk, II SPS, Bob Jeans, II PHE. The cheerleaders will be at the game in London tomorrow.

The theme for the Float Parade, to be held Home-coming Weekend, was announced: "University of Toronto, 1984." "This should provide a great deal of scope to each faculty", said Tom Thomson, Chairman of the Blue & White Society.
When questioned as to a change in the cheerleading uniform, Thomson replied "Personally, I like the blazers—but perhaps there will be some changes made during the winter. We are considering a whole new outfit, but it is too late to have them for this year. We want time to obtain something of good quality."

Conservatory Music Today

ENGLISH FOLK SONG

Miss Maud Karpeles will present the first of this year's series of "score-study lectures" in the Concert Hall of the Royal Conservatory of Music, at three o'clock this afternoon.
Miss Karpeles has achieved distinction through her studies of the folk-music of the English language, especially that of the Kentucky-Tennessee basins. She is Honorary Secretary of the International Folk Music Council. Miss Karpeles will illustrate her talk with recordings of folk-song made in the districts under survey.

RECORDERS AND THEIR MUSIC

Also in the Conservatory Concert Hall, at 8:30 tonight, Mr. Wolfgang Grunsky will discuss the recorder family, illustrating his talk with music played by himself and a small group. Mr. Grunsky is on the faculty of the Conservatory, and is resuming his individual and group lessons on the recorder this year.

University Health Service

Medical Examination
All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before October 15th. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Graham In Glory

American products suffer, less from inferiority, than from over-advertisement. When we finally see them, our reaction is not: "pretty good!", but "is that all?" One such product is Dr. Billy Graham.

We heard of a man who had overcome souls in their thousands, in all the great soul maris of the world; a man whose eloquence had softened the hardest, and humbled the most blasé. For weeks in advance his eyes gleamed at us from every wall, and his name from every headline. What a man! we thought, and trembled deliciously.

We saw Dr. Billy Graham. We listened to a man with an excellent skilled delivery, effective changes of pace and pitch, and a humour, attended by the jokes he told to break the tension. We heard a trained voice, a full resonant voice, with the deep visceral thrill of Sinatra in his prime. But what did he say?

He said "We have the H bomb". The world is in a mess. To-morrow you may die. He asked for panaceae. No one had one. He suggested one. If everyone was a Christian, there would be no wars. If more people were Christians, there would be fewer wars. Otherwise, Boom!!

He left us wondering if the H bomb is more likely to frighten us sinners into Christianity than it is to frighten us into Peace.

But, at the very least, we owe a debt to the Christians on the Campus. They have given us the pleasure of listening to a polished, proficient public speaker, a master of effective restraint, as well

Alex Antics

Music Hall (or vaudeville) at the Royal Alexandra Theatre can be a welcome dessert to a meal of "great art." It goes on until October 8 and is well worth experiencing. The initiated won't need to be told about Tessie O'Shea or Norman Evans — they've seen and heard these wonderful people before. If you haven't been initiated into the fraternity of British music hall, then you've missed a wonderful experience.

Tessie O'Shea gets star billing and consequently closes the evening. "All of me . . . take all of me," she sings, and there's a lot to take — all of four hundred pounds. She has the proverbial good humour of all fat people. You might call her Britain's answer to Sophie Tucker. She doesn't have much of a voice, yet somehow her warm personality, and the tremendous gusto that she puts into everything she does, makes each song — humorous or sentimental — a thrilling experience. She made the Royal Alex into a small, intimate night club.

This quality of making a large theatre into a small intimate group is difficult to acquire, yet most of the other performers also have it. I don't know how to describe Betty Jumel. Where Two-Ton Tessie is enormous Betty is minute. She's about five foot nothing, yet she fills the theatre with her presence. She reminds me of a combination of Anna Russell, Hermione Gingold and Joyce Grenfell. Whether, she's

van variety, she's a riot. Satire is more sophisticated than the earthy humour spiced with a little vulgarity that is the usual music-hall fare. Consequently, Betty Jumel didn't get quite the ovation she deserved for her guying of arabesques in her satirical ballet, The Swoning Sparrow. For this reviewer, however, Betty Jumel stole the show.

Norman Evans specialises in character studies — a Lancashire workman going to the dentist; a large-bosomed lady attending an amateur opera rehearsal with Betty Jumel; or an elderly Lancashire washerwoman type with a brood of kids to worry about. He seems to have a face made of rubber and a real sense for basic emotions. His duet on the trumpet with a glove-puppet panda was filled with pathos.

It is heartening to know that the one-way traffic of the movies hasn't yet killed the two-way

The Russian film presentation of Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet ballet abounds in technical failings. These, however, detracted only slightly from the excellence of artistry of the dancing itself. I was overwhelmed by the power of the dancers' interpretations, particularly in the roles of Juliet, Mercutio, and Tybalt.

The main defect of this production could have been removed simply by silencing the narrator, or by giving him a script in keeping with the stately grace of the Shakespearean original. The sets too, overweight, overlavish, cluttering the stage, at times were in direct contrast to the lighter, freer character of the dance. A brilliant matching of music, sound track and filmed action was marred by the absence of such sounds as the clatter of swords and the usually audible foot-movements of the grand jete and bourree.

Camera angling and film editing of this production lessened the effect attained by the exceptional dancing of the corps de ballet. The vivid carnival scene, which gave a tantalizing taste of the possible power of the corps, was highlighted by the brilliant leaps and contortions of a jester.

The most outstanding dancer in the production, Russia's prima ballerina, Ulanova, gave a mature and inspired interpretation of a youthful uninhibited Juliet. Her technical perfection alone is breath-taking, yet even this effect was heightened by her sincere understanding of the role. The debonnaire Mercutio was brilliantly portrayed, (while) Tybalt's face in well-placed close-ups was masterful in its pantomime and mimicry. Romeo, merely a crutch for Juliet's arabesques, was adequate. The Wagnerian gestures of Lady Capulet, however, were in definite contrast to the carefully constructed atmosphere, and at times were almost farcical.

The balcony scene was the most memorable of the film, in part because it was the most successful union of ballet form and movie technique, and in part because it presented the best dancing of the production. Untrammeled by any clumsy sets, Romeo and Juliet floated off from the Capulet garden to a lovers' limbo, to return to the garden at the end of the pas-de-deux. Here was the best example of what film could do to ballet — get rid of hurried curtains and clanking mechanics, with an instantaneous change of setting and viewpoint to fit the mood of the moment.

UC Freshmen, Sophs Mock Graham Tactics In Yonge St. Parade

An attempted lampoon of Billy Graham and his techniques was the theme of last night's initiation for University College Residence freshmen. Parading down Yonge Street in academic gowns and bare feet, the freshmen were led by upper classmen to Billy's headquarters on Yonge Street where they sang hymns and cavorted wildly in mimicry of Dr. Graham's picturesque methods.

Then, singing as they went, the freshmen were herded on down to an auction gallery in front of which they set up their show. One downy-cheeked neophyte read excerpts from Billy's exhortations while the others, in rehearsed antiphony responded with spontaneous exclamations of agreement and support. One freshman, now a former resident, had the unmitigated gall to heckle but was quickly silenced.

Bystanders, unimpressed with the University College wits, criticized the students for "making fun of religion". Nods of disapproval were plentiful as the initiation went its course and, when they failed to attract a crowd of more than 50 people, the group moved back up Yonge Street, stopping in front of Bassel's Tavern for another brief fling before calling it a night.

The exact purpose of the stunt was not clear and the effect achieved by it even less so but a good time seemed to have been had by all.

All Toronto dailies were notified of the stunt and photographers were on hand to record the brilliant foray of University College into the battleground of theology and evangelism.

U of T Students Win Scholarships By Imperial Oil

Three University of Toronto students are among 11 Canadians named to-day as winners of Imperial Oil scholarships valued at $700 a year for four years. The scholarships this year have increased $75 in value over those of last year.

The winners are Beverly Joan Finch, Modern Languages and Literature, from Sarnia; Neil Gebbie who not only won three scholarships but also excelled in all school sports at University of Toronto Schools; and Barbara Pinkham, Modern Languages, from Leaside.

The scholarships are open to children of employees of Imperial Oil and are awarded on the basis of scholastic standing, character, and extra-curricular activities.

The company also announced a new annual grant of $500 corresponding to each scholarship student. The university is to use the grant at its own discretion.

Books And Jobs

The Book Exchange is now well stocked. Students who couldn't obtain books previously will now find many books on the shelves.

"A tremendous response to the request for books has filled the shelves of the SAC Book Exchange," said Manager Henri Le-Sueur (IV C & F), "and students who have been disappointed before will now be able to make their purchases."

The exchange is still accepting books to be sold, and there is still a great demand for books. The exchange, which can be reached through the side door, 119 St.

George St., is open 9 to 5 weekdays and 9 to 12 Saturdays.

The SAC employment service has moved this year to the SAC Building, formerly known as the Observatory Building. The office of Mr. Halse, the employment director, can be reached through the side door of the building any week day from 9 to 5.

The office was moved from its former location in Hart House because the space was needed.

Mr. E. A. MacDonald, the permanent Treasurer of the SAC, moved out of the room which Mr. Halse now occupies, into a room in the back of the Observatory which was formerly not used.

The Housing service is still operating, also in the SAC Building.

disease . . . this disease is called sin. Sin produces symptoms of crime, immorality and prejudice." Graham said that if it were possible to inject the human race with a vaccine that would make us all honest, unselfish and loving these problems would be ended.

"We must find this type of vaccine," said Graham. "It is found in the person who walked the shores of Galilee 2,000 years ago. He taught an idealistic set of relationships whereby we could live peaceably together. But before you can live up to these principles you must be born again."

"One day when I was 18 I made up my mind to follow Him and serve Him . . . I surrendered every area of my personality to Jesus Christ," he said. "My whole perspective of life changed — inward peace came into my soul, and has remained there ever since."

Graham told the story of three Americans, who although they had millions of dollars were miserable. He described them as feeding their bodies and starving their souls.

"Most of us have excellent physiques but possess neglected souls. Jesus Christ said he could get rid of the disease of the soul, and I could bring hundreds of people, the brightest intellects and the best of athletes, from both sides of the Atlantic who could testify to this fact," said Dr. Graham.

delegate to NFCUS, said, "The basic thing we are taking to this NFCUS Conference is ourselves. The people who have elected us should have full confidence in our ability to come back with the desired business accomplished."

"It is a new organization, and needs a great deal more money towards its administration than might be expected."

A Council member, supporting the necessity of a binding mandate, reminded the delegates, "You are our representatives to NFCUS, not NFCUS' representatives to SAC!"

Shoemaker stated, "It is harmful to send out a mandate which restricts the delegates to merely mouthing words."

John Burbidge, III Vic, commented on the motion, "It is absurd. This organization is still getting on its feet from World War II setbacks."

Several positive proposals to the delegates were made in the informal discussion that followed the meeting. Abolishment of compulsory student payments to Unemployment Insurance, an all Canadian Student drama competition, a music competition, student rates for meals and reduction in travel rates were suggested.

A national news bulletin on NFCUS accomplishments, available to each Canadian student, was proposed.

Muntz Shines As Mustangs Beaten 20-2

By MAX ROSENTHAL

London, Oct. 2, (Staff). The Varsity Blues out-played, out-faxed, and out-scored the University of Western Ontario Mustangs, 20-2, here Saturday in the first intercollegiate football game of the year.

Leading 14-1 at the end of the first half, collectively and individually the Blues displayed offensive and defensive excellence, scoring and oppressing efficiently and effectively, handing the Mustangs their worst defeat in the last decade.

Behind the blocking of John Wismer, Bob Waugh, Earl Ford, Santo Martini, Walt Radzik, Gerry Lansky, Fred Smale, and Burt Kellock, Blue runners swept the ends and stormed the centre gaining a total of 224 yards.

In the middle of the first period quarterback Ed Skrzypek hurled a long, looping pass over the heads of defenders into the arms of Burt Kellock who scooted home for the Blues' first touchdown. The play covered 70 yards. Peter Maik converted.

Halfback Phil Muntz initiated the drive for the second major. Taking a pitch-out from Harry Wilson Muntz swept around end from the Western 40 and kicked and spured his way to the 15. Two plays later, at the beginning of the second quarter Skrzypek bootlegged and carried around end for the major. Maik converted, making the score 12-0 for Blues.

After scoring their early touchdowns the Blues settled back into a defensive setup the Mustangs never sufficiently penetrated. Western's highly-touted Willie Casanova never had a chance to vindicate his rave press notices, being rushed by Gene Choros-tecki, Don Johnston, John Bodrug and the rest of the Varsity wing (Continued on Page 3)

"Fabulous" Education Says Freshie Went To One Lecture, Six Dances

The University of Toronto freshie is something of a paradox, a Varsity poll conducted Friday indicates.

Most of 13 freshies interviewed liked both Billy Graham and the U of T social life, had attended all their lectures but done very little studying. "I'm here to get an education and improve my mind" was a usual comment.

They thought their "state of virtue" had remained unimpaired during the first week of school. "I'm here to get an education," she said. "I thought my first week here was fabulous."

Only one had skipped more than one lecture. This young lady had missed 19 out of 20, but managed to squeeze in six dances during her first week.

"I'm here to get an education," she said. "I thought my first week here was fabulous."

The freshies were not dazzled by University men. Just two girls said they were very interested in a boy they had met within the last week. Two others said they didn't like the social life.

The freshies attended 36 dances among them, or nearly three a person. Comments on the first week were "hectic", "terrific", "wonderful", "a lot of fun", "I like it".

Asked why they had come to University, six freshies replied they wanted an education. One girl admitted she was attending "to get a BA and a man."

Another coed explained her coming with: "After fifth form was so hard, I figured nothing after that could be as bad. University's very different from High School. There's much more freedom."

One girl emphatically stated she did not come to get a man. "As far as boys go, I can do pretty well for myself outside the University," she said.

The only question answered un-animously by the students was "Do you feel your state of virtue has been impaired?" Although some felt the moral standard at the U of T was lower than at

WHAT'S YOUR ANSWER?

1. What is your object in attending University? What do you think of your first week?
2. Have you done any studying? If so, how much? On what subjects?
3. Is the social life to your liking? How many dances have you attended? Are you very interested in a boy you have met within the last week or so?
4. Do you think University students drink too much?
5. Do you find the moral standard at University lower than at home? Do you feel your state of virtue has been impaired?
6. What do you think of Billy Graham?
7. Have you attended all your lectures? How many have you missed out of what total?

home, all denied that the change had had any effect on them.

Billy Graham was described as "a powerful orator", "sincere", "the greatest American religious revivalist", "a dramatic actor", by some of the freshies.

A few didn't like him. "I preferred to eat my lunch than to go and hear him," said one girl. "I don't think he'd appeal to me," said another. A coed's feeling of "modified rapture" expressed a middle-of-the-road policy.

Drinking does not appall the majority of freshies interviewed. Three thought students drank too much, but a typical comment was "I haven't been here long enough to observe."

An unidentified freshmen presented the male point of view.

The student, who said he came to University to bid for a professorship, proved very studious, missing one of 50 lectures and doing "quite a bit" of studying in history and languages.

The student attended no dances. He thought Billy Graham was a "valiant heart in a hopeless cause", and when asked if the moral standard was lower at University than at home, said "No. Impossible!"

Touring U of T Law Student Discovers Politics, Hospitality African Highlights

Women tourists seem to have more luck than men travelling through West Africa.

Marty Friedland (I Law), recently returned from a two-month tour of that area, says they "get the cream of the gifts and attention."

"Everybody who visits a West African community is loaded down with presents. The women in our group of five would get gifts of handicrafts and carvings. The men got things like a bunch of carrots, or a live chicken."

Mr. Friedland says the World University Service sponsored tour was a real eye-opener about African life.

"Frankly we went there with 'Hollywood ideas' about witch doctors, wild animals and dense jungles. We found instead a surprising political maturity."

"We found political issues discussed with the same zeal baseball is discussed here. One day just the report that a lion had been seen near one community was the headline story in a newspaper."

The other members of the group were Al Cairns, leader of the group, a graduate student at the University of Toronto; Paul Adams, McMaster University; Hamilton, Carol Bleackley, Mount Allison University, Sackville, N.B.; and Nita Sederis, Dalhousie University, Halifax, N.S.

Discussing the political scene, Friedland said: "In the Gold Coast there is a stronger feeling of national unity than in Nigeria which is split into three sections, each more concerned about their own interests than those of the country.

"It is easy to see why the Gold Coast is nearing complete self-government and Nigeria is not."

African politicians were much like their Canadian counterparts. "They were all really sharp and had all the answers," he said.

Friedland said one of the best days the group spent was at Mousi secondary school where they officiated at the opening of a dispensary built by the students with money donated by WUS.

"The students were more interested in WUS and its activities than in the UN."

One of the highlights of the day was the arrival of the Oramolusi of Ejuba-Egba, a paramount chief, who pulled up in a car with a liveried trumpeter heralding his arrival. The trumpeter was seated on the fender of the vehicle.

"We found a tremendous respect for Canada. They all seemed to feel Canada is more objective about problems of imperialism than Britain. They have come to

Bickford Park Gets New Look School Frosh Down To Earth

Engineering freshmen this week will clean up a 10-acre central Toronto park.

This afternoon they will be taken to Bickford Park in city trucks to start this year's constructive initiations.

Under the direction of city foremen the park will be cleaned, sodded and re-seeded. All materials for the work — picks, shovels and even uniforms — will be supplied by the city.

The new Engineers will be organized in groups of from six to eight men with an upperclassman over each group. The Skule band will be on hand early this afternoon to give the men a send-off. Work on the park will continue all week.

CUP SERVES CANADA

From Panty Raids To Conferences

Elsewhere in this paper, mention is made of NFCUS — one of the national organizations of Canadian university students. These next few paragraphs are an attempt to supply the pertinent data — the aims, ambitions, and accomplishments — of Canadian students' other national organization, the Canadian University Press. Canadian University Press (commonly known as CUP) is an organization of twenty-one university newspapers across Canada — from the Maritimes to British Columbia. Its main purpose is to provide news coverage for all Canadian universities for local and national events — for panty raids as well as national conferences.

During the academic year, CUP members exchange stories and photos by mail—and by wire, if necessary. Each member regularly sends copies of its issues to all other CUP members. But if a big story, of national interest, breaks on any campus, news is immediately flashed through the CUP wire service to all the other student newspapers. Thus, if 500 students are expelled at the University of British Columbia, the story may be carried the next morning by the McGill Daily, in Montreal.

CUP has no permanent home, and no permanent executive. But each year during the Christmas vacation, a conference for all CUP members is held.

At this conference any difficulties in the CUP system are ironed out, and the executive paper for the next year is elected.

CUP was born on New Year's Day in 1938. Twelve university newspaper Editors met in Winnipeg, that year, inspired with the idea of a national organization to exchange news. The infant CUP was born of their ideas. For two years the organization—set up as a national news agency—was sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students. It graduated from that sponsorship and has since remained as an independent organization, occasionally praising, but often sharply condemning the efforts of its parent, NFCUS.

During the war years, military training played a large part on Canadian camps, and interest in university journalism sharply declined. CUP accordingly suffered. But though it faltered, CUP never quite disappeared, and with the end of the war, interest in it quicken, and CUP became a thriving organization.

CUP now has a membership of twenty-one newspapers; it may in the near future have more. With an increasing membership, an increasing coverage of Canadian university news is possible.

CUP continually tries to improve the news service it gives. The wire and mail service has several times been reorganized to make it more efficient and inexpensive. Last year the first CUP wire photo was sent to university papers.

But CUP is more than a national news agency. Each year it holds contests, conducts surveys, and awards trophies for the best in college journalism. And the national conferences held each year provide the opportunity for CUP to do still something more.

It was at the 50-51 conference that the national resolution supporting the "full freedom of expression of opinion" in college newspapers was formulated, and in succeeding years member papers have come out strongly on the side of freedom of the press. Efforts to eliminate restrictions on the freedom of Canadian university papers brought nine simultaneous editorials in college papers rapping censorship in student publications.

Durham N. C. (Exchange). The largest number of students ever to apply in a single year was reported at Duke university this year. The enrollment has risen to an estimated 5100 at the University. The School of Nursing at Duke opened its twenty-fifth year with a record enrollment of 280 students.

Stewart Scores Three As Gaels Lace Redmen

Kingston, Oct. 2 — (CUP) — Pint-sized Ron Stewart ran wild in Richardson Stadium Saturday afternoon, picking off import quarterback Gus Braccia's devastating passes for three touchdowns, as the Queen's University Golden Gaels romped to a 30-10 victory over the McGill Redmen.

For the first time in several years the Gaels presented a powerful aerial offensive, with Braccia doing most of the tossing, and with Stewart his favorite target. The ex-Riverdale speedster got in behind a weak McGill defence for touchdown jaunts of 45, 68, and 73 yards, while Gary Schreider gathered in a 62-yard strike from Braccia for another major. Braccia picked up the other score from ten yards out early in the first quarter. Jocko Thompson converted four of the Gael touchdowns, and kicked a single, while Bob Hutcheson tallied both the McGill majors.

The Redmen outtrashed Queen's on the ground 180 to 145 yards, but were unable to find an answer to the Gael's diversified attack. Bob Hutcheson, Rick Adrian, and Joe Cronin were best on the ground for McGill, while ex-Columbia quarterback Dick Carr directed the Redmen attack well, but did not shine offensively.

The Queen's line, one of the heaviest in Gael history, played well throughout. End Lou Bruce was a standout with his deadly downfield tackling, while tackle Jim Hughes and centre Gary Lewis helped open huge holes on offence.

The Gaels will meet their biggest test of the season to date when they tangle with the Varsity Blues this Saturday in Toronto.

Semi-Finals In Varsity Tennis Are On Today

Skule's Dave Alexander and Barry Smith and Vic's Bill Grove advanced to the semi-final round of the University tennis tournament in play Friday at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club.

Alexander eliminated fifth-seeded Harold Browne (SPS) in flight two action, while Smith smothered St. Mike's Ed Scholfield 6-3, 6-0. Grove whipped sixth-seeded Bruce Sonley (PHE) in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

Top-seeded Robin Arnold (Meds), runner-up last fall to Ken Lawson, eliminated Keith Bonnyman (SPS) 6-2, 6-0, then topped Dent's Stan Goldman 6-2, 6-4, to move into the quarter-finals today. Arnold will meet the winner of Tattle vs. Fine for the fourth berth in the semi-final round. Tattle defeated A. Baume (Meds) in an early match to move into second-round play in flight one.

Browne had defeated UC's Gord Rice before losing to Alexander in the quarter-final in flight two, 14-12, 3-6, 6-2. Alexander eliminated M. Rotterman 7-5, 8-6 in a morning match.

Third-flight play saw Grove down Berkley (UC) 6-1, 3-6, 6-4, while Sonley eliminated Ebenhardt (Vic) 6-4, 6-4 before bowing to Grove in the quarter-final. Smith whipped Ian Holden (Trin) 6-1, 6-3 and Scholfield topped Kutt (UC) 2-6, 6-1, 6-2, then lost to Smith in the quarter-final.

Trackmen Opening Season Interfaculty Meet Thursday

The University's track and field hopefuls are now fully underway with their training schedules. Under the capable guidance of field coach Hal Brown and track coach Fred Foot, the aspirants are being put through their paces daily from 4 to 6 p.m. at Varsity Stadium.

All students, particularly freshmen, who are interested in trying out for the team are urged to turn out. With a tough struggle looming to return the Intercollegiate track laurels won last year, more competitors are needed, especially field men, hurdlers and sprinters.

Having lost through ineligibility the services of field men John Ramsell and star hurdler Norm Williams, the coach expects the hurdles and field events to be the weak spots. Dick Harding, a three event winner last year, is Varsity's only triple threat contender. Dick will be a hard man to beat in his specialties, the 100, 220, and 440 yard dashes.

This year a fine crop of prospects include middle distance runner Bill Varey, hurdler Al Gardner, sprinters Brian Deacon and Clair Crozier, arnie jumper Walt Miladinov and high-jumper Dave West. The graduation of three-mile champ Herb Tilson and Bill Eckersley has thinned the middle distance ranks. Adequate replacement is hoped, however, from the likes of sophomores Bill Gelling and Bruce Hughes, and veterans Jim Nicolson, Doug McIntire and Tom Stroud. The first intramural track meet will be held at Varsity Stadium this Thursday, October 6 at 1:00 p.m. Entries are now being accepted at the Intramural Office.

There are still several openings in the Varsity sports staff for keen types who want to air their views on football, soccer, tennis, and golf this fall; and hockey, basketball, lacrosse, volleyball, and water polo in the winter. If you have designs on becoming another Damon Runyon, Westbrook Pegler, Ring Lardner, or Paul Gallico, join our select group now. We need you.

Irish After Mulock

The general consensus of opinion on the St. Mike's campus is that Christmas will come early this year for their intramural football team. The present that they have been asking for nigh on these many years is, of course, the Mulock Cup. They've come close in the last three years and this year those sugar plums are dancing in their heads. This, they cry like the fabled Brooklyn Dodgers of baseball fame, is the year.

There has been a general shift on the St. Mike's team which ranges from the football team itself to a new staff of coaches, Joe Seime, a former Varsity Blue star, Jack Pellock and Barry Browning, former McMaster greats, have come up with a new bag of tricks which they hope will be better than ever before.

The big news is that the Irish will be using the straight "T" formation once again. They've junked last year's formation which confused most of their opponents. The reason for this is that the Double Blue expect to have a romping good ground attack as well as a soaring high serial attack.

As for the team itself, the Irish have been fortunate in getting some good rookie recruits this year, since they have lost several good star players to both graduation and the Varsity Blues. Leo McGuigan, Ron Renzetti and Bill Priestner have come back to haunt the opposition. Mike Vasko and Tim Donovan are expected to spark the line as they did last year.

At the time of writing all of the positions on the team are being tightly contested for, as every player has the mental attitude that loyal rooters for the Irish deserve to see the best from the best players.

Couple their attitude with a pair of sharp ball handling quarterbacks, aided and abetted by a group of fast, shifty ends and backs, who will be let loose through the opposition by the durability of a tough line, you may have the answer or the key to the Mulock Cup of '55. It is a bit early to be predicting but cast a careful eye at the 1955 edition of the St. Mike's football team.

Rugger Blues Stop Nomads 6-0

Despite last week's injuries and the nightly invasions of the back campus by Sonshine's Space Cadets, Varsity succeeded in beating Nomads II fifteen by six points to nothing on Saturday afternoon.

The Varsity fifteen were hardly recognizable as the team which had defeated the Canucks the week before. The first half of the match saw a try scored by Stan Lepper after a fine run. Then Chris Jacques completed the scoring for the whole match by directing a penalty kick safely and surely through the posts to put Varsity six up at the end of the first half.

PARTY

Rip-dee-doo — it's another Varsity party coming up, the first of the current college season. For all you Varsity news-hounds and houndresses, it's pick up your heels and way we go for an evening of fun, sandwiches and clinking glasses. The day: Friday; the time: 9 p.m.; the address — well, you can pick that up in The Varsity office.

line. On the ground Casanova carried six times for a net loss of four yards. On one occasion he was nailed behind his own goal line by Chorostecki for a safety. Western's top runner was Ralph Simmons gaining 40 of Western's 55 yards.

Any pre-season doubts concerning Blues' defensive backfield were quickly erased. Al Riva, Jack Rogers, Skrypek and Muntz were stalwarts. Riva intercepted one, knocked down another.

Skrypek continued his sharp play with two interceptions, good tackling and creditable kicking. He averaged 44.8 yards.

The Blues played eagerly in the second and third quarters. Quarterback Wilson kept the ball on the ground insuring against any possible interceptions. Under his direction the Blue ground attack went very well.

Muntz' shift to halfback had no adverse effects. The speed boy was Blues' best, gaining 105 yards in twelve tries for an average of 8.7 yards per carry. Rogers gained 61 yards in twelve carries for an average of 4.6.

It was not until the fourth quarter that the Blues' attack started to roll again. Riva set up the third major when he intercepted a pass at the Western 38 and ran it up to the 18, a penalty to Western moved the ball to the nine. Two plays later Muntz took a pitch out from Wilson and went over for the major. Mark converted Western's only scores were two singles kicked by Ted Roman.

Max's Muses, ... Downfield tackling by Lansky and Waugh was slightly tremendous. ... Maik called the Blues to win by three touchdowns. ... The only impressive backs of the starting Diamond-T were Simmons and John Girvin. ... Girvin completed three in a row taking the ball to the Varsity 21 before Skrypek intercepted to stop a last threat. ... Halfback John Sweeney of Western received a concussion when he ran into one of Muntz's knees.

The backs were particularly impressive and apart from a little scrappy ball handling in the early part of the game they seemed to have the measure of the opposition within the first fifteen minutes. Their marking and tackling in defence was sound and fast. And yet they were still able to take the offensive and get a movement going whenever they were able to pick up a loose ball.

Varsity are still experimenting with their forwards, and the pack, though individually good, do not seem to be able to settle down in the tight scrums. This is, however, compensated for by their line-out play and their speed in the loose. The Nomads pack comprised heavier and more experienced players but the terrier tactics of the Varsity did not allow them to settle down.

For Varsity Harpur was particularly outstanding on the line-out, and the backs, who saw more than their share of the ball, were able to take advantage of his passes. Thus it is fair to say that though Varsity only scored twice the majority of the game took place in the Nomads half and quite a portion of it in their 25. Several times the Nomads were forced to touch down over their own line to save further score.

In a preliminary game played on the back campus, Varsity Seconds were defeated by Nomads III 9-5. William Chadwick scored and converted the Varsity try.

Soccer Teams Whip Western

The University of Toronto intercollegiate senior and intermediate soccer teams started off on the right foot Saturday afternoon in London when they took both their games from the University of Western Ontario, 7-0 and 5-0 respectively.

Under the leadership of Ed Bracht and John Riva who scored three goals each, the Blues played a powerful game. Western played well at first, but under pressure, crumbled. The other Blue soccer was Rod Green.

In the Baby Blue game Jim St. Rose and George O'Byrne scored two goals each, Dave Wood the other.

This year - a decision

This year will be a critical year in the history of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. McGill and Montreal, two of Canada's largest universities, have already withdrawn from the organization and show no great desire to return. Other universities are also considering pulling out of NFCUS, and on this campus a motion to put NFCUS in the deep freeze for five years lost out by a narrow 10-7 margin in the SAC.

Why is the existence of NFCUS being so roundly criticized in so many quarters? The reasons are not hard to find.

● NFCUS is expensive. This year it will cost Toronto students $5,000 to belong — 50c a person. This sum has to be taken from the already hard-pressed budgets of other campus activities.

● The NFCUS national office is ridiculously inefficient. For instance: this last spring the NFCUS Travel Service, run from the Ottawa headquarters, allowed non-students to purchase travel tickets. The agencies involved had sold the tickets to the NFCUS Travel Service at a special discount on the strict understanding that the tickets would only be resold to students. As a result of this improper handling, the travel agencies cancelled the NFCUS tours at the last moment, and many students who had booked through NFCUS were left stranded, with no possibilities of making other arrangements at such a late date.

The NFCUS national office has also mishandled the all-Canadian student Art competition. As well as not putting the paintings on tour as they were supposed to be, they do not even know at last report what city the paintings are now lost in.

And last March the National Office sent The Varsity not one but several "urgent" bulletins, in which we were informed who the National President of NFCUS for 1954-55 was — a fact we and every other interested student had known since last October.

And yet 90% of NFCUS's total budget is spent on administration.

● Any worth-while recent achievements that NFCUS has accomplished were working through local NFCUS committees on individual campuses. Last year the Toronto Scholarships NFCUS Committee did an excellent job — without much aid from the NFCUS national office. None of these student committees need such an expensive and unwieldy NFCUS structure in order to carry on their activities.

● Most of the significant achievements that NFCUS boasts about were done years ago — and an organization cannot live today on yesterday's work.

● National Conventions — like the one coming up at Edmonton next week — are to a large extent a waste of time and money. Because of insufficient preparation and a surplus of speeches, little is accomplished at such gatherings — although they are the only time when decisive action can be planned. The lack of planning can be illustrated by the fact

Language Study

By A. H. PIETRZYK

Believe it or not, we shall within a few years witness the emergence on the market of gadgets, electronic computers, that will all but dispense with the routine services of the run-of-the-mill linguist, translator, oral interpreter, and monitor.

The era of MT, as mechanical translation is nicknamed, was ushered in on January 7, 1954 when a public demonstration of an IBM 701 computer, "a Kitty Hawk of electronic translation", proved that a mere machine can translate Russian into English with reasonable efficiency. This may mean good news to the engineer who merely worries that "the damnable thing about speech is that it's full of variables varying all over the place all of the time." But to the man and woman now proceeding to a degree in modern languages and literatures this is no trifling matter, as it may someday mean the difference between a job and a place in the queue of the unemployed. MT is likely to create a labour problem in very much the same way as automation (that word!) has, recently, for the G.M. and Ford workers.

The thing to do, of course, is to study the problem—and if there is a doubt that a problem exists at all, a glance at W.N. Løcke's report on SPEECH TYPEWRITERS AND TRANSLATION MACHINES (PMLA, April 1955) might prove enlightening. Rather than raise a hue and cry about it, let us give some thought to the following conclusions.

According to the predictions of social scientists, automation is here to stay. It would be imprudent to try to oppose it. On the contrary, provided it is managed right, we can expect untold blessings from it, as Peter F. Drucker points out in a significant article (The Promise of Automation, Harper's Magazine, April 1955). However, on the eve of a wide-spread introduction of electronic translators, we must discuss their advantages and disadvantages wisely. As would be linguists we must see to it here and now, while still at college, that the kind of activity we are preparing for will not someday be taken care of better, faster, and more efficiently by a clever mechanical device.

It is clear that not all the areas of work with languages will be equally affected. It is hard to conceive, for example, that a cluster of tubes, wires and metal springs will ever turn out an adequate English rendition of either Goethe's FAUST or the poetry of Pushkin.

In fact, we can maintain a priori that this will never happen, that a gadget will never invade the realm of the living human mind and emulate its infinite capacity for artistic refinement and depth. While we sympathize with the more feasible ambitions of the engineers, it is our conviction, philosophically speaking, that not in a million years will they be able to endow their machines with a soul.

Apart from literature, the language graduate will still be needed for work in the foreign service. However, no longer will it be possible for someone with a nominal M.A. and a smattering of one or two foreign idioms to qualify for a diplomatic position. Such a career will, in the future, necessitate not only a knowledge of languages superior to the capacity of MT, but also the management of greater responsibilities for which the linguist will be freed by the time-saving mechanical translators.

It is also unlikely that the language-teaching profession will suffer in any way from the introduction of MT. On the contrary, it may even be benefited by the invention of a whole range of new mechanical teaching aids. Lastly, an entirely new field, born of the marriage of linguistics to electronics, will offer openings to the electronics-linguistics specialist.

This recognition, we must conclude, of what MT can or cannot do is now of the first importance in preparing oneself for a career in languages. The foreign-language worker will benefit greatly from technology as far as certain chores are concerned: We all know how exhausting looking up words in a huge dictionary can be. Technical prose, the language of scientific, military, or other aesthetically neutral material—these are areas in which MT will perhaps take over, and good riddance!

This will set the linguists, who spend years in preparation for their careers, free for more rewarding activities—activities inherently entailing a truly human use of human beings.

And in the long run this up-grading in the employment of man, an advantage of the electronic age, will perhaps bring the esteem of linguistics, a hitherto often underrated field, to the level befitting its nature.

OUR READERS WRITE

No Sentimental Rubbish Here!

That Jesus Christ is our only hope of ever finding a purpose in living or of ever having a satisfying existence, beside which our former life is insipid beyond compare, has been not only my own personal experience, but the experience of thousands of Christians throughout the ages.

When we allow Him to come into our hearts the things that begin to happen are so miraculous that it would be criminal not to endeavour to pass on the fact to our fellow men. So miraculous are they that we can only conclude that the God who made us not only knows what are the hidden springs that operate our beings (springs that thinkers and psychiatrists have vainly sought) but that He desires our highest good and our greatest joy.

If this appears to be intangible and sentimental rubbish, let any person try the sort of experiment that scientists employ with those things they cannot see directly. Let him try the experiment and note its effects.

Billy Graham, who spoke at Convocation Hall last Thursday, proclaimed a truer system of philosophy, a truer psychological theory than we can ever hope to hear in an academic lecture, because this system actually works in practice, with men.

Sanitation

The Editor,
The Varsity:

With reference to John McConnell's apt definition of Billy Graham in Wednesday's The Varsity, it seems to me that Mr. Graham may indeed be a plumber, but without plumbers many artists would long since have died because of unsanitary conditions.

R. F. I UC

Once More

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The National Federation of Canadian University Students is once more a topic of discussion. It is said that too much money is spent on administration, that the organization is "inefficient," that a 50-cents-a-person fee is too much.

I should venture to say that those who criticize NFCUS do not, in general, know what they are talking about. This is not to say that NFCUS is not in need of criticism, or that it is above criticism. But those who complain that their money goes for nothing never stop to think that NFCUS played a large part in gaining a $500,000 scholarship grant from the provincial government, that it has caused student railway fares to be reduced, that it sponsors valuable art, short story, and photography contests—that it does in fact save the student money.

The NFCUS committee on the Toronto campus is working to establish a Students' Discount Service, enabling students to receive discounts at various stores—substantial discounts.

To sum up: people who drivel on about how obnoxious NFCUS is are making fools of themselves, and the sooner they realize it the better. NFCUS is an institution; it needs constructive appraisal; those who rant and rave against it do precisely nothing.

Bill Smyth,
University of Toronto,
NFCUS Co-Chairman.

Art, Music and Drama

Roving I

Overdeveloped

I Am a Camera, currently showing at the Odeon Hyland and Christie, suffers through overdevelopment — overdevelopment, that is, from the play with which it still retains some tenuous connections. The trouble is that the things that made the play successful have disappeared, and have been replaced by something more puerile and less pointed.

Not that Camera isn't going to be successful—when this reviewer left after the early-evening screening, crowds were already being turned away. The cause of the invasion is plain. "Makes The Moon is Blue look a nursery rhyme!" raved Walter Winchell, etc., etc. Well, Julie Harris did say "virgin" once . . .

Unfortunately, the film didn't, or rather couldn't, make it clear enough that she wasn't one herself, or that she was one herself, or that she was anything at all. From a fascinatingly incoherent character with an amoral moral code, she has changed to a no-good with a heart of gold, a type that can be reasonably readily got across to the audience, and sneaked through the Hayes office.

All the same, it's her film, as the after-glow of her riotous and bald stage-performance on Broadway and on the road has colored her performance in spite of all the director had to do to make the play a film at all. Her sexy sibilants and her air of ingenuous abandon keep her the "marvellous kind of nymph" (a self-stylization) that she was when she was live on the live stage. This in spite of her film protestations that "There is a limit, even for me," and similar things that the original Sally Bowles would never even have thought of saying.

One of the strongest aspects of the film was the way the camera recaptured the waiting hodgepodge that was Berlin in 1931. "The Camera," Christopher Isherwood, dispassionately observing and finding himself ultimately embroiled, was effectively portrayed by Laurence Harvey, who was almost as professionally ineffectual as he had been as Romeo in Romeo and Juliet.

Most of the others in the film were also "off-beats" rather than the excitingly original and voluble caricatures of yore. Prominent among them was Ron Randall as a wildly extravagant American running hog-wild and handsome, and Shelley Winters, who has had the good sense to stop playing maudlin molls, as a dull but sincere German Jewess. A more serious note was introduced by Anton Diffring, a Jew who finds the courage to admit his race. Mr. Diffring was, well, interesting, beginning as a straight slimy gigolo, and ending (horrors!) as almost a believable character.

Toronto playgoers would have had a surprise, but I'm going to ruin it. Frederick Valk, currently at the Crest, makes a brief appearance as a terrifyingly efficient German doctor. The Czechoslovakian actor serves as prologue to what is surely one of the most unusual scenes of moviedom—a screaming, hung-over Isherwood is shepherded from crazy cure to crazy cure through screaming existentialists having a flesh-pottery party. The scene, macabre and hilarious, wasn't in the play, but it more than justifies the film.

Campus Drama Booms

Campus drama is on the up-surge this year, with at least three college groups venturing into Hart House with off-beat and challenging plays. University College and St. Michael's College, combining to produce Karel Capek's R.U.R., and Victoria College, producing Ibsen's Peer Gynt, will be staging productions that few undergraduates will ever have had the chance of seeing before.

Trinity, whose three-acter does not come off until mid-February, promise to add a third unusual production to a formidable pair.

For R.U.R., UC-St. Mike's are bringing back Leon Major, a '55 graduate whose Brigadoon and Miss Julie won critical acclaim last year. Explaining his choice Mr. Major says, "R.U.R. is a play of intellectual emotionalism; its intellectuality should appeal to the university student, while its emotionalism will try to bring home to the audience the terrifying potential menace that lies behind atomic mechanization today."

"The aspirations of Rossum's Universal Robots was depicted in 1921 as a fantasy; it is still a fantasy, but in this age of automation the unreal has a way of becoming the real," he said.

Vic's production will be directed by Herbert Whittaker, dean of Canadian drama critics, whose power in simplified suggestive productions was shown in his staging of Obey's Noah last year. With 36 principals and a swarming set of spear-holders, the play will be one of the most ambitious on-campus ventures for years. The translation to be used is by Paul Green, a contemporary U.S. playwright whose Wilderness Road in a mammoth outdoor Kentucky theatre has been praised as the first great folk-drama of North America.

Casting for both plays will take place in the next two weeks. Director Major sets his time and place provisionally as Brennan Hall this Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday in the afternoon, casting for the Victoria play, according to John Douglas, president of the college drama society, will take place next week, with further announcements to be made at the college.

Speaking of college drama, word might be added about the current box-office offer at Hart House Theatre, where a season seat is offered to students at a special snap-up price. Director Robert Gill this year does Tennessee Williams' Camino Real from October 22 to 29, followed by Shaw's Candida in November. Bellak's The Troublemakers in January, and Hamlet in February.

Conservatory Lecture

Miss Maud Karpeles, a distinguished scholar in the field of folk-music, opened the Royal Conservatory of Music's series of "score-study" lectures" Friday by speaking on The Folk-Song Tradition in England and America.

"What is a folk song?" Miss Karpeles asked, going on to illustrate her answer by speaking of the differences between folk-music and art-music. The latter, she suggested, is dependent on the efforts and inspirations of one man, finite and unalterable when written down by him, while folk-music possesses a living continuity, contributed to by each succeeding generation.

Miss Karpeles' talk was illustrated with examples on records, mainly sung by trained singers, and all unaccompanied. She spoke with a certain depreciation of her accompanying records . . . I would respectfully suggest that for the more lyric song, with a regular metrical beat, the strumming of a guitar could be used with good effect, though it would certainly be out of place in the romantic or dramatic, quasi-recitative, type of song.

I had hoped, from the title of the lecture, for an analytical discussion of the growth and divergencies of English folk-song on the opposite sides of the Atlantic. However, owing to the imposed time-limit, I felt that much of what the lecturer wished to say was left unsaid, and that the talk was rather superficial for a university audience.

AISLE SEAT

Playboy Of Western World

Playboy of the Western World is not an easy play to produce. Beneath the apparent simplicity of plot and character lies the splendid vision of the playwright. To capture something of this vision and communicate the lyric and poetic beauty of its lines, requires a deftness and sureness of touch which the newly formed York Community Theatre group could not quite achieve.

Perhaps the chief difficulty is that of the Irish dialect. Unevenness in the degrees of accent used by the players, lack of clear diction, plus occasional opening night slips in lines, resulted in the unfortunate loss of much of Synge's rich and living language.

The one exception to this deficiency in dialect was Christy Mahon, the playboy, interpreted by Jay Shannon. Mr. Shannon was very much the young and voluble Irishman, arriving in the village; capturing the wonder of its inhabitants (and the heart of its girls) with his tale of killing his father and his cocky speaking ways; changing, becoming a different, better person; and at last departing, leaving behind the simple, unseeing folk, with his "risen" father, and leaving Pegeen, the girl who loved him, and who understood and saw rather more.

While Mr. Shannon, with rough Irish tongue and eloquent gestures, was "romancing his way through a romping life," we were given a glimpse into the simple yet very poetic tradition of the Irish theatre.

Kate Conway, playing opposite him as Pegeen, did not quite achieve the same over-all consistency and sincerity of characterization. Her saucy high spirits and quickening realization of Christy's worth were more suggested than fully portrayed. Louise Clayton as Widow Quin, Pegeen's older and somewhat frousted rival, also failed to make the most of her memorable part. We were given only hints of the comic highlights this character should attain.

The contributions of the rest of the cast, with the exceptions of Ronnie Hill playing Shawn, Pegeen's rather pedestrian hometown suitor, and the two old farmers, played by James Sheridan and Kendall Smith, who provided entertaining moments, consisted mainly of muttered unintelligibilities and awkward moments.

The cast, if they failed to give us the irony and imagination implicit in the story, did attain the quick playing pace demanded. Technical production also deserves mention. Costumes were picturesque and the quaint sets charmingly suggested the Irish village while managing to disguise the all too limiting facilities of the Museum theatre stage.

In a sense, every age re-creates its own art history without deliberately intending to falsify actual occurrences. For the men of the Renaissance, the classical art of Greece and Rome was a revelation; in their writings the scholars of the Renaissance re-created "the glory that was Greece and the splendour that was Rome" — a creation that has lasted until the present.

For Victorian England, Walter Pater performed the service of re-creation for Leonardo La Vinci; it was Pater who began the Mona Lisa cult which demands that every visitor to the Narrow Gallery pay homage to the lady with the enigmatic smile.

The exhibition of Peruvian art, now on show at The Art Gallery of Toronto, exemplifies this continuous creation of art history, for the twentieth century. When Pizarro and his company of Spanish invaders met the Inca king, Atahualpa, in 1532, the Incas' glittering ornaments that "blazed like the sun" were not art; they merely represented so much gold and silver to be melted down for the Spanish royal treasury. Luckily, some of these "baubles" escaped and we can have the rich experience of seeing them, well-lit, well-displayed, and well-guarded by Pinkerton men at the Art Gallery.

The present exhibit is strongest, however, in Peruvian pottery, both Inca and pre-Inca. It is a rewarding experience to step out of the Peruvian room and look at Henry Moore's Warrior. It will then be evident from whom our contemporary artists have learned their techniques of abstraction and simplicity. Some of Moore's work has been created (on his own admission) while under the influence of Aztec and Mayan sculpture. His early Helms seem to derive their inspiration from some of the pots at this exhibition, especially the Muchik-designed pots portraying the heads of officials and other members of Muchik society.

The visitor to this exhibition can look at these objects in many ways. He can be thrilled by the excellent sense of form, colour and line that these master-potters undoubtedly had; or he can speculate as to how much of Brancusi, Moore, Picasso, Reg Butler and Barbara Hepworth is in the main line of the European tradition and how much is owing to the archaeologist's rediscovery of pre-Columbian culture. Whatever his approach, he can be sure of a satisfying experience.

Graham Is Subject Of Controversy As Debates Return To Hart House

"This House endorses Billy Graham" will be the subject of the first Hart House debate Wednesday, October 5th at 8.00 p.m. Honorary Visitor, Dr. W. Jarvis McCurdy, Professor of Social Philosophy at the University of Toronto, is to speak on the motion.

Supporting the motion are Bill Morris, School of Graduate Studies and Bern Warren, III Emmanuel. Across the floor will be Stanley Schiff, III Law, and Ian Scott, S.G.S.

Upholding the measure Bill Morris said that "the subject of the debate is Billy Graham and not his theology. It is his sincerity and honesty that win the respect of those who hear him. These reasons are sufficient for this House to endorse his work."

Opposition speakers were unavailable for comment.

Rules of debate follow those of the Federal House of Commons, with occasional revisions. All members of the House are given an opportunity to speak from the floor after the main speakers have completed their arguments.

For over 31 years Hart House debates have been the subject of controversy. Among the many distinguished men of public life who have debated in the House are Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent, the Hon. Lester Pearson, and the late W. L. Mackenzie King.

Varsity's Chess Columnist To Give Extension Lectures

Lessons in chess will be given for the first time by the Department of University extension. Instruction will be given by George Berner, a Yugoslav Master and now a second-year Meds student.

Berner said last night the lessons will deal with chess strategy and tactics. Tonight at 5:15 p.m. an introductory lecture will be given in the North Committee Room of Hart House.

Berner and Frank Anderson, Canadian Chess Champion, will write a series of chess columns for The Varsity, starting in this issue.

Berner also said the U. of T. Chess Tournament will begin October 11th. All graduates and undergraduates — male or female — are eligible to enter.

CUP 'Misnomer'

It's World-wide

The CUP editor of this paper has the wrong title. That title should not be just CUP editor, "but" world-wide, American, and Canadian exchange and foreign news editor.

CUP (as you should have discovered by now) stands for Canadian University Press. And the Canadian University Press (as you likewise should have discovered by now) is the national organization which provides each Canadian university paper with the "news and views" of all the other Canadian universities.

As a result, the CUP Editor receives a vast amount of news, by wire or by mail, from twenty other Canadian universities' papers. The small portion of this news which might be interesting or informative to the U. of T. student is printed in the columns of The Varsity. But this is only a small portion of the CUP editor's job.

Each year The Varsity exchanges newspapers with a number of American universities. This year we have tried to increase our exchange, so that we receive news from all over the States, and from all kinds of American universities. In this way we hope to gain both a diversity of views and an overall picture of the American students' comments and reactions.

Our exchange, however, is not limited to the North American continent. This year The Var- sity is exchanging news with the Finnish Students' Union, and with universities in Australia and Malaya. A Korean student publication is sent to The Varsity CUP editor. News articles and features from such various international sources will also supply copy for the columns of The Varsity.

As well as domestic and foreign exchanges, The Varsity receives a variety of propaganda publications — some merely advertising from international or national companies, and some which are official communist bulletins or supervised student publications, from Iron Curtain countries.

From these communistic publications also we intend to print, from time to time, the occasional statement or article of news — stating the source, as we do with all exchange news. We do this in the sincere belief that the university student has a mind and intelligence of his own, a mind capable of making decisions and of determining the veracity of statements supported by facts, an intelligence capable of distinguishing between truth and propaganda — when both are placed before him.

Furthermore, we believe that the university student has a right to know how "the other half" lives and thinks — and has a right to come to his own conclusions.

As you all now quite clearly perceive, the CUP editor has an obviously impossible task — to digest all the printed matter that comes into this office and to reproduce, in a nicely condensed form, all articles of interest to university students. And — to top it off — there are those untranslatable Hungarian and Rumanian papers!

Nevertheless we shall try to bring you a fair sampling of the attitudes, opinions, and even the jokes of university students in Canada and around the world.

BY FRANK R. ANDERSON AND GEORGE BERNER

Frank Anderson, who is a third year student in Maths and Physics, is Chess Champion of Canada. In the 1954 Olympics, Anderson obtained 2nd place rating with only Grandmaster Keres of Russia leading.

George Berner, a Yugoslav Master, is the 1951 Salsburg Land and City champion.

Most competitors in tournament play would agree that the first round is the most difficult. Even experienced players are jittery and betray their nervousness by mistakes and blunders that they normally would not do.

The following game is a first round encounter in which Maurice Fox (8 times Canadian Champion) moves his Knight to the wrong square on move 13 and consequently has to give up a pawn three moves later. Under normal circumstances Fox would have played precisely but first round tension at that point affected his play.

Black must give up a pawn because to allow White to pin the Knight on QB4 would be fatal. White would then move his Knight to QR4 and win the Black Knight.

 (Correct solution follows in the next issue of the chess column).

A desperate attempt to get some counter chances. White is threatening 29. BNG winning the QBP, but after this weakening of the K side, Black has no defence to White's attack on both wings.

Have Fun... Win Pocket Money

Here's a chance to have some fun while trying to win twenty-five dollars. Every Monday and Wednesday an anagram appears in The Varsity. The correct answer is either the name of a student or staff member, with clues provided, or a word from the back of the special time-table cards which we have made especially for you. If you haven't received one, pick one up in the S.A.C. Building.

The prize each week is twenty-five dollars. To win you must print the correct answers to BOTH Wednesday and Monday's anagrams on a slip of paper together with your name and address. The slip should then be deposited in the special box in the S.A.C. Building. In the case of a number of correct answers the winner will be decided by lot. Settlement House Needs Student Aid Directors, Receptionists In Demand

The University has its own social service agency. The Settlement House, located behind the Art Gallery on Grange Road, serves as the recreational, cultural and social centre for residents in that area.

Bill Stern, program director, says many new Canadians in the district have found the assistance invaluable. He finds they bring their problems, personal and financial, to Settlement workers.

Activities for all age groups are provided. Adult education classes, clubs for young children and teen agers and a nursery school are popular.

The Settlement needs help to continue these services. Students are needed to act as group leaders, sports supervisors, receptionists, nursery school workers, and teachers for adult education classes, Mr. Stern says.

Mr. Stern estimated that voluntary work would take no more than four hours a week. He said this would allow the student to put into practical use knowledge of psychology, philosophy, or sociology, and would offer opportunity to meet people and help in solving their problems.

"Not everyone can do this kind of work," Stern said. "Volunteers should know there is nothing easy about their job. This extra-curricular work, however, could be the most important part of their university training. The benefits are tremendous. Apart from personal satisfaction, helpers will receive formal training from experienced supervisors." Students who are interested, or who would like more information are asked to see Mike Spivak, IIF UC.

a decision - This year

that the agenda of the conference — to be held next week — was not available at last week's SAC meeting when Toronto's NFCUS stand was discussed.

The above is a damning indictment of NFCUS. Yet the fact remains that NFCUS does still possess vast potentialities for service to Canadian university students — possibilities which have never been explored. The fault of NFCUS up to now has lain in the surfeit of pompous speeches and irresponsible plans which have afflicted past NFCUS conferences. There has been too little attention paid to the efficiency of the National Headquarters. And many possibilities of initiating activities which can be of real service to Canadian students have been overlooked.

What is the use of a national federation? What can it accomplish?

On the international scene NFCUS could — and should — take upon itself the task of representing the Canadian student abroad. And it should do more than send an endless series of delegates to an endless series of international conferences. Much more could be done by way of direct contact with national students' unions in France, Great Britain, and the United States.

On the national field, NFCUS should make itself heard as the voice of Canadian university students. Efforts to achieve a National Scholarship plan should be continued, with more versatility being shown. Many provincial governments have never even been seriously approached, and the possibilities of aid from private individuals have never been explored.

Other projects might be:

- a national student newspaper.
- national student discount service.
- national cultural contests — such as art, music and short-story.
- a program to gain relief for students from UIC and income tax.

On some of these, NFCUS has already begun to work. Yet much of the value of what has been attempted has been lost in poor organization.

As well as realizing its own potentialities, NFCUS — and the Canadian students who are its members — must also realize its limitations and weaknesses. Many of its projects — such as a music competition — interest only a small proportion of its students. And many more of its projects — such as the National Scholarship plan — depend for their success on the action of outside bodies over which NFCUS can have little influence.

NFCUS is now in an unfortunate position. Having in the past promised so much, and having accomplished so little, NFCUS must this year succeed in implementing an effective and realistic program or it is doomed, as the defection of any more universities will make The "National" Federation a farce.

NFCUS must succeed in implementing a scholarship plan or a national student discount plan, which will provide real benefits this year to Canadian students. Or it must succeed in obtaining relief for students from income tax or UIC. And NFCUS must re-organize its head office if whatever achievements that it does succeed in making are not to be lost in faulty organization.

The Toronto delegation to this year's conference should make every effort to see that a realistic program to serve the interests of Canadian students is adopted at the convention. And unless they see that such a program is adopted, they have no excuse for allowing Toronto to continue in NFCUS.

Library New Look

Canadiana And The Gospels

By Anne Franks

Not being overly familiar with the University Library facilities, we undertook to accompany a tour.

Library officials have been showing off, now they are comfortably settled in a brand new building. Till last November, construction and the upheaval of moving disrupted Library services. Pile drivers shook Reading Room windows all through 1953 exams.

The new Sigmund Samuel Library, made possible through a gift of Mr. Samuel, cost $2,000,000. Our tour began in the smoking room — remember the drafty alcove where we used to shiver through a fog? Nineteenth century lithographs of Canadian cities presently decorate the lounge walls.

African Highlights

expect us to see their point of view."

"The group found a growing emphasis on native industry and application. Their joy at completing the smallest of tasks on their own initiative was quite remarkable.

"We went on one occasion to assist at the opening of a bridge. The Bandshene of Banda was there as well as two native bands and a brass band. It was a huge holiday and people came from miles around. The bridge was six feet long.

"They were really proud of that bridge simply because it had been built by the natives themselves and they felt they were making a contribution to their country's growth."

"The Gold Coast government has already produced a rapid development in its social services like hospitals and educational institutions. West Africa, naturally, is not without its problems. For example, there is some evidence of corruption in the government. The transition from tribal society to responsible government cannot be made without possible serious sociological consequences."

The Library's collection, amounting to 771,721 pamphlets and volumes, is one of the four largest in Canada. The seven hundred and seventy-one thousand, seven hundred and twenty first item is the Library's oldest book, a twelfth century manuscript of the Gospels. It will be exhibited during the year with other rarities in the display cases lining the main hall.

That odd tower in the old building was once the New York Times Room, deserted now the Library has a Microfilm Room.

With the addition of the new stack, shelf capacity rose to 1,000,000 volumes. Unfortunately, this capacity will be reached by 1964. The Chief Librarian, R. H. Blackburn, has already begun to put some time on a file labelled 1964 Extension.

A mechanical book lift saves hikes between three floors of stacks for the 48 librarians, 30 full-time assistants and 25 part-time assistants. Those delays in receiving two-week books at the Main Desk derive from the immense floor space on each storey. Persistent bookworms may pick up a second edition of The Wealth of Nations or a priceless book of old woodcuts from the stack.

We ended our tour in a slight daze of catalogues, duplicate catalogues, reference rooms, reading rooms and carrels, but sheer shock at the living-room comfort in which we could read will probably draw us back.

U of T Co-ed Is Approved In Poll Of Male Students Blondes Way Out In Front

The University of Toronto co-ed is just about the prettiest little trick on two legs. So thinks the university's male population if a poll taken by The Varsity last night is any indication. The Varsity polled about 30 male students and discovered that blondes are still "way out in front" so far as male popularity. Add to a shapely figure, blue eyes and blonde hair, a pleasing personality, and you've got Toronto University's formula for the gal of the hour.

POLL OF CAMPUS MALES

1. Are you enthused about University of Toronto co-eds? How do they "stack up" with girls from other colleges?
2. Have college girls got anything that non-college girls haven't got?
3. Do you prefer blonds, redheads, darkheads, brunettes or others?
4. Do you find University of Toronto girls turn out to dances or do they tend to be wall flowers?
5. Do you like a girl who: (a) looks nice (b) has a nice personality (c) cooks well (d) does what she's told?
6. Do you think college girls make good wives or are they too smart?

There were of course some snide remarks. Prevailing opinion at a University College men's residence was that many a University of Toronto girl was a wall-flower, often, they added, out of sheer necessity.

A group of St. Michael's College boys found that Toronto college girls "dress like bobby-soxers and act like juvenile teenagers."

And, to the question, "have college girls got anything that non-college girls haven't got?" a few males snapped, "Yea, money!"

Fifteen out of the 30 males polled said they were "definitely" enthused about Toronto co-eds. Seven said they were not and eight weren't sure.

But the men were split on their opinion about the girls turning out to dances. One Engineer said, "that's the trouble, they all turn out," while another found that only the good-looking ones turned up, the others, he said, stayed home. But one disgruntled male said that U. of T. females had one thing other girls didn't — Their virginity (at least in their first year).

The most important attribute for a U. of T. co-ed, the men said, was a "pleasing personality." Twelve of those polled thought this most important while five thought good looks were paramount to female success.

Only one student thought the most important female virtue to be proficiency over the kitchen stove while six male students thought the best feature in a woman was to do what she was told.

Graham And Crusade At Wed. H. H. Debate

Billy Graham and his work take the spotlight at Wednesday's Hart House debate as the house decides whether or not to "endorse" him.

Currently discussed by many groups, the United States evangelist's explosive mannerisms and dynamic methods will be attacked and supported by four top student speakers.

Honorary visitor will be Prof. W. J. McCurdy of the Department of Philosophy. Former secretary of the Hart House debates committee, Horace Kreyer is coming back to be Speaker of the House.

Bernie Warren (II Emmanuel), supporting the affirmative side of the statement "This house endorses Billy Graham", says:

"In a discussion such as this it is difficult to be completely detached. I may even end up snorting."

"I think Graham is an instrument of God being used effectively. As a Christian, I consider this an opportunity to 'make a witness.'"

One of his opponents, Stan Schiff (III Law), is concentrating on Graham's techniques.

"We will discuss the techniques used by Graham in reaching the people among whom he enjoys his greatest appeal."

"Graham appeals to people with varying 'anxieties' and most of Graham's followers are people who have been brought up in church yet have become 'lax.'"

Another supporter of the affirmative, Bill Morris (S.G.S.), summed up his stand as follows: "Objective validity and cultural phenomena are two different categories; we are discussing the cultural phenomenon."

Debates Committee secretary, Clyde Batten, said: "The debate will be followed by an informal discussion. All those who speak from the floor of the house are invited to attend this bull session."

Oh, Those Salesgirls

Engineering Stores

The Engineering Stores are more crowded than the Arbor Room these days—and not just with Engineers.

Men from Maths, Physics and Chemistry, Honour Science, and even the odd humanities type come to buy drafting equipment, slide-rules, paper and reproductions of philosophy notes at a lower price than any other store from a very co-operative sales staff.

Competition from the University Book Store is avoided because the Stores does not sell books.

Low profit policy dictates a mark-up of only 20% against the usual 40%. And there is no robbery under cover of a $9.99 label —Engineers prefer round figures.

The sales staff is not disproportionately impressed by Engineers. Helen Colquhoun said, "They are males."

"We like 'em," was the comment of Omar Okhrim, II Civil Eng. "The Engineering Society advertizes for them by measurements."

A gross profit of $7,000 is reaped annually from the $35,000 turnover. Paul Button, III Mech. Eng. and Second Vice-President in Charge of Stores, emphasized that the Stores are primarily a service to students, and not a money-making concern. The mark-up is indispensable to pay for hired

Ask For Volunteers To Do Social Work

More than 200 students still are needed for volunteer social service work, Mrs. S. Peake, volunteer placement secretary for the Toronto Welfare Council, said.

Settlement houses and YMCA's count on student help to conduct their recreational and training program, she said. In return for his work, the student will have the use of their facilities as well as the benefit of professional supervision while he works, Mrs. Peake said.

These two or three hours a week devoted to welfare work may help the student in his choice of a career. For the student of psychology or sociology, the work proves valuable, said Mrs. Peake.

Mrs. Peake will be at the University Placement Service Office, 5 Willcocks Street, today from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. to interview interested applicants. She will return to the campus on October 12 for more interviews.

of the National Federation of Canadian University Students will present the brief prepared by Don Stevenson (IV Vic.)

Harry Arthur, chairman of the campus scholarship committee said last night this year's campaign is progressing well. The Ontario government has already set aside nearly $500,000.

Goal for the nation-wide NFCUS campaign is $5,500,000, he said. A motion is expected to be presented in the House of Commons next January asking for increasing expenditure on student aid.

The committee hopes to secure 2,500 scholarships of $500 each annually.

What's news at Inco?

The four Rolls-Royce "Dart" engines which power each Vickers-Armstrongs Viscount develop a total of 5600 hp.—approximately 1 hp. for every 10 ounces of engine weight and in addition, a jet thrust of 1460 lbs. is developed from the exhaust gases. Since the "Dart" is a turbine propeller engine, it employs no reciprocating parts and since the propellers operate at relatively low speeds, unusually quiet operation is achieved.

INCO NICKEL STANDS UP TO A HOT JOB IN THE NEW VISCOUNT AEROPLANE

HEAT WAS THE BIG PROBLEM that confronted the engineers who designed and built the Rolls-Royce "Dart" engine for the Vickers-Armstrongs Viscounts which TCA has put into regular service.

In developing its smooth flow of power, this gas turbine propeller engine also develops terrific heat. A number of parts must operate at cherry red heat.

At this temperature some alloys wear away rapidly. Others do not have enough strength to withstand operating stresses and prevent buckling, warping or cracking.

Nickel, however, has heat-resisting properties and when combined with other metals makes special alloys which can withstand these devastating conditions.

Some of these alloys, employed in the "Dart" engine, contain as much as 68% nickel.

Inco research engineers have co-operated with engine designers in the development of heat-resisting alloys—as they are ready to co-operate with design engineers in any industry where special metals are required to meet unusual conditions.

How the Rolls-Royce "Dart" Engine Operates

Air enters the engine at high speeds through intakes (A) behind the propeller, and is compressed by a two-stage compressor (B). In the combustion chamber (C), the compressed air is mixed with fuel and ignited. The heated gases drive a turbine (D) which is connected through a reduction gear (E) with the propeller. At the exhaust (F), escaping gases deliver an additional jet thrust.

Write for your free copy of the 72-page illustrated booklet, "The Romance of Nickel". Bulk copies will be supplied to secondary school teachers on request.

ISC Rules On Football Irish, Trinity Move Up

After a heated discussion in which the correct procedure for amending a motion before the committee came under question more than once, the Intramural Sports Committee played havoc with the prevailing Interfaculty football grouping, in one of the lengthiest meetings in recent years. As a result of a decision made last night, Victoria, Skule, Trinity, and St. Mike's will battle for the gridiron honors of Group One, while Meds, UC, Forestry, Dentistry, and the Skule Seconds will fight it out in Group Two.

The final arrangement was the offspring of a request put before the Football Standing Committee last week by the Faculty of Medicine, asking that their football entry be moved to Group Two competition. Such a move of course raised the problem of who would take their place in Group One, and Trinity and St. Mike's got the nod as they had finished one-two in Group Two play last season.

Unwilling to enter the "big league" all alone, the two Arts Colleges decided that they would both make the jump, but this raised the problem of a five-team league in Group One, and the added headache of an awkward schedule. However UC stated that they were prepared to move to Group Two also, which appeared to settle the problem.

At length, after much discussion, a motion came before the committee that Group One should be made up of four teams, and that Vic and Skule should definitely be two of the teams; and that the remaining two openings would be filled by a draw between UC, Trinity, and St. Mike's. An unbending show of hands eliminated the possibility of an amendment being made which was actually contrary to the spirit of the motion, and a vote of 7-6 put the motion into effect.

In the subsequent draw, Trinity and St. Mike's became the new members of Group One, and UC moved down to Group Two.

A motion then came before the committee that three teams from Group One and two teams from Group Two should be admitted to the playoffs and was passed. The resulting set-up for the playoffs finds the third place team in Group One in a quarter-final with the second-place team in Group Two, the winner meeting the Group One champion in one semi-final. The Group Two champion will meet the second-place team from Group One in the other semi-final.

Furthering the palaver on football, Skule requested an extension of the 1954 ruling, in which their teams were chosen on a basis of who was best, rather than adhering to the old Junior-Senior rule. A motion to this effect was put before the Committee and was defeated 8-4, with one abstention, forcing Skule to select one team from their first and second years, and the other team from their third and fourth years.

Earlier decisions had provided for two leagues in Intramural volleyball this season, one being designated as the University league with good competition, and the other to be known as the Intramural league, for recreational purposes.

The hectic evening of debate and rebuttal came to a close with the election of the officers for this year. Jim Hamilton (Meds) became the Committee's representative to the University's Athletic Directorate. Jim McKinnon of St. Mike's was elected to the chair of the Committee, and Burt Stitt of Law became vice-chairman.

Smith In Final In Varsity Net

Skule's Barry Smith advanced to the final round of the University tennis tournament yesterday, eliminating Bill Grove (Vic) 6-1, 6-2.

Meds' Robin Arnold will meet Dave Alexander (SPS) today for the other berth in the singles finals. Arnold defeated John Tattle (SPS) 7-5, 6-2, after the latter had overcome Meds' Barry Fine 6-4, 6-4 in yesterday morning's action.

University Golf Team Selected

Twenty-two eager golfers went through 36 holes of medal play at York Downs yesterday in the qualifying round to choose the Intercollegiate senior and Intermediate golf teams for the Intercollegiate tournament this weekend.

Bob Pezyck topped the field with a 149, seven over par, while Don Cossar came second with 152. Don Hewson and Witold Weynerowski were third and fourth respectively with 159 and 163. These four will comprise the Varsity senior team.

Hugh Sampson, Jim Griev, Gary Hewson, and Steve Aarons finished next, in that order, and will make up the Intermediate team for the Intercollegiate tournament.

Vic Laces P. H. E. In Ball Opener

Yesterday although the world series attracted some, Varsity's universally famous female softball league drew a large crowd to the Trinity bowl and to Varsity stadium (the Ebbett's Fields of the intellectual set) for the opening game of the season.

Yesterday's score is any indication of the outcome in the battle for batting supremacy at the University of TO, it looks as if the squad from Victoria who captured the crown last year will definitely take it again this season. Victoria outclassed PHE II in every department and came out on top in

By MAX ROSENTHAL

Riding home from London the other night, we began to wonder about the weak showing of the Western Mustangs. Were they that bad or were the Blues that good?

We thought about the dauntless Varsity defence, about the rugged training period through which Masterson had previously put his Blues; about the running of Phil Muntz from the halfback slot; about the blocking and tackling of Gerry Lansky and Bob Waugh; about Masterson's statement that the Blues were an "unknown quantity."

We thought about the sullen look on John Metras' face after the game. What a contrast to the smiling, beaming Masterson in the Blue dressing room. "The boys were sharp," chortled Masterson. Then he went on to talk about the tightness of play and the reasons for it.

Then we thought about our encounter with a Western official, about his excuses for his team's loss. He told us of the Mustangs' over-confidence after they'd beaten Sarnia, 18-17. He told Metras of the boys' conceit, fore-warned Metras that the Blues would be tougher than expected. Then he told us of Metras' reply that he'd have the boys sharper than sharp for the Blue game.

Again our mind travelled back to the Blue dressing room. We could see the Blues in the shower chanting their victory cry to the tune of Dragnet. Then we thought of Hotel London, mad Hotel London; the rafters trembled, Blue supporters roared, beer was guzzled, and the management went crazy.

Then we thought about the pre-season difficulties the Blues faced: the ceaseless yapping of reporters, including ourselves, about the defence, the kicking and quarterback problem. Could Steve Oneschuck be replaced? Could Bob Pinkney be replaced?

All these questions were answered Saturday. Jack Rogers at one half and Muntz at the other filled the bill completely, both offensively and defensively. As far as kicking was concerned Skrzypek was punting better than ever, averaging 44.8 yards per kick. Al Riva, plagued by a boil on his back in training season, came through in fine fashion. We can recall the sparkling play he made when leaping over three feet in the air, he knocked down a Casanova pass.

Then we thought about Masterson crying the blues about injuries and justifiable tears were shed too. Bethune was out for the season. Smale had twisted his knee in practice, Ford was injured. "If I lose Chorostecki I don't know what I'll do," said worried Bob about his injured end.

But by game time the injuries were healed. The Blues were ready, they were up for this one. Then again we thought of Masterson beaming in the dressing room, and Metras sulking in the stadium corridor. Then we thought of Pete Maik shouting at us, "Don't forget, I called us to win by three touchdowns. You'd better put it in Max's Muses."

Max's Muses . . . Mike Uzumeri requests that all Senior and Intermediate soccer players turn out to Tuesday and Thursday practices, as attendance at these affairs is absolutely necessary in order to make the team . . . Don't forget student ticket sale Thursday and Friday. Watch The Varsity for time and place.

on the sideline

BY FLO MIDDLETON

Although we, the women of this university, are usually relegated to the sidelines, it is becoming very evident that this is hardly a correct assumption to make, for most girls are finding the athletic programme so overwhelming at this time of year that it is becoming almost impossible to squeeze in lectures between baseball games, swimming practices, basketball try-outs, lacrosse contests, tennis matches and, believe it or not, football chalk-talks (rumour has it that Vic and St. Hilda's are contemplating taking up rugby.)

With the baseball season now in full swing and Vic looking as though they are well on their way to another big league world series championship, Joy Taylor, this year's curator of basketball, could not sit back and watch all the talent on this campus being spent running between bases, so thought it was time that the hoopsters started to practice just to make sure that the athletic types would not be forced to stay in evenings and instead could make their way to OCE for evening workouts. Lists having been posted for basketball for the past week, girls are now reminded to watch either The Varsity or their college athletic notice boards for time and place of their basketball practice. The leagues this year have been switched around in order to equate the games and to give some of the smaller colleges a better chance of making the sudden death play-offs. This change promises to make this year better than ever, so all that is needed now to put better in the superlative, is active participation by the members of all the teams, so gals it is up to you!

Not to be outdone by the sandlot kids or the basketball enthusiasts, the tennis court participants are creating a hive of activity these days in readiness for the Interfaculty matches which start to-day at the Trinity-St. Hilda's courts and the Intercollegiate tussle which is scheduled for the McGill weekend (Oct. 21 and 22). If you want to see the cream of Toronto female tennis, why not drop over Devonshire Place way and watch the little world Davis Cup Championships being played off?

This year with Pharmacy and the Meds girls out to show the world that they are experienced hands at holding a tennis racket, and that they have not retired from the tennis world, the tournament promises to be bigger and better. These two faculties who have very small female enrolments are to be congratulated for this show of good sportsmanship and keen active interest in the sports of this campus — we would like to see more of this around Toronto.

The non-seeded tennis players from Vic, UC, St. Mike's, St. Hilda's, POT, PHE, Nursing, Pharmacy, and Meds will play off in the opening days of the tournament followed on, later this week, by stars like Mary Nunns and Mary Lynn Boys (both from St. Hilda's) who are first and second seeded respectively. All the matches should, weather permitting be through by next week, but remember girls even though the top four players will be named as members of the Intercollegiate team, it does not mean that they are definitely assigned to the four-lady squad as anyone can challenge a member of the team up until the day before the meet; therefore, you tennis stars who feel that you might make the intercollegiate grade, why not give it the old college try and challenge a member of the team?

Blue Sailors Headed South For Danmark Trophy Meet

The University of Toronto's sailing team will journey to Massachusetts Institute of Technology this weekend for competition with thirteen colleges for the Danmark Trophy, the NCAA sailing championship cup.

The Blue sailors, who have held the Canadian Intercollegiate championship for the last three years, will pit their skill against the top American colleges, with McGill University of Montreal being the only other Canadian entry.

Varsity will be represented by four very competent sailors, each with several years experience at a one-sided tilt 14-0; while at the same time, St. Mike's was shelving the saintly Saints from Trinity. In this game also, it was a very one-sided affair for the St. Hildians lacked any team play and showed themselves to be inferior in batting and fielding ability.

In the division I game, Vic, spurred on by little Mary Foster, seemed as though they could do no wrong. This versatile athletic gal was the star of the day because of her pitching and hitting ability. Her pitching is the best to found around Varsity and as one spectator discovered when he was hit on a foul drive along the third base line she swings a mean bat. Not content with lining out this drive, on the next pitch from the mound she drove the ball out into mid-field for her second homer of the game.

Not only does Mary terrify the pitchers of opposing teams, but she mortifies every player that comes to the plate with her wicked throws over home. Ann Stainton was the only PHE miss who managed to get a hit off this Vic softball star, in the first inning, as all the other girls from the athletic course struck out in order. At the end of the first, the score was 8-0 in favour of the red and gold gals. Keeping up their excellent batting averages, the Vic team made it 14-0 by the end of the second.

To-day, POT and PHE I meet at Trinity and in the stadium between the goal posts, the victorious Vic types play St. Hilda's I. After yesterday's game, it looks as if the Saints will have to dress a good team in order that the game won't degenerate into another one-sided slug. No word is forthcoming from Father Newby about his 1955 edition from the Battery, but from all reports things are looking up especially in the pitching department, so who knows, the Trinity girls might at least slow down the onslaught from the Methodist college.

The University of Toronto's sailing team will journey to Massachusetts Institute of Technology this weekend for competition with thirteen colleges for the Danmark Trophy, the NCAA sailing championship cup.

The Blue sailors, who have held the Canadian Intercollegiate championship for the last three years, will pit their skill against the top American colleges, with McGill University of Montreal being the only other Canadian entry.

Varsity will be represented by four very competent sailors, each with several years experience at the tiller. Paul Henderson from the RCYC heads the list. Doug Hall and John Strebig also are from the RCYC while Jim Taylor is from the National Yacht Club. Hall sailed at McMaster several years ago when they were in intercollegiate competition.

The Varsity crew will take part in fourteen races over a period of two days, and will use fourteen-foot fibre-glass cats belonging to M.I.T. There will be twenty-eight boats used in the two-day meet.

The University of Toronto is invited to represent Canada in international competition, as they have been Intercollegiate champions for the past three years.

drawing the bustline somewhere

It seems to us that there has been too much emphasis on the bustline of women.

We do not deny that a woman's breast has always been and probably always will be one of the focal points of a woman's attraction for a man. In paintings of all ages the great dividing line has had its place. We do not wish it otherwise.

What seems to us out of place is an emphasis restricted to the quantity of this secondary sexual characteristic, an emphasis which has had harmful effects on the present outlook of our society.

A large bust measurement has become synonymous with personality, femininity, total sex appeal, and even with value as a woman. As a result this indispensable commodity takes on a commercial value and we have now the democracy of the bustline eliminating all variety of shape and size.

One issue of a Canadian weekend magazine which we read offered at least eighteen different remedies to women of little "personality" — from cotton batten, sponge rubber, compressed air, and other synthetic materials to stimulating salves and unguents.

That there is such a great market for these materials is no surprise when a woman's femininity, the source of her self-assurance, is put into question if she does not come up to size.

This false overemphasis of present society is producing a generation of women with inferiority complexes.

What remedy do these substitutes actually offer to a woman? If she chooses to wear appendages she herself knows that actually she has just the same amount of "femininity" as before, and often her girlfriends and possibly her male acquaintances are aware of the unreality of the situation. Yet, social pressure dictates that she should at least try to keep up appearances. If she tries abnormal stimulants, she may find that she possesses the quantity without the quality.

The womanly figure takes its femininity from the whole, as anyone who has seen a male outfitted with oranges can tell.

Why should we place such a premium upon a single female characteristic? Why should we encourage women to put up a false front and thus eliminate the natural distinctions and variety of creation?

French Student Life

The following article on the life of the average French student was written by Keith Spicer, a fourth year student in Modern Languages and Literature at Victoria College. Spicer spent his last academic year in Paris, taking courses at the Sorbonne. These courses took the place of the third year of his honors course here.

The French student has one immense advantage over his Canadian counterpart, and it is not his proximity to cheap wine or the Folies-Bergere. It is the possibility he has of achieving that oft-abused and always ill-defined ideal which is individuality.

For the Canadian student, pampered by luxurious Unions, pressured by a multitude of clubs and societies, and emotionally shattered by the general hurly-burly of college life, individuality is seldom attempted, and probably less seldom desired.

Not only does the sieve of our university society eliminate with a scrupulous sufficiency the truly original character as an abhorred misfit, but the tragically competitive pace of school life itself denies him the simple peace he needs so very desperately for personal, creative thought.

Peace of mind—not to be confused with emptiness of mind—is then the unspeakably precious opportunity the French university offers. The happy result is a constant stream of graduates who are far more than "specialists", technicians in some abstruse and scholarly lore; they are personalities.

How does this happen? There is no single explanation. It is necessary to look separately into every phase of the average French student's life and even to consider the influences he underwent as far back as secondary school days.

The French lycee is an academic school. It offers neither a state-supported social life nor participation in glorified physical culture establishments.

But the primary aim, preparation of minds capable of dealing with a confused and confusing world, is never forgotten by French educators. Always, a maximum of initiative is left to the individual's personal methods: by reducing the frequency of home-work deadlines and by punishing purely memorized and undigested knowledge.

Generally, those who sin in the latter category are screened from probable failure at university by the "classes de philo", an entire year of philosophical studies forming the key to the baccalaureat.

After a possible year of introduction to the even more independent university methods of study in the "annee propedeutique", the liberal arts student finds an incredibly vast choice of lectures from which to choose.

Apart from necessarily technical fields like engineering and medicine, there exist practically no organized "courses" such as we know them.

One has an examination calendar as a broad guide, periodically posted bulletins, and even courses broadcast by the Radiodiffusion Nationale.

That is, once the $12 yearly fees are paid, the amount and quality of the work done is wholly in the students' own hands. On a basis of scholastic units sanctioned by annual examinations, the "licence" (generally evaluated as somewhere between our B.A. and M.A.) is granted after 3 or 4 years of study.

Inter-university sport, fraternities and student lounge facilities simply do not exist.

There is symbolic provision for the latter in such places as the "Maison des Lettres", a twelve-room, separately furnished, late seventeenth century house for the twenty thousand arts students of the University of Paris.

And at the Cite Universitaire, there is even some sincere, but hopelessly under-equipped, attempt at creating an interest in swimming, wrestling and other individual sports. One compensation for this general lack of material comfort is in the numerous "restaurants universitaires", in which good meals with wine are served for about twenty one cents per student.

The French student must content himself with simple pleasures, found within himself, among the few intimate friends without whom he would be so utterly alone, and in the culture and intellectual warmth of his surroundings: an after-lecture "aperitif au pauvre" (red wine) and a lively but open-minded discussion on Hegel or Sartre, Mendes or Morocco with a stranger in a sidewalk cafe before the chilly positivist statue of Auguste Comte in the Place de la Sorbonne; the exuberant freedom of heckling the political and religious pamphleteers stationed obsequiously at the main door of each Faculte at noon-time; or a quiet, oblivious promenade sentimentale beside the hypnotic timelessness of the Seine, or past the majestic fountains and heroic statues in the glorious, sunlit symmetry of the Jardin du Luxembourg. These are typical events in the life of any French student, meaning little in themselves, significant only as symbols of an interminable search for intellectual and moral freedom.

Essentially the Frenchman is a conservative. He knows this well, and has more or less deliberately convinced the world through his adventures in government, art and philosophy that he is precisely the opposite. That is, he is original because he fears not being so. While some of his colleagues go to extremes at the Bal des Beaux-Arts or as pseudo-existentialists in the caves of St. Germain, the 'average' student dresses like an adult and acts like one—and all without losing a bit of his youthful "joie de vivre" or his intense desire to be a useful, creative individual.

Often in the most miserable and discouraging of conditions, including downright primitive material accommodations and the prospect of entering terrifyingly overcrowded and underpaid professions, the students of France are achieving formidable moral triumphs in a brave struggle to conserve, and perhaps to revive, an ancient, rich, and brilliant civilization.

Ignominious, Insolent, and Insufficient

The Editor,
The Varsity:

About a year ago from now, a certain group of freshmen engineers swarmed through the halls of University College, effecting as they went a considerable amount of property damage, the disgrace of which was largely augmented by the slight injury quite inadvertently inflicted upon the Registrar W. J. McAndrgw.

As a result of this, and perhaps with a certain amount of justification at that time, the engineers were dubbed by their "intellectual" associates as boorish, wanton, ignorant and callous. We hung our heads in shame.

However, last Thursday, a group of U.C. freshmen staged the most ignominious demonstration as to be unparalleled in the annals of stupidity! And mind you, not confined merely to the campus, but right out in public and in the very heart of downtown Toronto.

Difference of opinion and constructive criticism are every person's right in a country such as Canada, but mockery and ridicule are only the products of an insufficient ability to accomplish the former.

If our ostensibly intelligent friends desire to display their narrowness and obtusely, let them scoff their insolent heads off, but restrict themselves to the confines of some sound-proof enclosure!

Here To Stay?

Last Friday's lecture-recital on recorders given by Dr. Wolfgang Grunsky at the Conservatory was revealing in more ways than one. To those who came out of curiosity, the evening's program must have been a novel experience, if nothing else. For others already bitten by the "recorder bug," there was a more personal interest in the efforts of Dr. Grunsky's group to bring this little-heard Renaissance and Baroque chamber music to the musical public.

It is unfortunate that the recorder has come to symbolize for some the musical yearnings of the arty dilettante. The stampe-de "intellectuals" to the music of the recorder and of the pre-Bach period in general, has perhaps intimidated the unpretentious but appreciative listener, who has contemplated a study of the instrument.

Dr. Grunsky prefaced the evening's entertainment with a brief resume of the recorder's history. The program then began with a recorder duet, The Beggar Boy, for two descant recorders. This and the following selection, Master Hildebrandt, were perhaps the two weakest numbers of the evening. In both selections, the descant's tone left much to be desired. In both selections, so often characterizes this member of the recorder ensemble was rather unpleasant. There was also a noticeable lack of control in the more rapid passages. However, nervousness, and not lack of musicianship, was probably to blame. In the following set of trios, Fly Not So Fast and Wachet auf, ruft uns Die Stimme, the recorder came into its own. Here was ensemble playing at its best; good intonation on the part of all players, breath-control, phrasing, all contributed to the organ-like effect. The peculiar ability of the recorder ensemble to produce this "organ tone" is one of its most striking characteristics. In following quartets by Dowland and Bach the virtuoso nature of the contrapuntal score gave ample scope for this small instrument.

The rest of the program was devoted mostly to music for various combinations of recorders, viola da gamba and harpsichord. In these selections the recorder's natural limitations were apparent. Its restricted range of dynamics, its intrinsically weak attack and small volume of tone make it completely subordinate to the viols. The unaccompanied recorder ensemble is to me the more satisfying combination.

STRATFORD STRAYS

Cast-members of last summer's Stratford Shakespearean Festival season have been getting around since the cannon last boomed, with a group currently drawing hold-over-type crowds at the Crest Theatre, and two other groups soon to arrive in the city.

Where did they all go? Well, some of them are at present in hibernation, ready for their trip to New York with Tyrone Guthrie's production of Tamburlaine the Great. Toronto, incidentally, will have a preview of the production in January at the Royal Alex.

Others head towards Toronto this Friday, in the Canadian Players' presentation of Macbeth, with William Hutt and Frances Hyland in the leading roles, and Douglas Campbell directing. They will appear at Eaton Auditorium for one night, going on to a U.S. tour. Then there's Fine Frezzy, a new revue at the Avenue Theatre, opening October 18 with Donald Harron, Robert Christie, et al. So they're all still busy.

Norman Granz has released a new LP. by his most valuable commodity, the Count Basie Band. This LP. does not come up to the standard of the Dance Session No. 2, but it is Basie, and it seems that everything Basie does these days is great. Eight tunes make up the LP., including Perdido, featuring Frank Wess on flute and tenor, Two Franks, Ain't Misbehavin', with Frank Foster, and the most exciting tune on the record, Blues Backstage. This LP. further confirms the fact that this is the 'best band in the land'.

Also on Clef, the Lionel Hampton Quartet/Quintet has a new LP. Hampton, Buddy Rich, Oscar Peterson and Ray Brown make up the quartet. Buddy De Franco is added on Dinah and Herb Ellis on China Boy. The quartet sides are best, but the whole LP. is good.

A less recent LP. worth noting is Ralph Burns Among The JATP's (Norgran). This includes Oscar Peterson on Perpetual Motion, Roy Eldridge and Flip Phillips on Music For A Strip-teaser, and others of the JATP stable. These are all Ralph Burns originals and backing the soloists is a wonderful big studio band.

It is appropriate in this sports-conscious season that Columbia release an LP. devoted to The Greatest Moments in Sport. The record, which comes across with a clarity occasionally amazing considering the time of recording, concerns itself mainly with boxing, baseball, and football, with such voices of the sports stars as Jack Dempsey giving his views on that famous "long count" in his Tunney fight. Still outside the realm of music, Angel has produced a record by Dame Edith Sitwell, Sir John Gielgud, and others, in selections from Eighteenth Century Comedies. I could not help feeling that the record could have been improved by taking longer selections from fewer plays.

Two good recordings on the Vanguard label, both with the company's usual highest of high fidelity, are Prokofiev's Alexander Nevsky Cantata Opus 78 and Stravinsky's Les Noces (a composition for four pianos) and L'Histoire d'un Soldat; both feature the Vienna State Orchestra, conducted by Mario Rosse, and the Vienna Chamber Choir. Stravinsky has again gone to Russian folk-sources, coloring them with an apparent simplicity that is actually a near-mathematical and complex musical form.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Solitary Splendor

When Hollywood presents a love story, it is either very good or very bad. Fortunately Love Is A Many-Splendored Thing, now showing at the University theatre, falls in the former category.

The film concerns the trials and tribulations of a "Eurasian" woman doctor and an American news correspondent, seemingly swamped in a vast number of problems that we find don't really matter very much anyway. East vs West, Love vs Duty, Love vs Reason, Capitalism vs Communism—all pop up in unexpected places to haunt the protagonists, who argue about them briefly, then return to the much more enjoyable pastime of being in love.

William Holden plays the role of Mark Eliot, an unhappily married newsman who meets and falls in love with Jennifer Jones, cast as Dr. Han Suyin, widowed interne in a Hong Kong hospital. Miss Jones's speech has the precision that we would expect from one who speaks not only English; her gestures express the odd mixture of reserve and expansiveness expected from a person belonging to two cultures.

Although the movie does not succeed in presenting any clear-cut issues for the discussion of posterity and thus deviates from the book of the same name—it does succeed in making us enjoy an emotional orgy. We leave the theatre humming the theme—also of the same name; we cannot help but appreciate the splendid photography, the scenes in Hong Kong streets or up on the hill; we must be thrilled by the charming touches of oriental symbolism—the wrinkled fortune-teller, the symbolic butterfly, the tradition of a Chinese home, the hill and the tree where the lovers met.

The movie does not end happily. Eliot is called to Korea, and is killed, leaving us with a much better climax than the traditional arm-in-arm stroll into the sun-shiny distance. The scene in which he is killed is probably the best in the film. With a change only possible in the movie medium, the bomb that kills Eliot becomes a paint-pot, dropped by the ward of Dr. Suyin—the paint-pot that had helped her write a prayer for the safety of her lover.

There is no one else of importance besides the protagonist. Characters occasionally rant about communism — that dirty word—or practice un-American discrimination against ... but they only serve to further what vestiges of plot there are. The judgement must be that if you like love stories, don't miss this one; if you demand food for thought, then forget about it, and go to see Two-Ton Tessie instead.

Hart House Orchestra plays here again

The Hart House Orchestra, which went from a trial start last year to a musical triumph at the Stratford Shakespearean Festival's inaugural music season this summer, will be back on campus this fall to present a five-concert music series. The first of these concerts, all of which will be presented in the Great Hall of Hart House, is slated for October 16th.

The orchestra, consisting of from 14 to 20 members, was formed by Dr. Boyd Neel, dean of the faculty of music, in the fall of last year. Though the group is composed of professional musicians playing for various other groups the Hart House affiliation was retained, with the name of the famous Hart House Quartet revived and given by permission of the Board of Stewards to Dr. Neel's Orchestra.

Much of the original impetus in the movement towards the preservation of the orchestra was provided by the undergraduates themselves, with certain students organizing the Hart House Orchestra Associates. Their primary concern was to encourage an interest in classical music on the campus, particularly, of course, through the orchestra itself.

After two spring concerts, the orchestra went to Stratford, to form the nucleus of the Festival city's first music season. Conducted by Dr. Neel, they won acclaim for such ventures as the rendition of all six of Bach's Brandenburg Concerti and an entire evening of Vivaldi.

Owing to the success of last year's concerts on campus, and especially to the orchestra's Stratford triumphs, the all-student executive committee of the Hart House Orchestra Associates are now striving to put the orchestra on a permanent basis. This concert series will probably be the touchstone.

Concerts will take place October 16, December 11, January 22, February 5, and March 11. Though programs have yet to be decided upon, the January bill is definite — an evening of Mozart, in honor of the composer's bicentennial.

Membership cards entitling the holder to attend all five concerts are available now, in the SAC office, at the Hart House Porter's desk, at the Conservatory, and from various representatives around the campus. Clyde Batten, chairman of the committee, may be contacted at WA. 2-8451. Membership is $3.50 to undergraduates, and $7.00 to others. Special student memberships will be given on the presentation of at least one ATL card for each two memberships.

Boyd Neel, Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music and conductor of the Hart House Orchestra is seen rehearsing the orchestra for their coming season of five concerts at Hart House.

All members of the School of Graduate Studies and associated faculties are invited to attend the opening Graduate Tea of the term on Monday, October 3rd, commencing at 4 p.m. in the Graduate Students' Lounge, 44 Hoskin Avenue. Come and meet your fellow students and learn about social events and facilities open to grad students during the forthcoming school year.

At Other Universities

Libraries Stay Open

Ithaca, N.Y. (Exchange)

Four of the main libraries at Cornell University have extended their closing hour by one hour to 11 p.m., it was announced last week.

The move was started last spring by the 1956 Class Council. University officials who were approached asked for evidence of student support before taking action.

The cost of operating the four libraries for the extra hour, through the University year, would amount to between $5,000 and $7,500.

Advantages of the later closing, pointed out in an editorial in the Cornell Sun, are:

"First, the library is a much quieter place to study than are most dormitories and other living units;

"Second, more general access to the painfully limited supply of reserve books for large courses will now be available;

"And finally, students who wish to attend such University events as lectures and concerts will still be able to get to the library for studying and/or taking out reserve books.

At Princeton University, the main library is open 8 a.m. to midnight six days a week. Part of the Sterling Library at Yale University is open till midnight week-nights.

The University of Toronto has also seen a great deal of controversy over the closing hours of its library. Last year, after the completion of the new wing, a nine o'clock closing was announced. After much petitioning, a ten o'clock closing was secured, but nothing further.

For some years students have been requesting an 11 o'clock closing of the library, claiming that such a regulation was necessary if sufficient work was to be done. This request has so far been refused.

Varsity Cadet Wins Ough Trophy

A University of Toronto student, Joel Wagman (I Law), was winner of the Ough Trophy for the most outstanding cadet at the RCASC School at Camp Borden last summer.

Officer Cadet Wagman was one of several U. of T. students who were given special mention at the summer training camps which they attended with COTC cadets from across Canada.

At the Camp Borden inspection by National Defense Minister Ralph Campney, Toronto students commanded three of the four units on parade. They were officer cadets Wagman, R. K. Thomson (II PHE) and D. J. Blenkarn (II Meds).

With their summer training completed the cadets begin fall training at the COTC Drill Hall, 119 St. George. They will appear regularly this fall in demonstrations on the lower campus and at home football games.

Student Fracas Rocks Queens Paint Stadium Protesting Seats

Kingston (CUP): A student fracas, the first of the year, has been reported at Queen's University. Last Friday night, student vandals broke into the newly renovated Richardson Stadium and painted the walls with signs protesting poor seats.

"The worst student outbreak in thirty years," was the comment of Queen's Athletic Board. The students broke into the stadium after a pep rally for the next day's football game.

"Pay but don't see!" "Better seats for students!" "Give us decent seats!" were some of the slogans painted.

The Athletic Board at Queen's had just erected new bleachers along the east side of the stadium to accommodate an extra 4,000 students. They had hoped that this new accommodation would eliminate the presence of sideliners in front of the stands, who, in the past few years, have impeded the view of spectators.

The vandals also painted a line down the reserved bleachers of the new student section. However stadium officials were able to cover the paint before the Queen's football game started on Saturday.

The court of the Alma Mater Society of Queen's (their student council) is to investigate the incident.

The Queen's Journal reports that students are still protesting.

CUP

Runneth-Over

BY VARSITY CUP STAFF

A regular CUP column was begun last year, and mid way through the year acquired a permanent name — CUP Runneth Over. We have decided it might be a good thing to continue both the name and the column this year.

CUP Runneth Over will be printed not daily, but occasionally. Student newspapers from Canada, the States, and all over the world will supply the news items, articles of interest, and even the jokes, to fill the columns.

For a beginning, here are a few news items.

Ottawa: Dr. MacOdrum, president and vice-chancellor of Carleton College, died suddenly of a heart attack in August. Dr. Gibson, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science, has been named acting president of Carleton College until a permanent appointment is made.

Minneapolis, Minnesota: Dormitory rates have gone up $30.00 a year this year. When this was suggested last year, there was much criticism of the proposed increase among students, but returning residents this year are making no objections.

Tampa, Florida: A man has been hired to police the University parking area, the Minaret reports. Parking tickets (cost — $1.00) will be given to all students violating the parking rules. The area will be policed five days a week from 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.

Morgantown, West Virginia: Campus parking permit stickers must be attached permanently to all cars, the Daily Athenaeum announces. It would seem that other universities besides Toronto have trouble with their parking facilities.

Saskatoon: Despite a heavy downpour, 1000 screaming students snake-danced their way through downtown Saskatoon last week. The snake dance is a traditional feature of freshmen ceremonies during the opening week. Little or no opposition was met from city police and motorists.

Sydney, Australia: We didn't know it but there is another Varsity in this wide world. The Sydney University paper, Honi Soit, carried a joke from The Varsity, which seems to have puzzled its editors. But this Varsity "is the newspaper of the University of Capetown, and is written half in English and half in Afrikaans."

Sydney, Australia: Fame of U. of T.'s Engineers has travelled half way round the world. An Australian student newspaper, commenting on the Winter Carnival at McGill, reported that: "Headlining Canadian talent was a male and female chorus line from Varsity's Engineering Musical, 'Skule Nite, 5T5.'" Another act was from Queen's University, USA, reported the newspaper.

Saskatoon: And finally we have a joke. The perennial Campus Cow in The Sheaf gave us this one: Two drunks were walking down a railroad track. One turned to the other and said, "Gee, but theese are long stairs," and the other replied, "It'sh not sho long but sheesh banisterah are sho damn low."

"University of Toronto 1984" To Be Float Parade Theme

The Blue and White Society is once again organizing the annual Homecoming weekend and All-Varsity Float Parade. This year festivities coincide with the visit of McGill University on Oct. 15.

The parade will start at 10:30 A.M. from Devonshire Place. It will move north to Bloor Street, east to Yonge Street, south to College and west to the Wallberg memorial building, continuing north into the campus.

Not all colleges and faculties have registered their intentions to enter a float. "We wish they would do so immediately by reporting to the S.A.C. office," said special events chairman Ron Wintrob today.

The following restrictions have been laid down:

- (1) Only one entry for each faculty, college or school or academic group.
- (2) All floats will conform to the theme "University of Toronto — 1984" and may be comical or serious.
- (3) Cost of the entry should not exceed $25.00. The float must be shorter than 100 feet long, 16 feet wide and 20 feet high.
- (4) The entry should not include any commercial advertising.

The 1984 theme promises to provide a tremendous scope to both serious and humorous expression. So far all faculties and colleges seem very enthusiastic about this plan, Wintrob said.

The award for the most outstanding display is the alumni plaque which will be presented at the final judging.

Writer's Group Meets Tonight At St. Michael's

The Modern Writer's Group... an important organization on the St. Michael's College Campus... will hold its first meeting of the year tonight.

The group is unique on the campus. It is not a literary society, but concerns itself solely with the work of its members.

The purpose of the group is to give students an opportunity to meet informally once a week, to read aloud and discuss their literary efforts.

Since its foundation six years ago, more and more students are turning to the Writers' Group to compensate for the lack of creative courses.

The only such course on the campus is limited to Fourth Year Honor Language and Literature majors, who must be recommended for admission.

The group publishes the "Griffin," the college literary magazine

Williams Speaks On Mass Media At HH Tonight

Professor D. C. Williams—an expert on communications, will speak tonight at the first Hart House Library evening. His topic is "Mass Media—Communication or Confusion."

Professor Williams, a member of the teaching staff here, is also a member of the communications seminar, supported by the Ford Foundation. This seminar published the magazine "Explorations" during the last two years.

Professor Williams will talk on the effect of the mass media—radio and television—on our daily lives. The lecture will begin at 7:30, and will be followed by a discussion period.

Party?

There's this sign on the office wall, says there's a party this Friday for all Varsity Staffers. It also tells where it is. There is a rumour that a new potage known as alcohol will be present in some form.

Wild Panty Raid At Michigan U Goes Unchecked

ANN ARBOR (Exchange): More than 1,000 students at the University of Michigan staged a "wild panty raid" here Friday. University officials said no disciplinary action would be taken.

The girls seemed to encourage them, officials admitted.

Some 5,000 students met Friday night to attend a pep rally for Saturday's Michigan, Michigan State game. But only about half of them moved to the field where the rally was to take place.

A horde of men students marched to the downtown area, where they tore down theatre marquees and pushed a car through a store entrance. They took down the sign on one marquee and rearranged it to spell "Michigan Beat State" and "Go Blue!"

Then the men rushed to Dormitory Hill where they besieged three dormitories housing freshmen coeds. The girls met the intruders with a barrage of toilet tissue, tin cans and wastebaskets filled with water. Many of the coeds began throwing lingerie out their windows.

One male student who scaled a wall to climb through a second-story dormitory window said a girl was beating him over the head with a book.

"But she didn't hit me very hard," he said.

Another rioter escaped with a woman's girdle and immediately slipped into it before joining the trophy seeking mob. University officials who tried to disperse the rioters said the girls seemed to be encouraging them.

Several students who gained entrance to one of the dormitories went to the second floor and began a room-to-room search for lingerie.

Ten city police officers were sent to the scene, but no arrests were made.

Dean of men Walter B. Rea said since no arrests were made he didn't see how he could discipline anyone." He said it was the first panty raid staged at the University since the spring of 1952.

The next issue of The Michigan Daily, student newspaper at Ann Arbor, stated editorially:

"Last night's riot makes one think the increased enrollment has brought students suffering from too early separation from their mothers."

Carpenter Reports

New Equality For Eskimos

"The Canadian government has already set in motion a gigantic plan for putting the Eskimo on equal footing with white people," Dr. E. S. Carpenter, U. of T. anthropology professor said yesterday.

Professor Carpenter has recently returned from a two-month, 2000 mile trip to the Arctic. He visited Baffin Land, travelling overland by dogsled, sleeping in igloos and eating caribou with the Eskimo, and speaking their language.

"Hitherto there has been a lot of Jim Crowism in the Arctic," he said. "Canadians are largely unaware of it, partly because they've never been taught to recognize it, even in themselves."

"But it's there, in the form of benevolent paternalism which is never vicious — except when an Eskimo 'forgets his place.'" Professor Carpenter believes that this has done much to hinder Eskimo adjustment to changing conditions and prevented them from playing a creative role in the new North.

"Much of the original problem," Prof. Carpenter explained, "stemmed from Canada's indifference to its own North and the fact that it was administered, if not formally, by foreign groups — missions and trade companies."

"Now the Canadian government has a program for opening up the North, led by B. G. Sivertz, chief of the Arctic Section. It gives the Eskimo the opportunity to learn English and offers him a future. The Eskimo are to be treated as Canadian citizens.

"We hear a lot about desegregation in the States, more should be said about what's being done in Canada," Carpenter said. "In the long run it may prove a greater contribution to democracy than the more costly DEW line in the States."

He felt that in administering this new policy the government will be helped by the fact that the Eskimo has never psychologically accepted an inferior role.

Journalism Topic 5 Noon Lectures To Begin Friday

A five-lecture course in journalism for all University of Toronto students interested in newspaper work opens in University College, Friday at 1 p.m.

Sponsored by the undergraduate newspaper, The Varsity, the series will be led off this week by John Dauphinee, General News Editor of The Canadian Press—Canada's major press association, distributing news to about 100 daily newspapers.

Mr. Dauphinee's lecture will cover aspects of news-gathering and writing. For details of time and place, please see tomorrow's issue of The Varsity.

NFCUS Asks Ottawa. To Give Five Million In Student Bursaries

Canada's national union of students today asked the Federal-Provincial conference in Ottawa to implement a program of scholarships and bursaries.

A brief presented by J. Y. Pilon, general secretary of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, asked for 2,500 annual bursaries with a total value of $5,500,000.

About 20 per cent of the student population would receive bursaries averaging $500 annually.

The brief went on to say many students were financially unable to attend University and many from low income families were unable to continue studies while holding a part or full time job.

J. Y. Pilon went on to say scholarships offered by Canada compare very unfavourably with other countries.

In the United Kingdom substantial living allowances are often given, while in France University education is virtually a state responsibility.

In Australia 3,000 annual scholarships are awarded, and in the United States federal aid has not proved necessary.

Statistics show that only 15% of university students in Canada receive small amounts, while in the United Kingdom 70 per cent are assisted, the brief said.

Student Protests At Poor Seating Get Covered Up

Kingston (CUP): Reports of the damage to Richardson stadium at Queen's University have been 'highly exaggerated' states the Queen's Journal.

Last Friday night, student vandals broke into the stadium and painted the walls and seats with signs and stripes.

The chief problem, the Journal reports, was that of cleaning up. But university staff and officials worked the entire morning before the football game covering up the paint.

The protests resulted from the student seating arrangements made by the Athletic board of Queen's. A new section, seating 4,000 students, has been added to the stadium. The centre section of the stadium is now being held for reserved seats and students claim there is insufficient seating for them in the new section.

Students are still protesting "unfair treatment" through letters to the Editor," the Journal says.

TV Media Revolution Claims Prof. Williams

We are in the midst of a media revolution which has produced more change in the past fifty years than in the previous two thousand, Prof. D. C. Williams said last night at the first Hart House Library Evening.

Prof. Williams outlined the researches of the "Culture and Communications" seminar which has been conducted the past two years at the University of Toronto.

Professor Williams, a member of the University of Toronto faculty, is a member of the Communications Seminar. This seminar publishes the booklet-magazine "Explorations" in which it details its findings.

The Communications Seminar, which has on its staff Professor Carpenter, was established to investigate the full implications of "communication" — ranging from modern-day television to centuries-old Eskimo languages.

"The late Dean Innis has pointed out in a historically new form of communication forces a dramatic reorganization of ideas and values in the community," said Prof. Williams.

The Toronto seminar investigated the implications of the contemporary mass media — television, radio, the printed word and the lecture.

After Prof. Williams' talk the group had a discussion with him on present day communications.

Dresden, Liberty Subject For Talk At Poli Ec Club

Mr. Syd Blum, executive secretary of the Joint Labour Committee on Human Rights, will speak to this year's first meeting of the Political Economy Club on "Dresden and Civil Liberties in Ontario." After a short talk and a National Film Board movie on the subject the meeting will be wide open for discussion.

Mr. Blum was brought up in New York. After serving overseas with the U.S. infantry he came to Canada to take his university training. He received a B.A. and M.A. in Sociology and Economics from the University of Toronto.

After graduating he worked for a year as an educational assistant in the Canadian Congress of Labour. In 1954 he took up his present position.

This is an open meeting of the Political Economy Club to which all are welcome. It will be held on Thursday, Oct. 6 at 4 p.m. in room 151 of the Economics Building.

Masquerade Revived At All-Varsity Dance

The Hart House Fall Dance this year will be a masquerade, said Murray Mogan, II Law, chairman Hart House Dance Committee.

Before 1937, the dance was the best known masquerade in Canada, he said. Through the war years, until last year, it was run like a fall prom, not unlike the Blue and White football dances.

Extra Light

The Editor,
The Varsity:

As the person responsible for the now notorious parade of the Freshmen from Loudon House, UC Men's Residence, of Thursday Sept. 30, I will permit myself to shed some extra light on the matter.

The parade was not meant to ape Billy Graham. Billy Graham is inimitable. It was intended to be an expression of our Joie de Vivre without any ulterior motive at all. The above is an explanation and not an apology, because if the parade succeeded in offending all the spiritual enuchs of the campus I am indeed amply rewarded.

Homunculi whose subarachnoid exudates I was amused to read in the yesterday's Varsity, indubitably represent the prevailing opinion of the University as proved by their courage of signing their aborted brainchildren with pseudonyms.

The logic exhibited by the above mentioned epistles should lead all the resident psychiatrists to turn insane, since the insane are more numerous than the psychiatrists.

Those interested in some further dissection of Billy Graham and followers are cordially urged to consult the "Practical Clinical Psychiatry" by Strecker, Ebaugh and Evans page 286 et seq. and to attend this week's debate in Hart House.

it's true

Television seems to be coming in for some hard knocks these days. First of all, one university Dean characterized TV as an "evil leviathan," capable of turning upon its creator, man, and gobbling him up.

Next another Dean banned television from a university residence.

And from Yale comes the news that the President of that institution has blasted television in the following terms:

"The art of conversation in this country has fallen on evil days. It is hushed and shushed in dimly lighted parlours by television audiences who used to read, argue, and even play bridge."

And you know — all these people could be right. We haven't had a decent bridge game in ages.

The Editor,

Gaels' Ace Quarterback Unveiled Here Saturday

This Saturday the Golden Gaels of Queens will enter Varsity Stadium to renew old rivalry with the Blues. Not since 1937 have the powerful Gaels won a football title. Last year, guided by their 3-S backfield of Gary Schreider, Ron Stewart, and Bill Surpliss the Gaels finished in a three place tie with Toronto and Western. In the playoff with Western to determine whom the Blues would play for the championship, the Gaels were defeated in the last few minutes of the ball game when a Mustang fell on a Gael fumble in the end zone for the winning touchdown.

This year the Gaels have their 3-S backfield plus the services of Gus Braccia, an American quarterback from Temple University, Philadelphia. Braccia, whose eligibility has been questioned, led the Gaels to a 30-10 victory over McGill Redmen last Saturday. Having been cut by Ottawa Rough Riders this summer, Braccia appeared on the Queen's campus four days before the season opened. Frank Tindall, coach of Queens, received him with open arms. Other coaches in the league voiced their beefs as to his eligibility, but to no avail.

Braccia majored in physical education at Temple and had received enough credits for his bachelor's degree. Still he remains registered at Queens in the first year of General Arts.

An evaluation of his worth to his team can be given by a simple examination of his record in last Saturday's game against McGill. In his only game in Canada Braccia threw four touchdown passes and scored a fifth major himself. Three of the touchdown passes were thrown to Stewart, the speedy halfback whom Bob Masterson claims is one of the best running halves in the Intercollegiate loop. The Gaels are itching to beat Toronto this year and will be with their American quarterback this Saturday in an attempt to do so.

PHE Conquers POT 3-2 Saints Beaten By Vic 8-1

The spirited PHE softball team outclassed POT, 3-2, in yesterday's game at Trinity field. Although the score presented a small margin between victory and defeat, PHE showed stronger teamwork and superior fielding. The infield held off any runners on base for the first three innings setting up solid defensive ball.

POT appeared disorganized and led PHE right into their hitting rally, scoring three runs mostly on errors and poor plays. POT came back with their own rally in the second inning scoring their two runs. However, the PHE outfield proved to be just as strong as its infield by its excellent performance. Ada MacPherson was outstanding in centre field for the PHE gals. Probably, if the game had not been called for time, it would have turned out to be a PHE onslaught.

While the rugby Blues were running around in the stadium, the victorious Vic types and the gals from Trinity were having their own game between the south goal posts. For the second day in a row, Mary Foster pitched her red and gold team to victory over the opposition and this time it was St. Hilda's who bowed by the one-sided score of 8-1.

Baby Blues Beginning

The Varsity Intercollegiate Intermediate football team will once again, try to retain the Shaw trophy which they have held for the last five years. Coach Jack Kennedy, serving his second year with the little Blues, makes no predictions, but is very hopeful. Speaking of his team's scrimmage with the Senior Blues last week, Kennedy said, "the Boys showed a lot of spirit, they were eager and keen."

Ahead of Kennedy is a big rebuilding job. Having lost twelve of last year's regulars, nine to the Blues, among them Jack Rogers, Dave Cresswell, Dan Mucci, Don Bagworth, John Casey, Walt Schmid, Santo Martini, Dick Risk, and Jim Rowney, Kennedy will be looking to some of last years' rookies to fill their brethren's boots.

Back at quarterback will be Stu Winter and Larry Joynt. Joynt has an injured shoulder and will not see action for a while. Returning to the team is fullback John Tattle, a good kicker and runner. Another veteran of last year's squad, Pete Polcrome, will return at centre to back up the line.

Halfback Don Comish, a standout with Skule last year, has moved up to strengthen the Baby Blue backfield. Ted Lansky of Engineering at end and Trevor Eytan of Vic have shown well in practice.

Other bright lights in training camp have been Bob Dann, a halfback from East York Collegiate, and Ed Berger, a city all-star center from Riverdale.

DVA Scholarship Plan Aids 45 U of T Students

Nearly 45 University of Toronto students—children of Canadian servicemen now dead—are currently getting assistance through the Department of Veteran's Affairs. Students receiving the benefits are receiving up to $500-a-year to cover tuition and a $25-a-month living allowance.

Applications still are being received for these benefits. The Department, however, stipulates that each applicant must be receiving a pension under the Canadian Pension Act at time of application.

During the '54-'55 session 36 students attended the university under this plan, and with some good results — 22 passed with honours.

Mr. A. E. Hounsom, Supervisor of the Education Assistance Act, says:

"I was more than pleased with the examination results of last year. It's apparent that these students have come to the University with a determination equal to that which characterized the ex-serviceman student after the last war."

Mr. Hounsom, who has guided the education of thousands of veterans during the last few years, is interested in hearing from anyone who considers himself eligible.

As for the reaction of the students attending the University under this plan:

"It's a terrific idea! I certainly shouldn't have had the opportunity otherwise," said Howard Birnie (U.C.).

Baronet Visiting Canada Teaches History At U.C.

Some honor students of Greek and Latin history in University College this term will study under Professor Sir Frank Adcock, Professor Emeritus of the University of Cambridge.

Professor Adcock was a Fellow and recently Vice-Provost of King's College. He has the degrees of M.A. and Litt. D. from Cambridge and honorary degrees from three other universities. He was honoured with the Order of the British Empire and is a Fellow of the British Academy.

Sir Frank was joint editor of The 12-volume Cambridge Ancient History to which he also made many valuable contributions. In 1954 Professor Adcock was knighted for his services to Greek history.

In the First World War he was a Lieutenant-Commander of the R.N.V.R. in the Admiralty Intelligence Division and was employed by the Foreign Office during the Second World War.

While Professor Adcock's honours have accumulated, his golf handicap has diminished and he is said to be a formidable opponent on the greens.

In the last half of this school year Professor Sir Frank Adcock will lecture at the University of California as Sather Professor of Classical Literature.

First Meet Today Of U of T Liberals

With the prospect of brain-teasing debates and visits of members of parliament, the Liberal Club holds its introductory meeting at one o'clock today in Room 4 U.C.

When asked about the forthcoming activities of the club, president Larry Levenstein explained that its aim is to "welcome to our group all those people sincerely interested in discussing vital issues facing Canada today."

He said that this first meeting was to find out the interests of the new members and to fit them into the programme. He emphasized that there are no intellectual barriers in the club, but that all are welcome who feel they have something to give.

Debate and discussion in which "we will consider any reasonable ideas set forth by the members" form a large part of the year's projects. Members will have a chance to take part in the federal by-elections and the University mock parliament, said Levenstein.

Jolliffe Discusses Socialist Issues At UC Friday

In a recent speech, President Sidney Smith said that political leaders "Are not getting down to fundamental issues."

Mr. E. B. Jolliffe, former CCF leader of Ontario, will speak Friday on "Fundamental Principles of Democratic Socialism."

Mr. Jolliffe was an outstanding politician in the province before his retirement in 1953.

The speech will be given at 1:00 p.m. Friday, in Room 37 at University College.

A Sports summary, fashion commentary, and modern jazz will be featured on tonight's On Campus, an all-college radio program. The show will be heard over CJBC tonight at 7:30 p.m.

The show's producer, Ted Shaefer, is a second year student at Victoria College. Shaefer said that tonight's show—the second in a series—would feature a report on back-to-college fashions for girls by Marg Noble, George Wiley will give an inter-collegiate sports summary of the past week.

The show will also contain a short news report of Toronto and other campuses. The Toronto University report is written by Varsity staffers.

Party

A small explosion will take place this Friday night. The event, known as a Varsity party, will scatter debris all over the northern part of the campus. For further details, all staffers see notice in Varsity office.

SIX FACULTIES FEATURE IN UC LECTURE SERIES

The University College annual lecture series begins on Thursday Oct. 20 with Prof. C. D. Rouillard's talk on "The Background of the Turkish Ceremony in Moliere's 'Le Bourgeois gentilhomme.'"

Prof. F. V. Winnett as Convener of the Public Lectures Committee invited six speakers, to represent all the faculties of University College. The sixth position, however, is filled by a guest speaker in order to give one faculty, a smaller one, a rest.

These lectures provide an opportunity for the members of the staff to exhibit their prowess in their own field of interest, said Prof. Winnett.

The titles of some of the lectures are: Plato's Use of Myth; Medieval Song; the Dawn of the Lyric; and Writing History in China.

The lecture series has two main aims. The first, according to Prof. Winnett, is "to provide a stimulus to the staff . . . by inspiring a man to do a piece of original research . . . and a considerable amount of work."

Secondly it is "an opportunity for students to widen their interest, and their insight into other fields of knowledge." He said that students of the Sciences are especially urged to attend because their education is lacking in the Humanities.

The lectures have been well attended in the past by alumni, public, and students.

Win Pocket Money

Here's a chance to have some fun while trying to win twenty-five dollars. Every Monday and Wednesday an anagram appears in The Varsity. The correct answer is either the name of a student or staff member, with clues provided, or a word from the back of the special time-table cards which we have made especially for you. If you haven't received one, pick one up in the S.A.C. Building.

The prize each week is twenty-five dollars. To win you must print the correct answers to BOTH Wednesday's and Monday's anagrams on a slip of paper together with your name and address. The slip should then be deposited in the special box in the S.A.C. Building. In the case of a number of correct answers the winner will be decided by lot. Contest open to students and staff of the University of Toronto.

TODAY'S ANAGRAM: GAWHU (STAR PLAYER)

Your answers to both today's and next Monday's anagrams together with your name and address must be in the S.A.C. office by 2 p.m. Wednesday, October 12th. The winner will be announced in the Varsity, Monday, October 17th.

Hart House Debaters Down On Billy As McCurdy Changes Mind, Vote

Last night the Hart House debaters defeated 54-49 the question for debate "This House Endorses Billy Graham."

The Honorary Visitor, Dr. W. J. McCurdy, Professor of Philosophy, University of Toronto, spoke first for the ayes then crossed the floor to speak and vote for the noes.

"Billy Graham's message is simple. It flatly names a spade a spade. What Billy would point to as sin, I would point to; what Billy would point to about coming to God, I would point to; and I think I would do it better," said Dr. McCurdy for the ayes.

Crossing the floor he then said, "A liberal institution must reject Billy Graham in the religious interest and in the interest of liberal education. Liberal education has the duty of bringing men face to face with both physical and spiritual reality."

He continued, "He has made a puppet out of Christ by telling me that religion cannot stand the test of what a responsible person would demand of it, namely a careful, critical examination."

Bill Morris, S.G.S., the first speaker for the ayes, said he was not concerned with the doctrine of original sin, or with Jesus Christ as a personal saviour, or with the objective validity of Billy Graham's theological views.

He quoted Reinhold Niebuhr, that religion is essentially absurd. He stressed that the truth or falsehood of religion do not matter, but that the value of religion is in adjusting the individual to his society and its traditional ideas.

Speaking for the noes, Stan Schiff, III Law, compared Graham's appeal to Dwight Eisenhower, Arthur Godfrey, and Cary Grant, and credited him with "the best public relations west of Davy Crockett Enterprises, Ltd." He attributed this appeal to anxiety and frustrated longing for the symbols of having arrived. "Billy Graham has all these symbols and he tells people they are worthless," he said.

Schiff criticized Graham's analysis as being too simple. "To him the coming cataclysm is part of God's plan. We can only obey, and be on the right side when the inevitable comes," he said. "Billy Graham," said Schiff, "endorses a refusal to solve problems on the basis of intelligent analysis."

Replying for the ayes, Ben Warren, III Emmanuel, said "My wife was a miserable wretch until I took her to hear Billy Graham." This was to illustrate the universality of Graham's appeal.

"His story is always the same," he said, "First, man's inability to cope with his problems, and second, the need for obedience and acceptance." He stressed Graham's good work in returning sinners to "the hands of the clergy."

Ian Scott, S.G.S., replying for the noes, did not question Graham's sincerity, he said. He compared Graham to St. Francis of Assisi, St. John of the Cross, and Ignatius Loyola. "However," he said, "he lacks the wisdom of St. Thomas."

He said the success of Graham's over-simplified "cult of Christian Peace and Happiness" was also its failure. "Billy Graham can lead a retreat from the world because he is so obviously of the world," he said.

Staff And Students Deny Charges Of 'Inhuman, Revolting' Initiations

Charges of inhuman treatment to University College freshmen were sharply denied late yesterday by both staff and student members of the college.

In a letter to the editor of The Varsity yesterday, a group of irate Whitney Hall co-eds claimed the freshmen in Jeanneret House of the new UC Men's Residence had been subjected to "two weeks of Hell" and made to perform "revolting" tasks.

They said the freshmen had been kept up late at nights by unrelenting seniors and showered at inopportune times. The letter charged that freshmen had had no chance to study in the entire two-week period.

"The entire story is a lie," said John Woods, II Philosophy and History, a member of the 27-man residence. "Two of the freshmen said they did not want to participate, and were not forced to. Seven of the other eight freshmen thoroughly enjoyed themselves."

"The situation cannot be serious," commented Dr. Bissell, Dean of Residences. "There are occasional indiscretions, but the dons have not approached me and I presume everything is under control."

He said he would "certainly look and see."

The freshmen were divided on the initiations issue. One felt that the sophomores, not themselves initiated last year, were too severe in their treatment.

Another, who kept free of "fag duty," thought it was "a lot of fun." A third first year student said the residence had too much useless tradition. And a fourth called some of the soph "bullies."

Claims that new members of Loudon House in the UC Residence were forced to walk around outside in their bare feet were neither supported nor denied.

Some members of Jeanneret House outlining initiation proceedings, said that no "hazing" had been done, and that relations between freshmen and seniors in the residence were "cordial."

They said members were initiated according to the tradition established at the former residences. Freshmen were given a specific duty to perform during one week, and were to do not more than five tasks for the other residents a day, they said.

The members emphasized that the initiation was an event for the entire house. "On the scavenger hunt which ended the initiation, all the residents went out in groups—not just the freshmen," said Woods.

The week-long chores included such tasks as collecting six quarts of manure (bottled), 20 cigarette butts of different brands or certain female necessities. At no time were the freshmen prevented from studying, said Woods.

However, some freshmen said that they were sent out to buy cigarettes, etc., for other residents at 2 a.m.

On the final night of initiation, freshmen were painted up by Whitney Hall residents, said Woods. He said the painting was done by the same group of girls that later complained to The Varsity.

U of T Students Get Discounts Through NFCUS Intervention

Discounts on nearly every type of merchandise will soon be available to University of Toronto students, said John Woods, II UC, chairman of the Students' Discount Service, in an interview yesterday.

Reduced rates on clothing, shoes, books, jewellery, and many others are expected as soon as the service, sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students, gets under way on the campus.

Similar NFCUS-sponsored schemes are presently in operation at Dalhousie University and McMaster University in Hamilton, said Woods. Many colleges throughout the country are displaying interest in the S.D.S. potential to save the student money. A similar system works in the United States on a nationwide basis.

Should the plan receive support at the forthcoming NFCUS conference in Edmonton, the service will be promoted nationally. This would enable a Varsity student to receive his discount in British Columbia, for example.

In Toronto several merchants have already become part of the Service. Within an estimated three weeks, a list is to be issued to every Varsity student of all the merchants concerned, their addresses, and discount rates. The student will identify himself with his A.T.L. card.

If S.D.S. is endorsed at the Edmonton Conference, the student will receive a special NFCUS membership card entitling him to discounts at all S.D.S. stores in Canada.

Till I Found 40,000 Brothers

I Was Lost

When I came to college last year I was, to put it bluntly, lost. I'm from out of town, and had been to Toronto only once before registering. I knew no one; didn't even know what my course was going to be like, having taken engineering on the advice of my fifth form teacher. I was living in a little room upon Avenue Road, consisting of a bed and a dresser. This was to be my home for the school term. Everything at school was different, and I became quite discouraged. I was on the verge of packing up and going home.

And then, around the end of October, a fraternity brother from my class invited me for lunch. I was invited around for numerous meals, and introduced to all the members. The warmth with which they greeted me was something that cannot be put down on paper. During these visits to the fraternity a friendship was reached with the members that I had not experienced from any classmates or other associates at college. This was not only with engineers, but also with artists.

After a week or so, I was in-

There are thirty men's fraternities and nine women's fraternities on the University campus. They are not officially recognized by the University but are sponsored by an International Organization with their main branches in the States.

The majority of fraternities are found on St. George St., or Fraternity Row. Membership is voluntary and admission is by invitation of the old members. Rushing begins in the Fall immediately after the term begins and lasts approximately two and a half weeks. After the rushee has accepted the fraternity's bid he becomes a pledge and by Christmas is a full member.

visited to join the fraternity, and was told of the aims and obligations of the fraternity. After very serious consideration, I decided to join. When I told the fraternity of my decision, I was pledged and accepted as a brother into the house. I moved in after Christmas, and served the regular pledge period. During this time, and before exams, many things at school confused me. The brothers in the house gladly gave up their time to straighten things out. In March, I was initiated.

What has fraternity life meant to me? It has meant the beginning of a whole new life. I have built a friendship with my brothers which will last long past university. I now have a home away from home. I have over 40,000 brothers all over the world, pledged to mutual assistance.

I could go on and on, but will sum up by saying that I consider joining this fraternity the best thing I have ever done.

Runneth-Over

Durham, North Carolina: Panty raids and parking problems have already made their presence felt at Duke University this year. About 500 male students attempted to enter the nurses' dormitory in search of panties last week, the Duke Chronicle reports. The campus and city police were required to break up the crowd. Only a few men actually entered the dorm and the spoils themselves were slight. Ten pairs of panties (one a bright red) and one slip have been reported missing.

Officials of the University have taken a dim view of the incident. The participants have been labelled "irresponsible and immature" and the dean of the undergraduate men reported that steps have already been taken to prevent further incidents of this sort. The Air Force ROTC board has warned that any cadets found participating in such an incident will be disenrolled.

Parking cars is proving as much of a problem at Duke as at other Canadian and American universities. Too many cars and too little space, is the cry. One solution suggested is that every car owner should pay $1.00. The money collected would be used to pave and expand present lots. The only other remedy seems to be a decrease in the number of cars, one student ruefully commented.

Vancouver: Initiations at the University of British Columbia turned into a pitched battle last week as the frosh turned the tables on the engineers and dunked them in lily ponds. The engineers retaliated, slashing the skirts of freshettes "because they're too darned long" and raiding the women's dormitories. Hostilities evidently soon came to an end, as the engineers were seen not long after buying cokes for all the girls.

Tampa, Florida: According to the Navy Guide of Norfolk, anatomy is "something that everybody has but looks better on a girl."

Saskatoon: "What was the hardest thing you learned at college?" demanded the father of a first year engineer. "How to open beer bottles with a quarter."

What Type Is Leader?

What kind of personality makes a good political leader?

Some 25 University of Toronto Liberal Club members were unable to decide here yesterday when they met for the first get-together of the college year.

The topic was sparked off by President Sidney Smith's inaugural address: the president wanted a healthier respect for the politician who isn't swayed by public pressures.

However, one section of yesterday's meeting maintained that the politician's bounden duty was to heed the cry of his constituents.

Larry Levenstine, a third-year student and currently President of the Liberal Club on this campus, named four political leaders whom, he thought, exemplified two approaches to political leadership.

Former U.S. President Harry Truman was called "dynamic" by Levenstine, but he thought Vice-President Richard Nixon lacked dynamic qualities.

The late Canadian Prime Minister Mackenzie King was also termed "dynamic" by the Liberal Club President.

Later this year the club will discuss Canadian surplus wheat and a further topic, "Do we have government by the people, the cabinet or Parliament?"

This continues the group's policy of "discussing vital issues facing Canada today." The first meeting was designed to find out the interests of the students and fit them into the programme.

Adviser System Criticized Hard At Morgantown

Morgantown, West Virginia (Exchange): The adviser system for students at the University of West Virginia has recently been subject to critical examination, the Daily Athenaeum reports.

The adviser system was set up to help students choose their schedules and ensure that they would have enough subjects to graduate. Recently certain seniors have not had the proper requirements for graduation although they followed the schedules approved by their advisers.

Suggestions have been made that advisers take more personal interest in the student in order to help him with problems. Advisers were criticised who did not take time to help students work out satisfactory schedules.

It was also recommended that advisers should be well enough acquainted with the field in which they are advising to give information on job and scholarship opportunities.

Principles Leaving Says Bahai Meeting

People simply do not live up to their religious principles, said a member at the opening meeting of the Bahai faith here Tuesday night.

About a dozen Bahai members and friends attended the meeting held in Falconer Hall.

The fact that man has failed to live up to the teaching revealed to him by prophets such as Moses, Christ or Buddha was pointed out by a Bahai member. She said that in her opinion Bahai held the key to the goal man has striven to attain throughout history.

During the meeting a panel discussion of the 110-year-old tradition of the faith and its principles was held. The equality of men and women, and spiritual solutions for world problems were discussed.

The Bahai faith, one member said, boasts representatives from all religious faiths. "It's not restricted to any particular religious segment," he said.

Composition Test For U. C. Frosh Practicing 2 R's

A compulsory examination in English Composition will be held Tuesday, Oct. 11, from 8 to 10 a.m. for all first year University College students, announced Prof. R. S. Harris yesterday. The exam is sponsored by UC, and is not given to members of other colleges.

An advertisement in The Varsity will inform literate freshmen where the test will take place.

"The purpose of this examination," said Prof. Harris, "is to test the first year students in the basic skills of reading and writing to enable them to discover their personal weaknesses in English."

After the paper is marked the student may discuss it with a member of the English department, and obtain remedial exercises if he desires.

All first-year classes will be cancelled to allow students to write the test.

Medics Playoff Bound In Mural Grid Wars

The moment that the Intramural Sports Committee allowed the Meds football team to enter Group 2 to be combatting companions of UC, Forestry, Dents, and Jr. SPS, the young doctors found themselves in the much envied position of being conceded, by various speculators in the grid game, a splendid opportunity to come up with a first place finishing ball club.

If the doctors come through as expected, they'll enter the Mulock Cup semi-finals for the first time in many years. To win the Cup itself is an ambition which the Red-and-Black have not altogether given up yet. That ambition has come from the realm of fantasy to the realm of potential reality.

The recent shift of teams has been quite beneficial to them in more ways than one. Interest around the Faculty of Medicine has perked up and the players have taken unto themselves a new spirit for the coming competition. They can be able, at long last, to hope to win games instead of knowing that the hope of a win was merely a figment of their imaginations. No one can blame them, as the recent shifts will prove to be beneficial to intramural football as well, which has been in need of a shot in the arm.

Coaches Bob Macdonald and Rich Bethune have whipped up a speedy squad. Doug Wilson, a veteran line star, and Barry Cutler, a quarterback from UTS who, bolster the line for Meds.

Meds will be using a split "T" formation this year, and they have been fortunate in obtaining the services of one Paul Druckman, a quarterback from UTS, and who, it is reported, is quite adept at the new formation being used. John Fowler will return to his spot in the backfield this year so that the players that Meds have lost so far through studies, etc., will be at least counterbalanced by the amount of new rookies mingling with the rough and ready veterans.

Thus, to the experienced observer, the Meds football team will be in there giving it the old college try in an effort to make this season a winning season as well as a memorable one.

That's our Phil Muntz grinding out a gain in last Saturday's game with the Western Mustangs in London. Doug Aitchison (60) moves in for the kill. Muntz will be in action again this Saturday when the Queen's University Golden Gaels make their first appearance for this season in Varsity Stadium, in an effort to break the first-place tie in the Intercollegiate Football Union. —VSP By Moishe Reiter

BY JOHN WILSON

Word has it that there's a chap at Queen's with a strong arm and a good eye who may just pitch the Golden Gaels to their first Intercollegiate football title since the fall of 1937. Word has it too that this same chap arrived in Kingston via a rather devious route; from Philadelphia to Ottawa, and thence to the Gaels' stamping ground, where, to all intents and purposes, he will remain until next May, a first year Aris student among other things.

We understand that the man in question, quarterback Gus Braccia, has spent the last three years at Philadelphia's Temple University, enrolled in Physical Education, and, having added a summer's studying to his total, is credited with four years of schooling at the University level. We further understand that Braccia is an "A" student, but that he does not possess a degree from Temple University. A moment's reflection upon these facts told us that the kingpin of the 1955 Gaels is eligible to play senior football in our league.

A moment's reflection, that is, after carefully perusing By-Law VI, paragraph 6.5 of the Constitution of the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union. This masterpiece of enigmatic literature, revised and rewritten only last year by the Executive Committee of the C.I.A.U., reads as follows:

"A student transferring from any recognized University or college to a member of this Association (the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association of the C.I.A.U.) shall be required to complete one year (twelve calendar months) in his new institution before being allowed to compete in any senior activity. A student so transferring shall not be subject to this regulation when the transfer is to a new course or to a course proceeding to a higher degree, or to continue a course not completely given in the former member."

Braccia, having entered a different course at Queen's, and having passed in his most recent year at Temple, is eligible for senior football. However, we are not questioning the eligibility of the former Temple University star. What we are questioning is the value of such a regulation as that quoted above, when it is so full of loopholes as to permit such goings-on as we are at this moment witnessing in the Intercollegiate Football Union. We are given to understand that the rule was rewritten last year, and that it is now in its first year of trial, but it appears that the men who wrote the rule were blissfully unaware of the modern trend in sport to win at all costs. There can be no doubt that this trend has extended itself to the ranks of college football, and so we would humbly suggest that the Executive Committee of the C.I.A.U. prevent such situations as the one now before us by again rewriting By-Law VI, paragraph 6.5. If they just erased the last sentence it would seem that the loopholes would be removed, and that there would never be any question as to a student's intentions of being a student.

In the Big Ten College Conference in the northwestern United States, the members apparently no longer trust each other, and have provided an effective regulation for policing their respective athletic relations. In that league a player's eligibility is governed by the number of years he has played a particular sport at the senior level. Athletes in that conference are only allowed three years of senior competition, so that transferring to another college, a ballplayer would only be eligible if he had competed for less than three years at whatever college he came from. Such a rule, applied to our own league, would make Gus Braccia ineligible, but the question is, do we have to see the Intercollegiate Football Union come to this?

Leaving the real world for a moment, and entering the realm of fantasy, one can envisage rules governing the number of imports in one season, and what allowances would be made for them. This is hardly the way to run an ostensibly amateur football league, but it is conceivably what it will come to if one member of the league violates the code of honor now in force. This column, for lack of a better name, is entitled Speaking of Sport. We were just wondering if what we've been talking about is really sport.

Blue View . . . Don't forget the student ticket sale today at the south end of the Arena between 10.00 a.m. and 5.00 p.m. This is your last chance . . . the Intercollegiate water polo team has already begun practice, but recruits are needed. The team holds forth in the Hart House pool Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays from five until seven at night . . . try and catch the Interfaculty track meet today in the Stadium at 1.30.

Panthers Could Be Tough If They Find Quarterback

After a surprisingly low turnout of veterans at the first few practices, Trinity coach R. J. Gray happily reports that he now has nine of last year's regulars out in uniform. We found R. J. and his pigskinners scrimmaging in a secluded corner of the Trinity field after wending our way through a maze of soccerites, lacrossers, Varsity Blues, and even the odd softballer.

The big gap on the Trinity squad is quarterback, vacated by last year's star John Whyte. Brook Ellis, who quarterbacked Upper Canada to the Little Big Four championship last year, is vying for the position along with Jim Loucks and Dap Smith, both backfielders last year for the red and black. Another big problem is the kicking department, Pete Gordon handled the punting chore last year and as yet a good replacement has not been discovered.

Besides Smith and Loucks, five men return to the backfield in the persons of Dave McGregor, Red Duncan, Jimmy Brown, John Cumberland and Dave Smith. Max Saunderson is back at centre as are Bill Lovering and Win Repall on the ends. Mike Shoemaker and Duart Farquharson are back on the line along with John Grieve, Bill Emke, Ollie White, John Bogart and Doug Bean.

Coach Gray is sticking to the T-formation used so successfully last year and is counting on a hard-charging, fairly heavy line, along with a well-balanced backfield, to wrest the Mulock Cup from the Engineers. Gray's final comment was, "Let us find a good quarterback and we'll be pretty hard to beat."

Gray, and the odd veteran to whom we spoke, called Skule the team to beat and we're inclined to agree. If SPS does retain the championship this year, however, it won't be from lack of spirit and enthusiasm on the part of the Trinity entry. Interest is high, the practice turnout is exceptionally good, and we feel that one quip we caught from the field pretty well sums up the feeling of the team members: "At the end of last season we said, 'Wait until next year!' Well, the Dodgers did it, why can't we?"

Smith, Arnold Meet In Final This Afternoon

Selection will begin this afternoon for the members of Varsity's Intercollegiate tennis teams, in preparation for the Intercollegiate tournament which will take place October 13 and 14.

Robin Arnold (Meds) will meet Barry Smith (SPS) at 2:30 at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club in the finals of the University tournament, which will also decide who will be first and second men on the senior team.

At the same time an elimination series will begin to decide the other two members of the senior team and the three players on the intermediate team. Losing semi-finalist Bill Grove (Vic) will take part in the series while the other semi-finalist, Dave Alexander (SPS), will be unable to compete due to ineligibility.

All quarter-finalists will also take part, as well as some of the leading challengers who were eliminated in the University tournament last week. In case of bad weather the participants are asked to contact the Intramural Office

UC Gals Drop Game To PHE

If you think the finish of the World Series means the end of the baseball season, you are 100% wrong. The female edition of the Varsity Little World Series (the women's softball league, in case you are one of the uninformed) is getting under way in great fashion now that all eyes can be focused on our edition of Ebbet's Field (that owned by our gowned confreres) and baseball (played as only women can.)

The ill-fated P.H.E. gals staged a dynamic comeback to defeat their U.C. sisters 14-11. The game was definitely in the bag for P.H.E., as the athletic gals were batting superbly all through the first three innings, until the last inning when U.C. made a tremendous effort and brought in seven runs in short order, making an action-packed finale to the game.

The star of the U.C. team, an aspiring Gil-ian Hodges, was Peg Mahaffy, who brought in three homers to boost the score as well as adding to the fastness of the play. P.H.E.'s Ann Stainton also homered, showing that she will also be a contender for the most valuable player award. Still no sign of a potential Johnny Podres, but who knows what hidden skill may be uncovered in the succeeding games?

Stadium Scene Of Interfac Meet

This afternoon at 1:30 track and field gets under way for this season with the Interfaculty Meet at Varsity Stadium. Open only to those competitors who have not taken part in senior Intercollegiate track, this afternoon's events will be a preliminary to next Wednesday's University championship meet, when the members of the two Intercollegiate teams will be selected.

Coach Hal Brown promised good entertainment for the multitudes today while commenting on Varsity's chances in Intercollegiate competition this fall. Brown expects the new crop of freshmen, who appear to possess more talent than in former years, to fill the several large vacancies on his title-holding senior team.

Field man John Ramsell and BEG hurdler Norm Williams will be lost to the team this season through ineligibility, but sprinter Dick Harding will be returning to bolster the club. Harding was a triple event winner last year as was Williams. Norm also won the Cody Trophy for the best performance of the afternoon.

The University of Toronto, defending champions in Senior Intercollegiate track, will journey to London on October 19 for the Intercollegiate meet, with Western as the host University. The Intermediate meet will be held at the same time. McMaster are the title-holders in this group.

the chosen few

Fraternities — are they good or are they bad? Is it wise to join or not to join? This is one of the most controversial and long-standing of all campus debates.

One of the most frequently heard charges in such debates is that fraternities discriminate in their membership on racial and religious grounds. Such discrimination does exist at the present time on this campus in some of the fraternities.

Even more serious is the charge of social discrimination or exclusiveness. There is of course one obvious discrimination that all fraternities make — financial. If you can't afford to pay the fees, then you can't belong.

Some of the fraternities also try to build up their ranks as much as possible from the 'right sort' of people — the children of the great, the famous, and the rich.

What happens to a student after joining a frat? Undoubtedly, the fraternities nurture in their members a spirit of social superiority. Sometimes said, and always implied, is the idea that frat people are better than anyone else — they are the chosen few.

One of the main arguments that have been urged in defence of fraternities is that they develop an admirable friendship and fraternal feeling among the members.

This would indeed be admirable if the easy friendship was extended to all — but given to only a few, it restricts the students' minds and the campus life of the university as a whole.

Because the frat members come from such a narrow class in society to begin with, and because their fraternity life isolates them to a degree from the rest of the campus, they tend to develop a distressing similarity in personality, dress, and habits.

Much is made of the religious and moral principles on which fraternities are based. But in many frats these principles remain in the ritual books, to be consulted only on occasion.

Of course, it must be admitted that there is a great deal of variety among the fraternities, and many of these allegations do not apply to all frats or frat members. And many of the campus frats have been the leaders in charitable work — some carrying far more than their share of such constructive activity. Whether they do so because of genuine charity or because they feel it is "the thing to do," remains a moot question.

Because on this campus the frats do not have the stranglehold on social activities and prestige that they possess elsewhere, objections to them are less valid than at other universities.

For those who want and need it, the fraternities can provide a good time, good fellowship in a restricted circle of acquaintances, and lots of beer.

But others may find that they prefer a freer life, a more inquiring mind, and the difficulties of the open campus.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Degrading and Revolting

The Editor,
The Varsity:

This being the outset of another academic year, initiations in each faculty on the campus take their course and both Freshmen and Sophomores alike enjoy a brief, exciting swing at a life a little out of the ordinary.

However, contrary to custom, Jeanneret House in the U.C. Men's Residence has enforced upon its Freshmen a series of degrading tasks, which they call initiation.

For two weeks now the mere half dozen or so Freshmen, who are the overwhelming minority in the house, have been fagging for all Senior members and added to this 'have been' forced to take part in at least three hell nights. The many things they have to do and 'have to get can only be summed up as revolting. As in our initiation, there should be some staff interference. An outline of the initiation should be submitted to the Dean before being allowed to pass.

The Jeanneret boys in Second, Third, and Fourth years are supposed to be mature. As University students, can they not think and act as such, instead of forcing their new members to take part in numerous childish pranks and many useless, but hectic procedures?

One night of fun is acceptable, but when it turns out to be an extended horror week it ceases to be funny. Like all students, these Freshmen have work to do and when after several late or all night sprints they are tired, how can they be expected to attend their lectures in the morning — also how can they be expected to feel anything but contempt for their despicable seniors?

Why couldn't they have a sensible and constructive initiation? The residence could certainly stand a bit of cleaning up.

Initiation is new to the Sir Daniel-Wilson Residence, and this year they have proved that they are unworthy of instituting it again.

Disgusted Whitney Hall Girls,

Too Bad

The Editor,
The Varsity:

With regard to the U.C. Men's residence initiation demonstration, we personally feel it is too bad University College students are not broad-minded enough or have no more respect for one of the few men in our time who has the courage and conviction of helping humanity than to ridicule such a person as Dr. Billy Graham.

We feel that The Varsity should have had more to say than "a good time was enjoyed by all."

This demonstration showed the ignorance of the participants, also it was very degrading to the college.

Five U.C. Women Residents

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The October 4th (Wednesday) issue of The Varsity was intolerable. In this young country of ours, we at the University have a definite responsibility towards Canada's still-fluid culture. One would think that the paper of a University, supposedly a cradle of culture, would be capable of expressing ideas that, if not beautiful or intellectual, would at least be human.

But "The Varsity" was sub-human; bestial, animal. If it has no morals to be appealed to, can we not appeal to its intellect? to its sense of duty? to its humanity? This issue was an insult, first, to men, who were presumed to have no minds; only lust; and second to women, who were presumed to be pandering only to a man's lower instincts.

We demand at least humanity in our newspaper! It has intelligent editors and staff members. Why are they betraying their trust?

Hosannas!

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Hosannas to thee, almighty Richard Kalinowski, fountain of wisdom and babbling brook, who hast vanquished by thy Transcendence the infidel Billy Graham, puny mortal who dared act as the instrument of God. Thou, mightier than God, hast vanquished this presumptuous usurper of thy holy station. Beloved be thou of men, as one who having been initiated into the Higher Mysteries of some occult tongue hast condescended to communicate to us aspirants of the outer circle, a measure of thy Divine prescience.

O Illustrious Master, unsurpassed as thou art in equity, probity, and humility, vouchsafe to me, thy unworthy disciple, the inestimable happiness of singing thy praises to the multitudes, that await thy Kingdom.

Before the sign of the Swastika!

Paul Tomas,
III U.C.

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Allow me to express what I gather is a minority opinion regarding Billy Graham's recent address at Convocation Hall. In the first place, I am not impressed by the decision of the editors to hand this event over to the AM&D staff. No doubt some intelligent criticism of Dr. Graham's platform skill would have been of value to us. But what little faith I may have had in the ability of the AM&D people to provide such a criticism has been effectively shattered by an item on the same page: in this an ecstatic staffer pontificates on the artistic delights of what is undoubtedly the most infantile (not to say nauseating) brand of entertainment in the world—namely, British Music Hall!

Your reviewer of the Graham speech ("E. S."), notes something of the fact that Dr. Graham possesses perhaps the most polished oratorical talent anywhere, but cannot believe that so convincing and dynamic a personality could be operating on anything more than sheer nerve. He will of course disagree with me when I suggest that this powerful personality could only be the product of a conviction of at least equal dimensions, and that this in turn could not be constructed out of air but must be the product of a very real force in Dr. Graham's life.

In fact, the Graham personality fairly explodes with a moral vigour that could only be ignored by an effort of will of which only the most self-proud are capable. Dr. Graham's confession that he owes this strength to something so old-hat as the Bible strikes "E. S." as absolutely side-splitting—just as side-splitting, in fact, as the suggestion that the present world crisis could depend on that old bogey called "sin."

I must admit that "E. S." as a journalist, knows his tactics. He knows, for instance, that the surest way to cause a mass demonstration on the part of Toronto students against anything is to label it as "an American product."

American mass advertising techniques are for peasants, and Varsity students are not peasants. Dr. Graham has employed many of these techniques to advertise his coming; he is therefore a peasant. "E. S." has read the blurbs and studied the posters and has been deceived.

Nothing, on the Cinemascope level, happened at all: Graham's message possessed all the simplicity of sincerity; and "E. S." has been cheated. Quite early in his career, "E. S." tore off the cork tip and counted the filters: there are only 19,909; he will never again be made the victim of American mass-advertising. He is immune.

WHY BELONG?

Why The Fraternity?

Aims and Achievements

BY DON LANDON

The college fraternity is an institution native to the North American continent, and nearly all of the Toronto fraternities are chapters of large international fraternities which were founded at colleges in the north-eastern U.S. in the period 1825-1875. Having developed rapidly in the U.S., the fraternity system spread across the border to Toronto and McGill towards the end of the last century.

In what ways can an undergraduate benefit from membership in one of these bodies? What briefly are their aims? Foremost perhaps is their contribution to the creation of intimate and lasting friendships. When young men associate together in the close relationships of fraternity life, and in the conducive atmosphere of brotherly regard, friendships readily flourish. Far from being cliques of single-minded individuals, the fraternities bring together into a congenial fellowship men of varied geographic, ethnic, educational, and religious backgrounds, and thereby exercise on their members a great broadening influence. Since the student life of this university tends to centre in the different faculties and colleges, the fraternity member enjoys daily contacts and exchanges of ideas, with students of other branches of learning—an edifying experience that he would perhaps not otherwise have.

The fraternities provide for their members a variety of social activities and opportunities for recreation, and especially for that comradely fellowship which men as gregarious beings seek. The fraternity house, with its esprit de corps, and its atmosphere of brotherly loyalty and esteem, is a congenial and satisfying home-away-from-home in a way that other residences for students are unlikely to be. The fraternities direct the thinking of their members toward lofty principles of self-betterment and moral advancement. They stress academic achievement, are proud of the many Rhodes Scholars among their members, and believe that the scholastic average of their houses is better than that of non-fraternity men. Their weekly meetings provide valuable training in democratic procedure, poise, and self-expression.

The extent to which these purposes are realized in a fraternity depends on the calibre of its active membership and on the contribution to its life that the individual members make, but the fact that the fraternities have flourished on this campus decade after decade, and continue to attract men of the highest calibre, indicates that in large measure their aims find fulfilment.

Friends, Frolics, Freedom Provided by Fraternities

U of T students join fraternities chiefly for friendship and companionship. Over two-thirds of the men interviewed for this week's FORUM reported that the need for closer contact or intimate friendship with other students was one of the main motivating factors in their decision to join.

Over 40 fraternity brothers were asked: "Why did you join a fraternity?"

Most of the answers expressed a need or desire for friendship, both during University and afterwards. Many others mentioned social life, which they said would be cheaper, more convenient, or more satisfying. The third reason was independence.

Some fraternity brothers stressed the move towards maturity which is gradually taking over the fraternity movement today. Secret oaths, handshakes, and other mystic symbols of the fraternity movement are slowly disappearing, they said, while initiation ceremonies are becoming, less sadistic.

On the other side, campus independents said fraternities were discriminatory in terms of colour and of religion; they said too that fraternity activities detract attention and support from campus activities, and that fraternity brothers, because of their divided loyalties between campus and frat, cannot adequately and wholeheartedly participate in either.

Fraternity brothers at three fraternities, when asked about discrimination in their frats, denied the charge.

"Chapters in our national fraternity are drawn from all kinds of ethnic and religious groups," said one brother.

"There may be discrimination up the street," said another, "but our fraternity is small enough so we can select pledges on the basis of the individual."

No-specific comments were received as to how pledges were chosen.

Recently a survey at the University of British Columbia of the frats on campus revealed that 13 out of 16 of their international fraternity constitutions contained discriminatory clauses.

Men were interviewed from six fraternities, while two sororities were represented.

Stepping - Stone

After internship, the fraternity stands as an intermediary between our parents and our life on our own. Association with alumni gives us a better idea of our medical career.

We know in a fraternity that we are answerable to ourselves; since we are our own authority, there is no longer any meaning in breaking the rules. Because we live with close friends, we learn to exercise self-discipline.

Opportunist

I've found that social life is better organized and cheaper. You get the chance to make connections in business for after graduation. As well, a brother can travel almost anywhere in North America and know he'll be received as a friend.

Experience

The fraternity gives valuable managing and secretarial experience that isn't so accessible elsewhere on the campus. Also, the advantages of a congenial social life can't be ignored. Quiet hours are enforced each night, thus providing good study periods.

Ideally

Ideally, a fraternity should harmonize with and complement University life, since it should encourage both scholarship and participation in extra-curricular activities among its members. A fraternity is what its members make it, and obviously in practice fraternities do, to some degree or other, fall short of their ideal.

Hypocritical Superiority

At one time I was a member of a fraternity on this campus. I quit, for the following reasons:

1) The constitution of the fraternity, to which I was required to swear my allegiance, contained discriminatory provisions phrased in highly offensive language. These provisions restricted membership in the fraternity to white Christians, and also stated that white Christians had a duty to show guidance and direction to inferior peoples.

2) The entire idea of the fraternity seemed to be based on "social exclusiveness" which I found revolting. Many of the frat members evidently felt that membership in the frat implied that they were of some superior breed.

3) The frat was supposed to rest on a strong moral and religious basis. However, the actions of the members and the fraternity constitution rendered this pretension ridiculous.

B. D., IV UIC

Brotherhood an Exception

There are probably some fraternities who believe in brotherhood. In my opinion these are the exception rather than the rule in Toronto. I have discovered that some had, if they do not still possess, clauses in their constitutions barring people with certain beliefs. If they want to be counted part of the brotherhood of man (as they profess) let them end discrimination on religious and/or racial grounds.

Further, I have seen fraternities the cause and origin of much unnecessary and unwarranted backbiting. This arises out of their being select cliques who have come to believe that the frat is the end in itself. How many times in student government elections have frat members been asked by their frats to run for office because the fraternity wanted to boost its prestige and extend its influence? And how many times have members voted strictly on fraternity lines without ever bothering to discover the merits or faults of all of the candidates? And after elections we see how interested these people are in their student government. For example, in 1954 the U.C. Lit and W.U.A. tried to arrange a week-end at Caledon so that the new executives could get to know each other and discuss future College activities. The week-end failed in its objective because a significant number of the executives preferred to attend rushing parties rather than look after their responsibilities as elected representatives.

When fraternities cease to exist as ends in themselves, throw their doors open to all who wish to join, and stop turning out social snobs, then we can count them as a useful addition to campus life. As it is, one annual, well-advertised altruistic scheme hardly enough to justify their existence.

J. A. Millard, IV UIC

"Don't approve of that type of person. Our house was a headquarters at home. Brings out tendencies—insincerity. Puts importance in the wrong place."

"Couldn't afford to, but wouldn't have anyway. Those girls don't have the right attitude. Show me one that wouldn't ditch her girl friend for a man."

"There are enough other activities. It takes up too much time."

"Wasn't asked."

"What! Ninety dollars?"

These are the reasons co-eds don't join fraternities.

guarantees that every eligible second year female student on this campus who applies to join will be placed in one of them. She may be excluded from the group of her choice but none is utterly black-balled.

Out of a total 3,230 co-eds, all except the 885 enrolled at St. Hilda's and Victoria College are eligible. University College students and residents may not join until their sophomore year. All others may pledge as freshmen.

Last year 240 of the 2,040 eligible girls belonged to a fraternity—barely 12 per cent.

The main objection to joining a fraternity was expense. Most girls felt that they couldn't afford the sixty-five dollar initial fee or the subsequent yearly forty dollars. Pins may run up to thirty-five dollars. And a frequently voiced deterrent was the cost of wardrobe competition.

Bursary students believed the Government would prefer academic to social successes. One co-ed said, "I worked from 8.30 to 5.00 this summer for an education, not a perpetual hen party."

"I can't see that they get very much for all the time they spend," stated one non-fraternity student, but amended her statement with, "Of course, they're all right for out of town non-residents who want to make friends, but if you're in residence you don't need a fraternity too."

Many co-eds objected to the demands on their free time joining a fraternity would mean Basketball, Music Clubs, play, The Varsity and even dating provided them with sufficient social outlet and like-minded friends.

CRITIC AT SEA

ARMY AISLE SEAT

On To Valhalla

To Hell and Back, currently playing at Loew's Uptown, might have been better titled "Vagabonds of Valhalla." Although shot in Cinemascope, this picture does not possess the attribute of depth. The reason why the soldiers are fighting, their hopes and ambitions. The their realities as human beings, all these factors are ignored. The fighting appears to be an eternal pastime. Instead of a banquet the movie offers us some K-2 rations comprised of blood and sweat seasoned with such saccharine scenes as the announcement of a death with the classic dialogue: "Doctor, is she...?" "Yes." Other classic ingredients include the "be it ever so humble there's no place, etc." atmosphere, the sarcastic G.I. (a poor man's Tom Keefer), a servicemen's hangout in North Africa which looks exactly the same as one in Naples a few battles later, and the fact that Texas has not yet scraped up enough dues to join the Union.

As well as starring Audie Murphy, the U.S.'s most decorated hero of the last war who rose to Hollywood stardom after a movie mogul saw his picture on Life, the movie is the story of Murphy's own career from a teenager to the end of the war, taking him through North Africa, Italy, and France. But even with Murphy playing Murphy, he still loses. Apparently the studios had no desire to do for him what Life magazine tries to do for and/or to General MacArthur. He is not built up to be a titan but remains a typical G.I. Indeed his humility—the protested every promotion and honour—is the main attribute of Murphy that the picture pushes. His bravery and willingness are more assumed than emphasized. Not much more attention is given to him than to his fellows, and little attempt is made to use him as a centre about which to focus events. The slice-of-life technique seems to be the one used although more emphasis is on the slice than on life. Others in the cast are unknown excepting Marshall Thompson, who plays a lover boy reminiscing about his girls back home, and Charles Drake, who plays a Kentuckian.

For a brief interlude the picture gives hope of taking a better turn. On a leave in Naples, Murphy and two pals each pick up a girl. This situation has promise of developing, but the writers fail to exploit it—the two pals are forgotten and the scene between Murphy and the girl degenerates into sentimentality before the return to the front line.

One redeeming element in the movie is the strange fact that the jingoistic "blood of American boys" theme is almost nonexistent. The only obvious concession to patriotism is an innocuous statement at the beginning from General Walter Bedell Smith; apparently for the sole purpose of lending prestige to the picture. Causing question, however, was the fact that the duty of so many German soldiers seemed to be to walk forward into American fire. Also one wonders if the Germans had grenades. Plenty of shots showed grenades being thrown at them but few showed the Germans throwing any.

For those who like a picture with a great deal of footage devoted to combat and the rest to stereotyped army life, To Hell and Back fits the bill. For others, it is just another run-on-the-hill army movie.

Rampaging Roberts

Excellent in its every detail, replete with wit, humour, brilliant colour, and strikingly effective acting, Mr. Roberts is a beautiful movie, and fine entertainment. Similar in many respects to another story about the US Navy, The Caine Mutiny, Mr. Roberts uses the same basic elements of plot and background to achieve an effect as stirring as The Caine while avoiding the complexity of ideology so essential to the latter.

Mr. Roberts is a story, a likely story, presented in an unlikely manner, sometimes funny, sometimes moving, but always lightened by its humour and its dedication to being Fun. Even in the final scenes, tear-jerky though they were, the dramatic manoeuvring was all in build-up to a laugh. Always, however, the transition from tear to laugh is so skilfully effected that the incongruity does not show and the sequence seems quite natural.

Magnificent photographic effect is gained by exploiting the innate glory of sea and sky for enhancement of the apt camera angles, the exciting coloured film, and the story's action. Graphically, without words, and without even the help of closeups on Henry Fonda's face, the opening scene puts Mr. Roberts in silhouette on the bridge of his cargo tub, slightly out of focus and blurred, watching raply as a fleet of Men O' War glide across the sunrise on their way to battle, giving, aside from the pictorial splendor, the impression of his longing to be among them.

At a quick glance The Caine and Mr. Roberts would seem to be of a single mould—a tyrannical mental case of a martinet for Captain, three sterling types as officers and a morale-situation mutiny. There are important differences, however, in the uses made of this basic plot structure, the one directing all incidents of the story towards investigation and development of this situation, all the while with the underlying motive of pointing a moral; the other directing the situation into the incidents that are the meaning of the story, ever with the fully open motive of pointing, with slight exaggeration, the humour and the pathos of life in war.

An exceedingly drunk sailor hurtles back from liberty on a stolen Shore Patrol motorcycle, sailing right off into the ocean, only to clamber out, cry "I forgot my motorcycle," and jump right in after it.

To celebrate V-E Day, Ensign Frank Pulver explodes an extremely volatile charge in the ship's laundry, flooding hold, berths, and crew in a foaming surge of soap suds.

These are in the best tradition of Hollywood slapstick, just one step from the pie-in-the-face drive of Jerry Lewis and Dean Martin in such "great" films as Hit The Deck, and yet they are something entirely different. Unlike the antics of Martin and Lewis, this comic action leaves a smile lingering on this usually sneering face long after the first belly-laugh has gone its way. Perhaps it is the possibility of such things really happening, or the quick swing of the camera and the attention back to the more serious aspects of the story that are responsible; but the incidents recounted and numerous others give the movie a tone and meaning that put it well above the rating of just another laugh-riot.

Particularly impressive is the achievement of actors and director in putting every line and point across with never a flub and never a "lemon." This is due largely to the work of a fine comic, one Jack Lemmon, a veteran of several Judy Holliday films, who plays Ensign Pulver to scatter-brained perfection. In the last scene Lemmon is given the difficult acting assignment of first bringing out the grief felt by all the crew when they hear of Mr. Roberts' death in action, then of returning the story to its track of humour by striding heroically to the bridge and hearing the Captain in his den in very laughable manner. In this instance, as in the whiskey-making scene when Roberts, "Loc," and Pulver brew "Red Label" Scotch of grain alcohol, iodine and Coke to help Pulver woo a nurse on whom he has definite designs, Lemmon plays with the skill of a master, drawing smiles, laughter and even a little dew. James Cagney too, overplaying his Captain's role with telling effect, shows the strange blend of humour and pathos that gives Mr. Roberts his totality of excellence.

A Henry for Stratford

Henry V will definitely be one of the plays to be presented at the fourth annual Stratford Shakespearean Festival next summer, artistic director Michael Langham announced today.

With this, a considerable amount of speculation current in Stratford during the season has been shown to have some possible truth — among other things, the possibility that Michael Redgrave, now playing on Broadway in the Giraudoux-Fry play, Tiger at the Gates might be approached for next season. Combining in just the right proportions the two essential elements of serious-drama artistry and box-office appeal, he'd also make an ideal Hal.

Rumor has it that Gratien Gelinas, the affectionately regarded Frivolon of French Canada and the author-star of Tit-Coq, has been approached to play the part of the King of France. And why were the artistic director and actor-manager of the Theatre de Nouveau Monde closeted with top Festival officials one July morning? This fine Montreal group returned recently from bringing Moliere (of all people) to Parisians. Their inventive experimentalism deserves to be brought to the attention of the large audience Stratford can supply.

The Varsity's AM & D editor, having verbally predicted Henry V as a Stratford choice long since (ask any of his friends), herewith sticks out his neck in point, admitting the possibility that he might have his head chopped off.

Stratford next season will produce A Midsummer Night's Dream. If director Langham doesn't get the principals he wants, he'll do As You Like It. Either that, or some other play.

cubist painters

Two French-Canadian painters are sharing the wall space in Hart House Art Gallery. Both are moderns, both show the cubist influence, and their work provides an intriguing contrast in the uses to which the modern idiom can be put.

Jean Dallaire is certainly the more striking of the two artists. His vivid imagination expresses itself in a wide variety of subjects and treatments, while his choice of titles (in several languages) betrays a slyly avant-garde sense of humour. "Ystememboule," proclaims one title, "a Istanbul." You have to see it to understand. His work sparkles with a clean iridescence of colour.

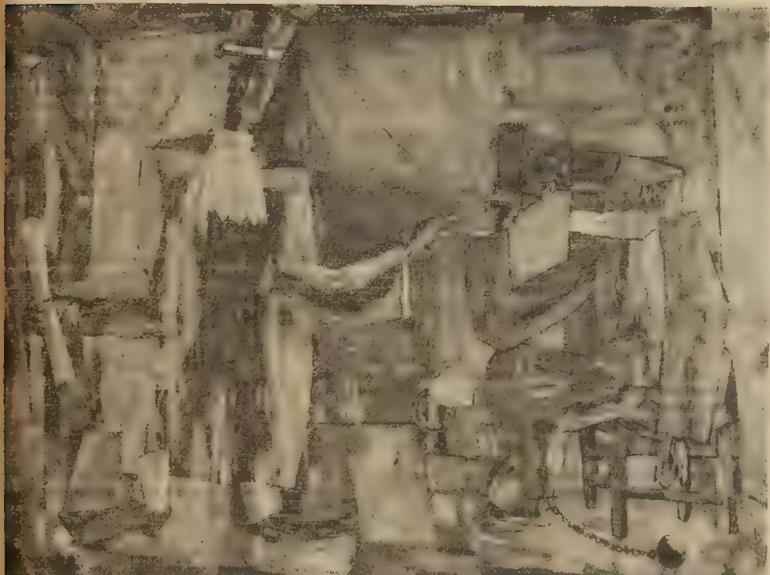

Perhaps the weakest application of his technique is in the realistic portrait of John K. B. Robertson, but the stiffness of this picture is not shared by the more abstract works, which fling themselves around with a joyful abandon. His multi-coloured figures do not lose humanity in their cubistic depths, and he manages to lyricise the lines of a billygoat, while accentuating its essential quality of billy-goatness.

Gerald Trotter is a more subdued modern, but he shares the rich colour and simple line of his co-exhibitor. His paintings are more uniform, consisting mainly of vertical, two-dimensional shapes. The titles of the works are predominantly religious, but the code symbols he uses are not immediately understandable, and his work is more purely abstract than Dallaire's.

The print room is devoted to Trotter's studies for a mural of the Last Supper. The faces, greatly simplified, suggest that modern religious art has swung full-circle, back to the non-human representations of religious figures found in medieval liturgical painting.

H.H. Orchestra Series

"As good a chamber orchestra as any found on this continent," was the comment of Ross Parmenter, music critic of the New York Times, in his review of the Hart House Orchestra's opening concert in this summer's Stratford Shakespearean Festival music season.

Since the summer, when an all-Canadian orchestra first won international repute by playing on the same stage as world-famous artists for a set season, things have been booming for the group, with a tour of eastern Canada and the northern United States scheduled for October and November.

Part of the group's fall and winter schedule is a five-concert series in the Great Hall of Hart House, designed largely for the undergraduates of this university, who played a large part in sustaining it during its shaky period last winter.

Membership cards of the Hart House Orchestra Associates, entitling the holder to attend all five concerts, are available now at various strategic spots, including the SAC office and the Hall Porter's desk. Membership is $3.50 for undergraduates, and $7.00 for all others.

Boyd Neel, dean of the university's faculty of music and founder of the famous British orchestra bearing his name, is the guiding hand behind the group. Of the summer season, he says "It was just as successful as we hoped—a wonderful way to show the rest of the world what Canadians are achieving in cultural fields."

As well as giving Canadians the opportunity to hear such soloists as soprano Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, the Festival also featured Canadian artists now gaining repute abroad — pianist Glenn Gould, cellist Zara Nelsova, and soprano Lois Marshall.

The programme for the orchestra's opening concert here is an amalgam of classical music written for the small orchestras of aristocratic patrons, and the works of near-contemporaries written for small orchestras for reason of economy. It includes: Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525; Warlock's Capriol Suite, Britten's Simple Suite, and Dvorak's Serenade in E, Opus 22. Other programmes include an all-Mozart evening January 22, in honor of art and music

Dean Neel this year joined the literary team of Festival director Tyrone Guthrie and man-about-letters Robertson Davies, to produce the third annual record of a Stratford season. Naturally, he'll be dealing with the music end. The work, Thrice the Brinded Cat Hath Mewed, should be published later this fall.

Conducted by Dean Neel, the orchestra will present their first Hart House concert October 16, later going on to their two-country tour. They begin at Notre Dame de Grace, Que., October 16, and present their last concert of the tour at Owen Sound. In between, they visit such locations as Norwich, Conn., Summit, N.J., and Flint, Mich. In mid-tour, Dean Neel will appear in New York as guest conductor of the Knickerbocker Chamber Players.

the composer's bicentenary. Roy Dudley, a former winner of a $1,000 Eaton Scholarship and well known in Canada and the U.S., has consented to play a Mozart piano concerto as part of the programme.

The all-student executive of the Hart House Orchestra Associates are at present selling subscriptions for the series. Their aim is the fostering of the presentation of classical music in the university; any new subscription is a direct contribution to this effort.

NFCUS Is Topic In Informal Meet Of Toronto SAC

A constructive scheme to improve the administration of the National Federation of Canadian University Students is expected to be the major topic for discussion at an informal Students' Administrative Council meeting tonight. The council is expected to approve Toronto mandates at the forthcoming NFCUS conference at Edmonton. The U. of T. delegates, SAC president Mike Shoemaker and vice-president Di Haas, hope plans to revise NFCUS structure and introduce new mandates will meet with conference approval. Here are two pretty Toronto Co-Eds perusing Sex, and Birth Control, and The Sexual Excitability of the Female Rat. Some of the titles are: The Living Earth, Health; —VSP By Stan Klosevych

Library Has "Living Earth" Female Rats Assist Eugenics

You don't have to go to Flesherston, Ont., for exciting bedtime reading — it's right here on the University of Toronto campus!

A check in the University Library last night revealed that the book causing all the fuss in Flesherston is on the shelves here. It's called, "The Living Earth," a novel by the Canadian author, Sheila Mackay Russell. There's a single copy of it. But there are many other compelling "night-caps" on the shelves.

A mass meeting was demanded in Flesherston yesterday after a former Reeve of the village discovered that his 17-year-old daughter had brought home a book he thought was "obscene, profane, and Godless."

The ex-Reeve promptly hurried back down to the town's public library and found more "off-colour" literature.

Last night a downtown Toronto evening paper carried headlines on the Flesherston furor. The ex-Reeve's 17-year-old daughter, the newspaper reported, was given a copy of the novel to read. The librarian recommended the book as preparatory reading for a nursing course.

The novel tells the story of a public health nurse in a wild frontier town.

A sample from the book: (page 237)

"Carl, don't go . . ." She stretched out the calloused fingers of one hand and drew them caressingly over his back. 'Carl . . .'

And (page 224) "Now his desire, set aflame after many years of continence and sublimation was as unexpected and devastating as the fire that had more than half destroyed his timber stands."

Parents, however, who may worry about what their children are reading at U. of T. might find their eyes bugging if they saw some of the titles in the catalogue here. One, which however is unavailable to the average undergraduate, is called "Health, Sex and Birth Control" . . . the book is kept in the Nursing Library.

A visit last night by a Varsity reporter revealed that the heading "sex" is an extensive one. There's a row of cards about eight inches thick in the index drawer. And the corners of the cards are grimy with the accumulated pawings of inquisitive fingers.

Books on sex psychology, marriage manuals, birth control, eugenics, essays on love and virtue, sex symbolism in literature etc., dot the shelves. For the more scholarly there's a gem — from the laymen's point of view — "Tests for Measuring the Sexual Excitability in the Female Rat."

There are books reserved for nurses, for dentists and for social workers.

But there are plenty for book-burners to ferret out, thus saving feshettes from falling into the pit of depravity.

SMC No Woman Presidents Last Night's Debate Decided

By an overwhelming majority, a St. Michael's debating audience voted last night to prevent women from holding the presidency of their Students' Administrative Council.

But in a vote on the merits of the debate itself, the motion — "Resolved: that the presidency of the St. Michael's students' council should be open to both male and female candidates" — was upheld, 26-18.

The debate was aroused by the controversy surrounding last year's merger, creating a single, co-educational council from the three previously existing ones. Originally, provision was made for the president of the new council to be either male or female, but in the final ratification the office was opened only to males.

Charles Purvis, the first debater for the government, argued with an "element of regret" that we should "wipe out for all time the bias and prejudice possessed by males, the last stronghold of male prerogative."

He asked, "Why not at least let them do a little housecleaning in the S.A.C.?"

Joanne Housley, first speaker for the opposition, began by asserting that the ideas and ideals stated "are not necessarily my own." Pointing out that Queen Victoria owed most of her success to the two men in her life — the Prince Consort and Disraeli — she said that women have traditionally achieved their highest goals by staying in the background, as the "power behind the power."

Richard Pegis asserted for the opposition that "we might not find Elizabeth I the most popular of monarchs, but as a ruler of the state — and persecutor of the Church — we must admit that she proved very efficient."

Norma Walsh claimed for the opposition that women would certainly stand behind their female president, "but in a crucial moment, she would wonder just how far behind." Women should not be encouraged to take the upper hand, she said, without expecting "disastrous results."

And perhaps most important of all," she added, "she could never be 'one of the boys'."

St. Mike's Out of Catholic Fed. Say No Longer Achieving Aims

St. Michael's College is no longer in the Canadian Federation of Catholic University Students. The Students' Administrative Council of the college, previously a leading member of the Federation, voted itself out Monday night.

The council decided that CFCUS was no longer achieving its aims of functioning according to its constitution. It was formed in 1943 to promote unity among Catholic colleges.

A part of St. Michael's SAC funds has gone into sending representatives to the yearly conferences of CFCUS, which SAC members feel is no longer fulfilling its purpose.

So far, no concrete national program has come out of these conferences. Attempts to start a national Catholic College Newspaper and a creative writing magazine have also failed.

The motion to disband, proposed year after year at the National Conference, has always been postponed. In this respect, CFCUS parallels the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Phil Wood, president of St. Michael's Students' Administrative Council said: "Since NFCUS has one more year of operation with Toronto approval, the University SAC might do well to examine its achievements during the coming year, and should there be a lack of definite accomplishments, take a similar action to that of St. Michael's withdrawal from CFCUS."

Journalism Lecture

A former Ubyssy editor, now a prominent Canadian newspaperman, returns Friday to the University campus to deliver the first of a series of lectures on Journalism.

John Dauphinee, General News Editor of The Canadian Press, will deliver the first lecture in a series of five sponsored by The Varsity. The lecture is scheduled for Friday, at one p.m., in Room 13 of University College.

Dauphinee, a native of Vancouver, began his newspaper career on The Ubyssy, undergraduate publication of the University of British Columbia. After a brief interval away from the University during the Depression, he returned to UBC briefly to become a Ubyssy senior editor and Varsity correspondent of the Vancouver Province.

Leaving University, he joined the staff of the Province, moving from there, in 1936, to join the staff of Canadian Press in Vancouver. Since that time he has been associated with The Canadian Press.

Mr. Dauphinee's work with The Canadian Press has taken him throughout Canada, to England and the United States. He has worked at The Canadian Press in Toronto three times; has been the news editor in Ottawa and news editor and bureau chief in London, England. He has also been bureau chief at Canadian Press offices in New York, Winnipeg, and Edmonton. Since February, 1952, he has been the general news editor at the Head Office of the Canadian Press here in Toronto.

As General News Editor, Mr. Dauphinee edits and co-ordinates the distribution of news stories to about 100 daily newspapers. The Canadian Press is Canada's major press association.

Mr. Dauphinee's lecture will cover all aspects of news-gathering and writing. Varsity staffers and all students interested in journalism are welcome.

UC Girls Meet To Make Plans For Coming Year

The proposed budget for the year is the major issue at the first Open meeting of the University College Women's Undergraduate Association. The meeting will be held at one p.m. in the Women's Union Theatre.

As well as the budget, which will be presented for the approval of the women students of the college, nominations will be held for the first and fourth year presidents.

Other major topics for discussion are cheerleaders for UC, the float for the Homecoming parade, and a UC Fall Informal.

Whoop-dee-doo As Queens Visit

BY MIKE PENGELLEY

About 2,000 wildly-rooting, bagpipe-tooting Queen's University students are due to steam in here aboard a special train at 5 p.m. today to begin what may be the most colorful college football week-end here this year.

And — just in case anyone gets rambunctious — two burly police constables will patrol each coach of the ten-car "Football Special" from Queens.

The Queen's team, including the controversial Quarterback Gus Braccia — who will play Saturday — will be backed by a brass band and the Queen's famous pipe band.

"It's the game of the year," a Queen's Journal dispatch said last night. "Queen's is confident of a win."

Meanwhile, on the University of Toronto campus, the Blue and White was ready last night to push its week-end activity into high gear.

A whopping pep rally on the campus was rumoured last night — probably in the St. George St. Drill Hall tonight.

And at noon yesterday, Varsity's Blue and White Bandmaster Bill Bartlet was putting the finishing touches to his 30-piece brass band. It will share the mid-field half-time break with Queen's bands.

And through the grape-vine a further rumour was flying last night: prankster Engineers, the hint was, were planning to let loose a couple of pigs during the band shows and "Jumbo" the baby elephant was due to get in on the fun.

Today, Varsity Blues wind up preparations for the big push: a light work-out at the Stadium is scheduled for 5 p.m.

Last night the team's 30-odd players got in on a little pre-game morale boosting: Half-a-dozen pert gals from the U. of T. cheerleading department sat down with them to steak dinner and afterwards watched films of last week's game at Western.

Dresden No Jim Crow Town Some Canadian Towns Worse

Charges that Dresden, Ont., is a "Jim Crow" town were vigorously denied yesterday at a meeting of the Political Economy Club here.

A University of Toronto student declared that: "Colored people in Dresden are treated much better than in many other parts of Canada." The student said he was "familiar" with the town.

Discussion over Dresden was ignited here yesterday by a National Film Board documentary shown to some 40 colored and white students at the Economy Club meeting. The town is 12 per cent coloured.

Sydney Blum, executive secretary of a labor-sponsored Committee on Human Rights, introduced the film and led the discussion.

"Certainly the charges (which led to conviction of two Dresden restaurant owners) are probably true," the unidentified student at the meeting said. But he added: "In a year-and-a-half of working near the town I have not found a heavy incidence of racial discrimination."

Blum declared that one of the convicted restaurant men would have "closed his doors" rather than serve a colored man.

Blum's labor-sponsored committee was advised by a Varsity law student to lobby with the Dominion government for stronger fair accommodation legislation.

The conviction of the two Dresden restaurant owners who refused to serve Negroes was quashed in an appeal to County court.

Alan Borovoy, the law student, suggested Blum's committee could investigate more powerful legislation at a national level.

Blum admitted the committee was anxious to see a Canadian Bill of Rights, but was willing to work at lower echelons of government in the interim.

Several of the Dresden students defended practices in their town. One pointed out that a colored girl had served successfully as president of the students' council there last year.

One colored student, apparently West Indian, at the Political Economy meeting asked for information on similar situations in Toronto. The matter was dropped in a volley of discussion of the Dresden case.

Blum intimated his committee would pursue justice in the Dresden case, which he called a "symbol of Jim Crowism in Canada."

In spite of the firm opinions expressed by the smattering of Dresdensites who attended yesterday's meeting, a colored housewife told the NFB she and her husband would be "considered second-rate citizens as long as they refused to fight."

Toronto Delegates Ask For Efficiency Experts Want Smarter NFCUS

A 10-point program for stepping up the efficiency of "NFCUS" will be advanced by U. of T. delegates to the national convention of the organization next week in Edmonton.

This was decided last night at a precedent-breaking special SAC meeting called to discuss Toronto's stand on the National Federation of Canadian University Students. Also proposed was the revamping of the entire NFCUS organization in order to increase its efficiency.

Michael Shoemaker, President of the SAC, said that he favoured the hiring of a professional efficiency expert to study the operations of the Ottawa NFCUS head office.

Toronto delegates to the conference — Shoemaker and Diana Haas (SAC Vice-President — advanced to the meeting their plan for NFCUS during the next academic year. They will present their plan to the conference next week.

They proposed that NFCUS should undertake a list of ten — and only ten — definite projects for the coming year, and make every effort to carry them out.

Their ten-point program includes:
—national drama, art and music competitions;
—national student discount and travel service;
—inter-regional exchange.

Also under consideration was the publication of a national NFCUS newspaper.

Their plan also included a complete revamping of the national office. Patrons would be solicited for the national student federation, and faculty observers would be asked to sit in on many NFCUS committees.

Miss Haas and Shoemaker — who leave tonight for Edmonton — also recommended that the National full-time student president spend more time in the Ottawa headquarters and less touring the country.

Settlement Kids Will Be Present At Varsity Game

One hundred bright-eyed young Varsity supporters from the University Settlement will be at the game to-morrow as guests of University Red Feather Committee. The Settlement is one of the many Red Feather services.

Sandy Macpherson, (IV Meds.), chairman of the Student Service Commission, said yesterday: "We feel that by bringing students of U. of T. into contact with a Red Feather agency, they will better appreciate their responsibility to the community. We want them to know that Red Feather exists, and it exists to serve."

The children will take part in the half-time activities.

Student canvassing will begin on Tuesday, and continue until Thursday, Oct. 20. On the final day, the traditional Red Feather concert will be held in Convocation Hall.

Blues Cinch To Win

By ONE-EYED BENNY

It is being just past the Withing Hour the other night when I see this fish Applecheeks Mackenzie Wilson stumbling along Philosopher's Walk and he looks like he just eats something which does not please his troubled tummy. "Cheeks" mumbles as he stumbles and I hear that the words go something like so, "If our own dear Blues do not win this game then I am being forced to transfer to UC as my friends do not let me back into sweet old Trinity's hallowed halls and I am being like a bird without its feathers which is not right as I am one bird who has all my feathers."

I can see that "Cheeks" is not kidding as he stops under the light to preen these very fetching quills and flutter his wings in preparation for takeoff, but before he does this I clutch him by the tail and restrain his flighty plans.

By pressing very heavily I am discovering the reason for which John agitates and it is a relief to me to find that this is being nothing else than my old protege Gustave Brasher who I refer to the sunshine and football of Queenie University which is a fine old "educational" school a wee bit south of Lower Canada.

Brasher is one fellow which my agents report to me about and in whom I am seeing a way to lower the ridiculous odds which favour my Blues in their every game and so are cutting my take from those who bet against Varsity which is now being an invincible power in Football. Only last week I visit the Oshawa Slough-Sliders who are a top pro club and I speak to Gussie as he works out with them. I ask the laddie how he progresses in his studies at Queenie U.

He is reaching into his locker and pulling out a half-finished clothes hamper which he informs me is his first term assignment for a master's degree. He is farther telling me that he is being a cinch, with such work as this, to graduate "magna cum laudry" and go on to great success as a sanitary engineer.

This pleases me so much as I am always glad to see my boys doing something really constructive, but I am being more interested in his football plans. These he reveals to me in confidence and as this is something which I never violate I tell his secrets only to my dear friends The Varsity who treat me right and do not tell anyone I am around.

Brasher tells me that the Queenies are confounding the Blues with their power and seem like a cinch to run away with the Yates until their Joy-Juice injections are wearing off and then they are being in trouble. But it is the announcement by the Alumni at half-time that they do not come through on their bonus (Continued on Page 8)

OUR READERS WRITE

An Answer?

The Editor,
The Varsity:
I am in the peculiar position of being a senior in the College yet a freshman in Jeanneret House. As a result of this dual status it was inevitable that I should be concerned with our house's initiation. In my first year at U.C. I was subjected to a degrading initiation. Accordingly, I was determined that neither I nor any other new man in Jeanneret House should have to go through the same hazing. I made my position clear to the men planning the initiation, and then I took care to follow closely all that was done.

In The Varsity of Oct. 6 there appeared, under the caption "Degrading and Revolting," a letter from some "Disgusted Whitney Hall Girls." As one who critically observed the progress of the initiation, I can state that the letter contains a number of wild and groundless charges.

First, initiations lasted one week, not two. This one week of fag duty was not forced on anyone and only one or two freshmen actually did what was asked, and even then only for one or two days. Second, there were not three hell nights. On the first night of initiation one mild stunt was pulled (lasting 10-15 minutes per person); on the last night a scavenger hunt was held and all men were back before midnight to check in their loot. Thirdly, there were no late or all night sprints.

I agree that there should be a sensible and constructive initiation. The next best thing is a harmless one. The initiation in Jeanneret House was harmless, occasionally humorous, and voluntary on the part of all concerned. (I declined to take part and believe there is no hard feeling on either side. Later two other men also withdrew when the initiation interfered with studies or principles.)

As soon as the story appeared in The Varsity some of our freshmen immediately decided, of their own accord, to state their views. Perhaps we can settle the matter by listening to what the "victimized" freshmen have to say.

J. A. Millard
IV U.C.

Ed. Note:
The Varsity staff has interviewed several freshmen at the new UC Men's Residence. Many were perfectly contented with the initiations; many were highly disgusted and used such words as moronic and useless to characterize the initiations. One called some of the sophs "bullies."

None, however, substantiated the charges of a two-week Hell Period.

Alas!

The Editor,
I am a freshman at UC, and I believe that speaks for itself. The initiations are a lot of fun and I liked them. Too bad the girls from Whitney can't join us. If they helped in our initiations they would understand them better and know us better too.

So far we (I speak for the majority) have found the girls from Whitney to be — cold, unfriendly, unaware of the facts of life, unfeminine and quite sexless. Surely they can show us where we are wrong. Surely the Whitney girls can show enough evidence to hush the whispers concerning their feminine status which we continually hear in the corridors of U.C.

Whitney girls! Chest forward, march to your defense.

Denounced

The Editor,
Lest it seem that the entire student body looks with varying degrees of approval on Billy Graham, we should like to speak out for those who view both Mr. Graham and his campaign in a far different light.

We do not discount Graham's oratorical ability nor his sincerity. Both of these are obvious to anyone who hears him. They do not in themselves justify however that about which he speaks. In our opinion his sermons, however admirably expressed, are a hopeless jumble of sheer nonsense and utter ignorance.

His "truer system of philosophy" — (and) — "psychological theory," his talk of "Saviour" and "sin" are just so much cant that obscure reality and offer only a false sense of security. The solution of man's problems will only come when man looks to himself and not to a supernatural guidance which may or may not exist.

Mr. Graham's crusade despite apparent success will, once people see through its sham sophistry, only hasten the eventual decline, decay and disappearance of those institutions which continue to enslave men's minds.

Blues Can Down Gaels If Muntz Stops Stewart

The outcome of tomorrow afternoon's clash with the Golden Gaels will in a large way depend upon the individual performances of two of the greatest competitors in Intercollegiate Football. To stop the Gaels, the Blues will have to stop pint-sized Ron Stewart, the most dynamic back ever to attend Queen's University, and the responsibility for this task will rest with Varsity's brilliant half-back, Phil Muntz.

Bob Masterson, who has labored all week in an effort to devise the answer to the aerial offensive that brought the Gaels four touchdowns against McGill last Saturday — three of them by Stewart — concludes that the whole thing boils down to a duel between Muntz and Stewart. With the new pass defence that Masterson has come up with, every time the mighty mite breaks from the Queen's backfield, he'll be covered by Muntz.

And the battle won't stop there. Muntz, who ground out 105 yards in twelve tries against the Mustangs last week, will be engaged in an offensive feud with the Gael speedster. Stewart, already leading the Queen's gridiron greats in touchdowns scored, with a total of 21, will be out to carve his name indelibly on Intercollegiate football history.

In addition to Stewart, the Gaels offer the impressive passing arm of one Gus Braccia, late of

Varsity Golfers Aim At Crown

Varsity's senior and intermediate golf teams set out in search of a long-absent Intercollegiate championship this weekend, the seniors clashing with McGill, Queen's, Western and Carleton at Kingston's Catarqui Golf and Country Club, and the intermediates playing host to their tournament at Toronto's Lakeview course.

Bob Zezyk, Don Cossar, Garry Hewson, and Witold Weynerowski qualified earlier this week for the four positions on the senior team, while Hugh Sampson, Don Hewson, and Steve Aarons will form the intermediate team. Competition will take place today and tomorrow in the senior tournament at London, with 36-hole medal play being the order of the day. The intermediates will only struggle through 18 holes, and will consequently complete their tournament today.

McGill University are defending senior champions, having wrested the title from Queen's last fall, while Western possess the intermediate championship.

UC Boasting Strong Squad With Light, Speedy Backs

Coach Gary Banks of the University College football entry, a bit disappointed with his team's relegation to Group Two, is joining the trend to the straight T formation this year. Banks has come up with a good squad this year, and he'll be relying on the past year's team of Dave Sutherland and a light, fast backfield. Ken Harrison and John Lambier are also in the running for the quarterback job.

The backfield will see a lot of old faces with Bobby Nadin, Ron Zeyer and Marv Talsky back at the half positions, Harvey Salem and Jerry Hugo are available for fullback duty, with two newcomers Steve Hurlihy and Fred Little joining the team. The 1954 all-star for N. to Toronto, has been a stand-up in the halfback slot at practice.

Max Grossman returned to centre in S. d. Shoom and new-comer Gary Vipond at the end position. Three guards return to action in the forms of Jimmy Dell, Dave Walker and Don Gygatt. Max Berkstein, down from the intermediates, is at one Temple University and the Ottawa Roughriders, whose accurate threat he already is; and one of the heaviest lines in Queen's history. The combination appears unbeatable, and the Blues are not mistaking the fact that they have a tall order before them.

Meanwhile, in the Blue camp, the injury bug seems to have stayed its hand and big Al Watt will dress for this one, as will halfback Al Riva. End Gene Chorostecki, labelled Wednesday as an injury, may possibly start tomorrow also. Gene was out at practice last night, and appeared to have no difficulty with his supposed cracked rib.

Elsewhere in the Intercollegiate, the Western Mustangs, minus Willie Casanova, tangle with the McGill Redmen in a battle for the cellar position in the league standings.

Faulkner Has Three Wins But Victoria Takes Crown

Varsity Stadium was the scene of the closest interfaculty track meet in recent years yesterday afternoon. The fighting Vic contingent narrowly edged out the U.C.-P.H.E. team by a single point, 24 to 23. Close on the heels of the two leaders were Meds with 22 points. Last year's Intramural champions, S.P.S., came fourth with 18 points.

Individual stars, most of them freshmen, were sprinkled through the various faculties. Bruce Faulkner of Pharmacy was the meet's outstanding performer, turning in a triple win. Faulkner won the 100, 220 and 440 yd. dashes, picking up Pharmacy's entire 15 points.

Al Gardiner of Meds turned in two winning efforts in the 120 and 220 foot hurdles. The mile and three-mile were captured by Bill Varey of P.H.E., who outclassed his competition in both races. In the field events close battles were the order of the day. Cairne of Vic won the discus, out-throwing McQuaig of S.P.S. by 3 feet with a heave of 108'2". Ken Money of Vic highjumped 5'11" to edge McQuaig by 2 inches. Walt Miladinov of Dents turned in an excellent board jump of 19'6 1/2". This was 18" better than last year's standard.

Although no records were broken because of the muddy underfooting, coaches Fred Foote and Hal Brown expressed satisfaction in the athletes' performance, and are looking forward to improved times in the University Championships next Wednesday.

tackle with Ron Beoff at the other. Gary Vipond and Sid Weinrib will handle the punting with no place kicker having appeared on the scene as yet.

In his own group, Banks rates the Junior Engineers the team to beat, but he went right ahead to tell us that if he gets good support from his line he sees no reason why his red-clad speedsters shouldn't "beat everyone but SPS, and maybe them too." This may seem like a tall order for a team that spent last season in the cellar, but in this league, anything is possible.

Two Ties Open Soccer Season

The interfaculty soccer season got under way yesterday with two tie games as a starter.

Victoria's defending Arts Faculty Cup champions came from behind a 1-0 half-time deficit to draw with the U.C. Firsts 1-1 while Junior SPS and St. Mike's fought to another 1-1 tie game after a scoreless opening thirty minutes

ISC Ruling Will Weaken Skule

It seems that the Trinity Panthers are not the only team with quarterback troubles. Coach Wally Mellor of Skule reports that due to the new ruling on SPS Senior and Junior teams, he finds himself one week away from the schedule opener without a quarter. The ISC ruled last week that the Skule Juniors must be chosen from first and second year engineering and the Seniors from third year up. Coach Mellor finds that the quarterbacks on whom he was counting are eligible for the Juniors only.

However, after a fairly lengthy interview, it seems that the only weakness on the SPS Seniors is at quarterback. Al Wong, with Baby Blue experience under his belt, Ken Selby and Bruce Smith are still back at the half position. Gord Crandall is at fullback, and two men, Pete Beck and Don Carter are ready to go at the flying wing position in the straight T formation being used by Mellor.

Three men are lined up for the centre spot in the front wall. Jim Campbell, N. Morrison and Ed Foran are all competitors for the important "snap" spot. Mellor is well set up and with C. Weaver, Jim Park, Ron Ellis, Steve Eccles and Jim Russell. The remaining part of the line seems equally strong with the return of line men bets of the '54 champions — Ken Morrison, John Short, Bob Leask, Chuck Mayer and Bruce Sutherland.

Mellor, new to the SPS coaching staff this year, is as yet un-

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

A little less than a year ago fans were asking who was the best backfielder in College football. A cursory glance would show most of the best have graduated: Bob Finkney, and Steve Oneschuk of Toronto, and Gino Fracas and Don Getty of Western. At this time there would seem two logical choices: Phil Muntz of Toronto, Ron Stewart of Queens.

Each of these is highly favoured in his respective college. Sooner or later these players will also hold the attention of Big Four coaches. Both in their last year, Muntz and Stewart will probably be the first backfielders chosen in the draft.

Probably, the quickest way to start an argument is to select one and show how much better he is than the other. Before we can compare we must consider, aside from height and weight, the players' record.

Probably the strongest argument in favour of Stewart is his offensive ability. Last year this diminutive 5'6", but husky 165 lbs. halfback led the league in total yardage gained, pass receiving, and punt returns. Stewart has scored 21 touchdowns in his three years with Queens, more than any Golden Gael half in the last ten years. He gained 301 yards in 51 carries last year and also caught nine passes for 274 yards. Returning punts was one of his specialties — he averaged 11.9 yards in 23 tries. On kick-off returns, he averaged 20.1 yards.

Every coach has praised Stewart. "He's the best runner I've seen since I've been up here," said Bob Masterson. Frank Tindall, coach of Queens, has said: "He is exceptionally fast, but he is a very quick starter and possesses a quick change of pace. He has excellent hands and is an extremely alert defensive safety man."

Another man whom all coaches respect is Muntz. When Muntz was playing fullback Masterson termed him as good as any in Canada.

Last year in spite of an ankle injury throughout the whole season Muntz still managed to be the Blues leading ground gainer with 313 yards in 50 carries. Due to a shortage of halfbacks Masterson has shifted Muntz, and he will take on both offensive and defensive duties. Muntz's shift should give him a chance to utilize his speed around the ends.

A 190-pounder, Muntz came to Varsity from Port Hope's Trinity College School, where he was a pile-driving standout. To-morrow will be a good time to compare Stewart and Muntz.

familiar with the new faces at this year. Al Wong, who likely wouldn't weigh 150 lbs. soaking wet, will handle the punting, while his fellow halfback, Ken Selby, will take care of the place kicking. The Engineers are expected to be the only team to make it to the final in Group One, according to Mellor, and in way of opposition he promises "lots of fight, dashiness of their few lines, no tips, alongside the array of football talent he presented, should make the Skule Seniors a strong contender in the battle for the inter-mural Championship.

Baby Blues Face Queen's In Intermediate Grid Test

The Intermediate Intercollegiate football schedule starts today when the Baby Blues tangle with the Queen's Comets at Kingston. This will be the third meeting between the two clubs since 1951, when Varsity defeated Queen's in Kingston for the Canadian Intermediate football title.

Coach Jack Kennedy will dress 26 players for this game, most of whom will be playing in a Varsity uniform for the first time. Stew Winter will start at quarterback. Larry Joynt, the other quarterback, will also dress in spite of a sore shoulder. Bob Dann, Bob Smart, Tim Reid, and Brian Clarke will be playing at the halves, and John Tattle and Don Conash will alternate at fullback. The guard positions will be occupied by Walt Jeromko, Trevor Eytton, and Bill Hunter. Norm Levine, Glen Maclean, Mike Syron, Julian Porter and Jim McCutcheon will handle the tackle positions. The Baby Blues have been hard hit at centre due to an injury to Ed Berger in practice. A recent recruit, Pat Polveroni will handle the centre slot alone. Two years ago the Comets played in the St. Lawrence loop, but in 1954 moved to the Intercollegiate league, replacing OAC. In their first contest with the Blues last year the Comets lost 17-7.

There have been several articles in The Varsity written by students who have done on "exchanges" to other universities. Some have spent a year studying "abroad," most have spent a summer, working, living, travelling in new places.

Today we have the report of students who participated in the Finnish exchange, an imaginative and daring project undertaken by Hart House.

Students are in an enviable position with regard to exchanges. They are regarded with a respect and trust because of their supposed commitment to finding an objective truth, and as a result can travel more freely where statesmen loaded with responsibilities and official commitments cannot go.

Last summer Clyde Batten of the University of Toronto went to Moscow as a delegate to the IUS conference. This summer Peter Martin attended the conference in Sophia, where no Canadian has been for many years.

In every case of a student travelling it will be seen that he has profited by it and been changed by it.

It is only too easy for a person to sustain a prejudice or an indifference to the rest of the world even in this time of mass communication, if he is safely tucked away in his accustomed milieu.

Placed, however, in the midst of an Italian- or French-speaking nation it is hard to convince one's self that English is really the only language that counts, or that all Italians are dirty, smell of garlic and are dishonest, or any other preconceived notion.

What escapist can maintain an attitude of indifference to war and world situations when faced with the bombing in London and the resentment in the faces of Germany? What person can fail to receive stimulation from direct contact with people of different backgrounds?

The eighteenth century well knew the value of travel, and a year's "Grand Tour" was a standard part of education then, when the world was less well known.

Some advantage has been taken in the past of student opportunities for travel, but too often chances have been turned down because of lack of courage, and too often student societies such as NFCUS and the SAC have not fully exploited the power they have to arrange such exchanges.

Toronto To Helsinki

Marvellous And Magnificent

By JOHN BECKER AND BOSKO LONCAREVIC

At the end of May five graduates, five undergraduates and a staff advisor sailed from Montreal for a summer in Finland. All these men were members of Hart House and the trip was a continuation of an exchange program started by the late Warden Nicholas Ignatieff in 1951. At that time the Ignatieffs and six members of the House travelled to this "land of the midnight sun" to work on the construction of the engineering students' residences.

The second Canadian group to travel to Finland as guests of the National Union of Students of Finland was larger, not so heterogeneous in training and had a much different experience in store for them.

SAUNA

Sauna, Finnish hot bath, is the pride and absolute necessity of every true Finn. Its unique feature is dry heat which enables one to stand higher heat than in any other kind of hot bath. The real Finnish Sauna is ready for use when temperature reaches 212°F and its great healing power is due to perspiration. The pleasant feeling after Sauna is due to increased gland secretions.

Under the sponsorship of the Hart House Exploration Society and using money donated by Canadian industry this group, made up of engineers, foresters, architects and three men from Arts faculties, spent six weeks working in Finnish industry, touring the country and meeting the people first hand.

The selection was made from 40 applicants most of whom were from the professional faculties. There was an effort to obtain men who would benefit personally from the trip and who would provide the Finns with a fairly representative idea of Canadian students.

Banquets, lectures and press conferences filled our schedule for the first week in the dignified city of Helsinki but many very interesting side trips showed us more of the nature of this place.

The War Graves which held some of the 80,000 Finland lost between 1939 and 1944 and the tomb of Mannerheim were two of the most impressive sights. Things like the magnificent student buildings which were built totally by student effort and the fine services which we would normally expect the state or the university to supply but there are supplied by the students themselves gave us much to think about.

Finland with Sauna and Sisu

The Struggle of a Small Power

Imagine a country similar to Ontario south of Sudbury, with approximately the same population, which had to fight two wars with Soviet Russia, which has small resources, very difficult conditions for agriculture because it is situated north of 60°, which had to accommodate 400,000 refugees from the provinces lost in the war and had to pay reparations which amounted to $300 million in 1938 prices in eight years, and you will have a fairly distorted picture about the country where ten of us spent last summer.

Finland is the country of 60,000 lakes, midnight sun, Lapps, Finns and Swedes. Its climate is moderated by the closeness of the sea which makes it possible to harvest in regions which all lie north of Lake Athabaska. An unexpected frost, or sudden thaw followed by flooding can do great damage to an arduous and often discouraging pursuit of agriculture. Yet agriculture is a traditionally important pastime of a great many Finns. The resources of the land, apart from timber, are small; and the mining discoveries are recent.

In the export timber trade, the Finns have had all the other Baltic states, as well as Russia and Poland, as their competitors; and they have been liable to be cut off from their west European markets by any war or disturbance affecting the outlet from the Baltic. Yet Finns were not only able to survive but were able to build a growing economy and stable democratic system which could be a model to many a more fortunate country.

Finns have got Sisu, which is a remarkable national characteristic to go beyond physical endurance, to self-sacrifice when everything else seems to be exhausted, the quality which we translate inadequately as "Go, go, go."

The Finnish nation is the product of geographical and geological setting, climate and outside political influences. Their rather remote position in the far away corner of Europe helped Finns preserve their strong national character, national customs and their language which is different from any other European tongue. Dealing with granite taught them how to be tough and persistent. Severe climate taught them that life is a serious matter, and the only way to keep warm during long winters is to use Sauna, which they had to invent.

The historians so far have been able to produce conflicting theories only, about the origin of Finns. Their language, which belongs to the group of Ugrian languages (together with Hungarian and Estonian), seems to confuse the issue still more. During many hundreds of years, Finland was the meeting ground for Swedish and Russian armies and Finns were the unfortunate ones who always lost the war. The Russian annexation of Finland coincided with the awakening of Nationalism, early in the XIX century. The stern and rigid but inefficient rule of St. Petersburg only helped to create an atmosphere where people of Finland were able to develop a real democratic system, including emancipation of women and co-education.

The independence in 1918 was the end of a long struggle. It created a new atmosphere of freedom and challenge. The most striking example of this new atmosphere is beautiful and very functional modern Finnish architecture. The greatest achievement of modern Finnish style is the very skilful application of local building materials, granite and wood, and artistic blending with surrounding scenery.

The reparations period imposed an extremely heavy burden upon the economy of the country. To make it more difficult, the peace treaty dictated by Soviet Russia stipulated certain industrial products like ships and rivercraft and machinery, which had never before been produced in significant quantities. The first task was therefore to build the required industry, train the personnel and then start producing.

This industry presents a heavy burden today because Finland never had traditional markets for this kind of product. The only ready buyer is Soviet Russia and countries of its block which try by all possible means to attract Finland into the economic orbit of the Eastern Block.

In order to capture the exports, countries of the Eastern Block place orders with Finland which are completely out of proportion with their needs.

We were told that one year in the early 50's Russia placed a huge order for prefabricated houses. Whole production had to be geared to the high level, and when deliveries started, they were neatly piled in the Leningrad harbour where they remained rotting for years because there was no real need for this type of prefabricated house. Later the same year, when it was necessary to exercise some sort of political pressure, Russia cancelled the order, leaving the industry in the desperate position of high production and no markets.

The trade with Soviet Russia and its satellites accounts for about 30% of the total foreign trade and Finns try with great effort to keep it at that level. But they must be very careful because anything that looks like an offence to Russia might mean a real disaster.

Politically, Finland is a democratic country. Freedom of the press was obvious even to us who could understand the cartoons preceding the presidential elections. The communist party is active but has very little support despite the fact that it has large financial support from outside.

Many people of Finland vote by the force of habit, children casting their votes for the same party that their parents supported, sometimes even to the contrary of their own personal belief. Thus workers vote for the Social-Democrats, Swedes vote for the Swedish party and Lapland is for some curious reason the stronghold of the parliamentary Communists.

Finland is today a little wedge between the East and the West, being the only non-communist country bordering Russia. Under somewhat different circumstances it might become a common ground where the best that Soviet Russia and the West have to offer in terms of methods and approach to human problems might usefully blend. But the peace of 1947 left the Finns a betrayed and victimized nation, pitched unceremoniously upon an ideological watershed and subjected to the strain of influences almost completely incapable of blend or compromise. The efforts of this town and gifted people to solve these problems will be an interesting object lesson for contemporary observers and an instructive theme for the historian of the future.

Finnish Dam

This is a hydro-electric dam near Onkiva, in Northern Finland, at the top of the Gulf of Bothnia, in Northern Finland. Developments such as this are symbols of Finland's growing industrial importance since the war, reported Toronto students after their Hart House-sponsored work tour of Finland. Most of the students were from the professional faculties of the University. They worked in divergent locations, ranging from a metallurgical laboratory to a hotel, and from the south of Finland to north of the Arctic Circle.

Sauna Stands As Symbol

By JUKKA E. A. LEHTINEN
DEPT. OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERING

I could write a thick book of all the experiences our group had here last year and of all the good luck I have had this year myself! But I'll tell only how thankful we were, and still are, to Hart House. We wanted to give something truly Finnish to our Canadian friends and when we had only five days left to stay in Canada last year we started to build a SAUNA—a real Finnish steam bath—at Caledon Hills Farm. But I'll tell you—it isn't a custom in Finland to start building a 10' by 12' SAUNA of logs, knowing that there are only five days to do it! No, sir!

But when you have a group of boys thrilled by the hospitality without limits, who had wonderful experiences in Canadian industry and who felt deeply that they owed much more than a "thank you" to their hosts in Hart House and all of us had the Finnish SISU—power, strength or go—in our blood, then such a feat is possible. We worked hard—from 7:00 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. every day—but you never heard anybody complaining. The Finnish carpenters, who gave us a hand in the project, said that with that speed we would have made a fortune in the building business!

We had just had the first bath in the SAUNA when we drove to the city and to Hart House for the farewell party. But on this lovely—and sad—occasion, Mr. Guild announced that Hart House would give a Canadian canoe to Tech Town!

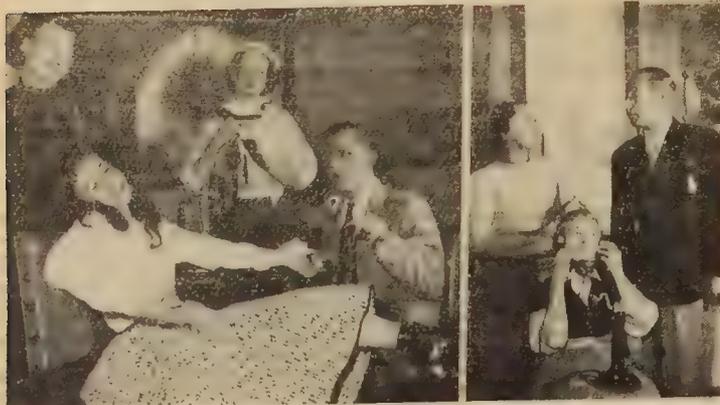

The presentation and christening of "CALEDON" was held May 13th, 1955. And before I left Finland on June 19th, 1955, believe it or not, the canoe had been paddled by our students an average of ten hours a day for four weeks!

But as much as the canoe, "CALEDON," and the SAUNA are loved by their owners, they still remain symbols—symbols of one of the most important ways to build friendship between nations. And from the individual point of view the results can be seen quickly. I am more than proud that I have the honour to be the first of our group to be back in Canada again, this time as a private person, not as a member of an official group. I now have an appointment as a part-time demonstrator in the Department of Mechanical Engineering. And I am only one among many who have had such a chance for personal education.

Internationally, the results may not appear immediately, but within 20 to 25 years these young men will have good positions in their native countries. And if men who have gone through this kind of educational experience in their youth are in charge of the foreign affairs of their countries, it would be the best "peace-insurance" in the entire world!

Chic of Araby

In Hart House on Wednesday evening, Araby Lockhart and her review, As I See It, provided an unusual experience in theatre, a chance to invade an almost exclusive family-gathering. Bishop Strachan, Araby's old school, was there in full force to sponsor her. Her husband, John Gray, wrote her lyrics. Finally, on stage she had a most judiciously unobtrusive assistant in Ron Bailey, available to hold hands, chat, or be funny, depending on what the occasion and/or Araby demanded.

I naturally felt like the uninvited guest. However, as Araby and Ron Bailey set their revue in motion my security was quickly restored at the sight of so many familiar faces. It was obvious that Miss Lockhart, when looking for material, had neglected the more interesting views her own city and society might have had to offer in favour of a wholehearted adoption of the sights of the English music hall. They were all there: the aging club-woman teetering after CULTURE; the plain Jane bewailing the elusiveness of men; the recitation delivered by a pinafored monster-child; and the most tarnished of them all, the chiffon-clad lady harpist flanked by a grand, glorious, and supposedly amusing instrument.

In spite of the absence of new faces, As I See It was an enjoyable evening. Araby is an extremely finished performer, one who really doesn't need family support. Each skit was given the benefit of her accomplishments. In the first half of the programme, a comedy of the manners and members of anywhere's four hundred, Miss Lockhart was most completely at home. Her gestures, expressions and intonations were faithful reproductions. Her selection of portraits was skilful. She is an obvious devotee of Bea Lillie, with that remarkably pliable face and that Bea Lillie knack of using just the right accessory (in this case a red shawl) in just the right way.

The early skits were by far the best part of the program, but Miss Lockhart unfortunately committed the indiscretion of excess. Over an hour of pseudo-English accent and smart sayings was too much for even friends to bear.

On the whole, the show was peppered with a smartness that usually managed to elbow boredom away. The costumes were cleverly adaptable, the green-washed backdrop's suggestion of distance cleverly used. Perhaps the smartest thing of all was Araby's parting gift to her mink-clad audience. It was a ballade, composed by her husband to the tune of Davy Crockett. The title? William Lying Lyon Mackenzie King.

Actors at UC and St. Mike's seem to be at a premium these days. Leon Major, director of R.U.E., the ambitious joint-college production slated for Hart House Theatre November 10-12, reports an unusually high proportion of women turning up for his casting-readings this week.

"I'm looking for, among other things, one or two disgruntled football players who didn't quite make the Blues," Mr. Major said. Casting for the play, which has about 15 principals, continues today from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Women's Union Theatre, 79 St. George St.

Two students were sent to a small iron ore mine some two hundred miles south of the Arctic Circle. The town and mine were called Olanmaki.

Nominally an iron mine, the mine also produces Pyrites, Titanium and Vanadium.

The town was a very modern one. A club house at the lake and good shopping facilities characterize the concern this country has for the workers.

These Finns are happy friendly people with an unspoiled, sincere hospitality and a desire to become a recognized part of the western world.

SAUNA PREFERENCE

BY KARL SARLIN

II Chemical Engineering

I worked at the G.A. Serlachius Co., a pulp and paper mill in Manfita in central Finland, spending one week in their laboratory, the next five learning something of their other operations. I found the people very interested in Canada and very willing to help me learn about Finland.

One of my most interesting experiences in Finland was my first smoke sauna. The smoke sauna differs from the regular sauna in that there is no chimney. As a result the inside walls of the sauna are covered with a layer of soot. The smoke from the fire passes out through a hole in the roof. Just before use, the fire is covered and the hole is plugged up. Personally, I must admit I prefer the regular sauna.

Saskatoon Hosts WUS

Two Varsity students yesterday joined delegates and observers from 18 Canadian universities at the national World University Service conference in Saskatoon.

John Burbidge (III Vic) and Howie Ferguson left on Wednesday to attend the four day conference.

WUS began shortly after World War I when a Dutch student organized a group to offer assistance to 200 destitute Viennese students. By the end of World War II this group had mushroomed into an international organization. At the last world conference, held in Oxford, England, 29 countries were represented.

Last year the national conference was held at Toronto. At that time, Dr. John Coleman, chairman of the Canadian Administrative council of WUS, described the three-fold objects of the association as:

- 1) Help by students in well-off countries to fellow students in distressed lands;
- 2) A concrete medium for the exchange of ideas among students in widely-scattered areas of the world;
- 3) The promotion of understanding among students all over the world.

How To Get Married

By RALPH BERRIN

No, girls, this article won't tell you how to catch a man. No, boys, this won't tell you how to propose. This article explains what happens afterward—the mechanics.

The mechanics start when you decide to get married: where, how and by whom.

The Licence:

The Ontario Government is interested enough in your marriage to force you to have a marriage licence. This engraved souvenir gives you the Government's permission to get married for five dollars. There is no waiting at 414 Bay St., one floor up, where licences are issued. Both parties are required to fill out the application which asks, besides the usual name, address and place of birth, if you can read or write. Some applicants, according to the office of the Provincial Secretary's office, are illiterate.

Age is an important factor. Anybody in Ontario can get married. If you are over 21 only your signature on the application is required. Under 21 you need a birth certificate; under 18, your father's permission. Under 16 your father's consent is still obligatory. Birth certificates are obtained at 70 Lombard Street for one dollar.

The licence is good for three months, but can't be used earlier than the third day after the date of the licence, e.g. if the licence is issued on Monday marriage cannot be solemnized until the Thursday following. The application asks for the date of proposed marriage, the intended place of marriage and the name and address of the person who will solemnize marriage.

Now you will have to know or ascertain the date, the place, and who will solemnize the marriage. Convocation Hall is not available; nobody knows who gives permission for marital use. Not even the President's daughter can get married there.

The Place

Various chapels are available on campus for marriage services. Hart House Chapel is very popular. You can avail yourselves of the Anglican Chaplain, (no fee), or get your own minister. The Chapel seats about 30 and costs $5.00 and the verger $2.00. An organist is $10.00 extra.

Knox Chapel is available for $35.00, seating 500; bring your own minister and music. The superintendent gets paid $10.00. Victoria offers Emmanuel Chapel or its college Chapel for $15.00, with your own minister.

Other chapels are available at the Newman Club, in St. Basil's church and chapel of St. Michael's College, Hillel Foundation or the new Trinity Chapel (no charge) with the Provost's permission.

Civil marriages can be performed by judges or magistrates, if you can find one. Make arrangements with them as to time, place and cost.

Other Details

Be sure to get the licence to the minister so he can take care of the rest, including the red carpet. Speaking of details, two downtown stores offer to take care of everything to the last rehearsal. Contact Miss Dreier at Eaton's or Mrs. Woodbridge at Simpson's. (No charge, but you might have to spend a lot of money at the store.)

You should go see a doctor, a lawyer and—no not an Indian Chief, but there are some books in the library both of you should read. Never mind what the library critics say, you will want to read both of the books concerning all the aspects of marriage. Any librarian will prove most helpful in guiding you to the right series of books and in making full use of the library.

Reception and other contingent festivities naturally run into more money. They are optional.

Open House Is Banned By McGill Frat Ruling

McGill (CUP) — McGill fraternities are now forbidden to hold "open house" on football and holiday weekends according to a new and temporary code of conduct announced by University authorities.

This marks the first time that there has been any official recognition or control of fraternities at McGill.

The McGill Daily reports that the McGill Senate and Inter-Fraternity Council are now working on a new "code of conduct" to be binding on all fraternities. Until its adoption, temporary regulations are in effect, and this temporary code forbids the frats to hold "open house" on weekends during the academic year — previously a common practice.

"Open House" means that the frat house is open to practically all comers for parties after football games or other big university events.

The temporary code does specify however, that the frat houses may apply to the university authorities for special permission to hold such an event.

Principal James — head of the university — has refused to comment on the new regulations until the frats involved have had time to fully examine the new rules.

After the frats have reported back with their opinions, a permanent code will be drawn up by the authorities and the Inter-Fraternity Council.

It is understood that the "no open-house" rule is only part of the new regulations.

No information is available as to the circumstances leading up to the action — the first time that McGill has ever officially taken notice of the fraternities — or as to the exact regulations proposed.

Journalism Course Opens in UC Today

News-gathering and writing will be discussed by John Dauphinee, General News Editor of The Canadian Press, today in room 13 of University College. The lecture is the first in a series of five being sponsored by The Varsity for all students on the campus interested in newspaper work.

The lectures have been designed with a view to promoting interest and giving advice to students who think they might like to enter the journalistic field.

Years of experience with The Canadian Press have enabled Mr. Dauphinee to reach the position of General News Editor of CP.

His work consists in co-ordinating and editing for distribution news to and from some 100 member Canadian dailies.

Publicity agents for campus clubs are invited along with Varsity staffers and all others interested.

6 Cheerleaders; 4 Are Girls UC Choice At WUA Meeting

UC will have four girls and two boys as cheerleaders this year, it was decided yesterday noon at the opening meeting of the Women's Undergraduate Association.

A committee composed of two WUA representatives will choose the cheerleaders to eliminate the random picking that was done last year.

A proposal for a "Fall Informal" to be held in the UC Men's Residence in November was defeated. It was felt that this dance would detract from the Arts Ball.

Literary director Catherine Olver announced that the first U.C. Parliament will be held the opening day of the JCR, scheduled for October 17. A coffee party followed by the debate will feature the opening.

The WUA's budget of $3,529.00 was passed at the open meeting. Of this amount, $2,229.00 was the WUA's share in the joint budget of the UC Lit. and the WUA.

Nominations were held for first and fourth year presidents. The voting will take place in the UC Rotunda, Thursday October 14, from 9:45 to 4:00 p.m. promises for breaking Varsity noses and toes, which they believe to be roses, and that the Queenies heroes are having to do much better if they are wishing to keep their study scholarships.

This last bit is hurting the Queenies deeply, right to the bottom of their safety deposit boxes, as it is only for an education that they come to Queenie U and they are being so chastened that they do not play with their usual fire and vigour in the second half.

Which is why the Blues are driving through their putting little faces for the touchies and some singles while the Queenies are settling for their two first-half scores and do not go anywhere special except maybe they are put on waivers and are then being picked up by Calgary Stampede or Larry Moonshine who cares nothing for the cost of them.

I am not even wasting time figuring out just what happens in the second division and I give only the scores. The Hobby-Horsies from Western are rocking to three touchies while the McGills get only one. It's all very sad, especially for old Benny as after these games the odds on my Blues go right back up and I do not make any more easy killings.

Kingston: Queen's freshettes were doubly drenched in an unusually rugged initiation last week. The girls, who were serenading the men's residence at 6.30 in the morning, were suddenly drenched with several pails of cold water thrown from above. Half an hour later, as the girls were returning home, they were attacked by a group of Sciencemen, armed with hoses. The girls were again thoroughly drenched.

While the hose episode added to the excitement, it didn't add much to the fun of the initiation," the girls agreed. Some of the freshettes received the hose full in the face.

New York, NY: A Columbia philosophy professor, still fighting against the charges of a McCarthy investigation committee, has not yet returned to his faculty position at the University, the Columbia Daily Spectator announces.

Last year Professor Lamont was queried by Senator McCarthy concerning the political views of his book "The Peoples of the Soviet Union." A chapter of the book was found in an Army instruction handbook.

Dr. Lamont refused to answer queries, pleading the First Amendment with its guarantee of free speech. As a result, he was charged with contempt of the Senate.

A federal judge in New York dismissed the indictment but the Government is appealing the dismissal of the case.

New York, NY: Columbia frosh went through their initiations by participating in a Community Help Day. They painted, cleaned basements, and washed windows at various centres and Y's. The frosh were considered a tremendous success.

Ithaca, NY: Although the women egged them on, the freshmen of Cornell didn't have much success in attempting to raid the girls' dorms. One house, an exception, soaked the men with buckets of water. At all the rest, women shouted out the windows, and threw souvenirs to the men. However the doors were all locked and the campus police came up in force, so that the men could not enter the dorms.

New York, NY: There will be no more kidnapping at Columbia University during the Soph-Frosh rush. The Student Board at Columbia finally, after a split vote, decided to abolish it.

Kidnapping at Columbia built up to such a grand scale, with airplane and international travel included, that the whole Rush was discontinued last year by the Administration. A series of panty raids contributed to the one-year ban.

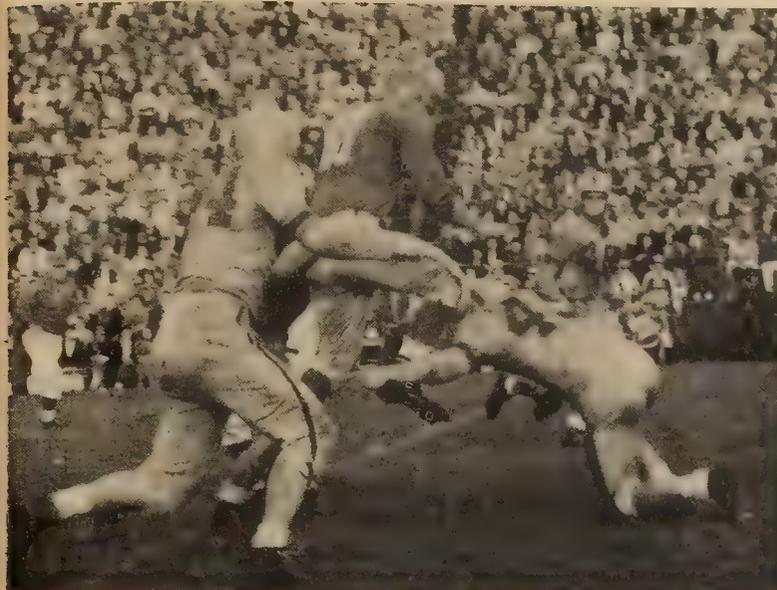

This year the Rush will return to the Columbia campus, but without the traditional kidnapping.

Montreal: McGill University plays host to royalty this week. Her Royal Highness Princess Mary, the Princess Royal, is visiting Montreal for the first time, and she will receive an honorary LL.D. degree from McGill, at their annual Fall Convocation.

Varsity Pride Humbled Despite Steel, Concrete

Varsity Stadium's concrete-embedded steel goal posts succumbed to the attack of the Queen's fans last Saturday afternoon. The posts, which were nylon-covered at one end, and sunk in three square feet of concrete, had been considered indestructible and permanent fixtures of the stadium.

Last year the university athletic association put up the steel posts after repeated losses of wooden posts at the close of each game. Up until last Saturday, the posts had successfully withstood the attacks of all, including the Grey Cup fans.

However, after the last whistle on Saturday, the Queen's fans swarmed on the field, and it was only a matter of minutes before the cross-bar was torn from the north-end posts.

The Queen's supporters, who had previously supplied themselves with ropes, attacked, and eventually completely removed both posts. The police forces, supplied by the athletic association, did not attempt to interfere with the howling mob of Queen's students, but prevented a serious attack on the south end posts. A few Varsity engineers tried to stop the attackers, but were completely unsuccessful.

The Blue and White Society announced last year that any damage done to the goal posts would be looked upon "very seriously." Tom Thompson, the Blue and White Society Chairman said "no comment" when questioned yesterday about the incident.

However he added that nothing could be done over a week-end, and that any new developments would be considered on Tuesday. He said that any complaints made to Queens would probably go higher than the Alma Mater Society, which usually handles student affairs.

The old wooden posts were put up for the Monday Big Four football game, and will probably remain up for the rest of the season, announced Mr. Loosmore secretary of the university athletic association.

"I doubt very much if we would replace the steel goal posts in the middle of the football season," Mr. Loosmore said. He added that the final decision would have to be made in an athletic board meeting.

Of course there is always the possibility that the wooden posts might have to be replaced several times during the remainder of the season. But even this would be better than having the expensive steel posts torn out by fans, according to groundskeeper Charlie McElroy.

"I'm convinced now that we should buy the cheapest wooden poles possible and replace them after each game," said McElroy, as he watched the steel posts twist and topple to the ground.

The cost of the property damage by Queen's students has been estimated at about $500 by Mr.

Loosmore. He said that this was only a rough estimate and that there was also the cost of the paint job done Thursday night to be considered.

Student vandals broke into the stadium Thursday night, and painted up the scoreboard and the stands. The signs were mostly pro Queens University, urging on the Golden Gaels.

"The scoreboard was badly defaced and had to be completely repainted," Mr. Loosmore said. All the repainting was done on

This was the conclusion reached Saturday by Al Davidson (IV Meds), Red Feather Publicity Director, after only ten of an expected 100 children from the University Settlement took seats reserved for them at the Varsity-Queens game.

"Some philanthropist gave them tickets to a movie at the last minute and they departed en masse," said Davidson, who had received a donation of 100 free seats from the University Athletic Association.

He said arrangements with press, radio and television had to be cancelled at the last moment. More than 30 Varsity co-eds, who volunteered to look after the children, were disappointed.

"Children are as unpredictable as women," sighed Davidson, last seen heading from Varsity stadium with a large bundle of 90 red feathers under one arm and a sympathetic co-ed on the other.

Despite this disappointment, Davidson hoped all campaign workers and students would continue to take part in Red Feather activities during the week.

The projects include a tag-day, to be conducted on Homecoming weekend under the direction of Yvonne Adams, St. Michael's College. A Red Feather concert, to be held Oct. 20 from 12:30 to 2 p.m. at Convocation Hall, gives a grand finale to the campaign, he said. Representatives from various faculties will provide entertainment.

Objective of the campus-wide campaign is 50 cents a student, which officials hope will net more than $5,000. Students are being relied upon to give their contributions to individual faculty representatives.

For those interested in the working of the committee, a tour will be conducted Thursday to visit the settlement house and other places. The aim of the tour is to bring students closer to the campaign agencies and their work.

UC Writing Club To Use Couplets On Arbor Room

Creative writing will take on a new twist here tonight.

About a dozen members of the U.C. Modern Letters Club are due to turn up in UC's Croft Chapter House with self-composed poems on the Hart House Arbor Room—styled in the heroic couplet, the favourite form of such masters of English poetry as 'Dryden, and Pope'.

Professor F. E. L. Priestly, Honorary President of the Club, suggested the gimmick as a means of acquainting aspiring poets with the difficulties of composing in some of the established literary forms.

Tonight, members of the Club will criticise the results they've achieved.

Last year, Professor Priestly suggested that the Club operate somewhat like a campus Camera Club—suggesting assignments, and at subsequent meetings discussing them.

Similar assignments to that pertaining to the Arbor Room will be given during the year.

Trips To Iron Curtain Lands Proposed to NFCUS Fans

Edmonton (CUP) — Proposals of a Czechoslovakian observer to promote student exchanges with Iron Curtain countries highlighted the opening plenary session at the week-long conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Jiri Pelikan, representative of the communist-dominated International Union of Students, outlined a nine-point programme to "improve international understanding" among Canadian students and those of communist countries. He proposed the organization of Canadian student tours to communist countries and the formation of an "international culture group" to tour Canada.

Delegates from 20 Universities throughout Canada, together with other observers from Germany, the United States and Pakistan, were present at the 19th annual conference of the NFCUS opened on the University of Alberta campus.

Toronto's delegates were SAC president Michael Shoemaker and vice-president Di Haas, sent with SAC approval of a plan to "increase the efficiency of NFCUS administration." Their mandates will be considered in committee work which occupies Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

The plenary session set up three committees: the National Affairs Commission, chaired by Ontario vice-president Peter Martin of Toronto; the International Affairs Commission, headed by Paul Wannacott, graduate of the University of Western Ontario; and the Administration and Finance Commission, chaired by Maritimes vice-president Harry Keenan of St. Francis Xavier's University, Nova Scotia.

Requests for admission by St. Patrick's University, Ottawa; the Calgary branch of the University of Alberta; and the University of King's College, New Brunswick, were referred to the committees.

Reports of the past year's activities took up most of today's meeting, with president Douz Burns, University of Alberta, and separate camps giving the successes and failures of NFCUS projects and mandates.

Football First Says Policeman Won't Let Photographer Enter

A University policeman, engaged in a radio broadcast of the Argo-Ticat game Monday afternoon, refused to leave his parked automobile to admit a Varsity photographer to Convocation Hall to take a picture assignment.

The unidentified policeman said that he would only leave his car to let the photographer into the locked hall when the game was over. It was then mid-way through the third quarter.

Later, the photographer returned. This time—the game being over—he was admitted after an argument only to find that the organist to be photographed had left.

The organist was practising in the hall on the Convocation Hall organ, and had previously agreed that the photographer could take his picture then.

Revamped FROS Begin Activities Talks, Series Of Visits On Agenda

The program for the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students organization has started to roll for this year, said a FROS spokesman yesterday. FROS is the organization which looks after foreign students on the campus. FROS is planning again this year to hold its series of weekly discussions. These discussions, held once a week during the lunch hour, in the FROS office, cover topics ranging from tourists in Jamaica to the role of the ego in theoretical science. The students themselves suggest and discuss the topics. Also on the agenda for the year

Seventy Students Hear First Lecture On News Reporting

"All anyone needs to be a reporter is the ability to compose a grammatical sentence and to write an interesting letter to a friend," said John Dauphinee, General News Editor of the Canadian Press in a Varsity lecture last Friday.

However, curiosity, enthusiasm and the recognition that journalism is a full-time job were also listed as essential attributes of a good newspaper reporter by Dauphinee, who was speaking to a crowded roomful of about 70 students at the first in a series of lectures organized by The Varsity on newspaper work. This Friday, a lecture on sportswriting will be given by Jim Froudford of the Toronto Daily Star.

Emphasizing the fact that news reporting is constant routine work Mr. Dauphinee touched on a few of the desirable characteristics of a would-be reporter. Inquisitiveness is all-important he said, and the ability to pick up facts from everyday events.

He defined news as the chronicles of public affairs. He emphasized the treatment of the news by the reporter, not the news itself. News must be truthful and informative, he said.

Mr. Dauphinee listed six rules to guide one on the way to becoming a good reporter. Among others he stressed keeping up to date, and getting practice. A wide acquaintanceship added to a knowledge of the mechanics of government and business is essential, he said.

In getting a news story Dauphinee stressed the value of remaining as inconspicuous as possible. "Don't be afraid to ask questions of bystanders, he said, but ask them directly. And finally for the finished product.

Put the important facts at the beginning, and gradually taper off towards the end. Know your subject, and translate special jargon.

Above all use good clear writing, and make your story interesting. Remember, he said, people want to read the facts, and don't want to have to translate a literary composition.

BLUES TRIP TRICOLOR 11-6

Come From Behind In 2nd Half Muntz, Rogers Shine Offensively

By JOHN WILSON

The Varsity Blues unleashed twin battering rams in the form of Phil Muntz and Jack Rogers to come from behind a 6-0 Queen's lead and score an 11-6 fourth-quarter victory Saturday afternoon in Varsity Stadium. Aided by a pair of goalposts with a talent for getting in the way, and some sloppy passing by the Gaels' import quarterback Gus Braccia, to say nothing of a hard-charging line that cut the Queen's ground attack to an insignificant 85 yards, the Blues hammered out their second consecutive league win, and moved into undisputed possession of first place in the Intercollegiate Football Union.

The new Blue pass defence, devised by Bob Masterson to avoid the damage done to McGill by the powerful Queen's aerial attack, worked wonders as Al Riva and Ed Skrzypek snagged two interceptions apiece, while Braccia only completed eight of 24 strikes.

Early press notices last week had left the Blues' fortunes to the ability of Phil Muntz to cover the Gaels' versatile halfback Ron Stewart. The mighty mite got in the loose just once, with Muntz hot on his tail in the right flat, but the burning question remained unanswered. Braccia's desperation pass, thrown from his own end zone struck the uprights and fell harmlessly in the goal area. Jocko Thompson's punt went into touch at the Queen's 31 and minutes later Skrzypek hit from three yards out for the touchdown. Peter Maik converted to make it 11-6 with eight minutes left.

Queen's threatened just once more in the dying moments, but Braccia's third down pass was way long to Stewart in the Varsity end zone and the Blues took over and held the ball.

The game was a tale of frustration for the fiery Gael squad, which Frank Tindall has described as one of the best Queen's has ever had. Braccia continually overshot his receivers or planted the ball neatly in the waiting arms of the alert Blue defensive halfbacks. On the ground vicious tackling by Don Johnston and Bobby Waugh kept the Gael running attack at a minimum. Gael halfback Gary Schneider, who carried eleven times for 17 yards, made five of the six Queen's fumbles, three of which were recovered by the Blues at critical stages of the game.

After a scoreless first half in which both teams were equal, the Gaels struck for an early touchdown to take the lead. Lou Bruce blocked a Skrzypek punt and Queen's took over at the Varsity 41. Schneider crashed for five and then Bruce took a pass from Braccia at the ten and went all the way. Thompson converted and the Gaels led 6-0.

Midway in the third quarter Muntz set Rogers up for the first Blue score with an eleven-yard jaunt to the Queen's two. Rogers had begun the drive from the Queen's 32 with a series of line smashes after Muntz had recovered Schneider's fumble.

Stewart, Braccia's favorite target against McGill, was on the receiving end of six passes, but only made two of them good for 31 yards. At the same time, Skrzypek and Wilson threw sixteen strikes, completing four for 19 yards as the Blue pass attack seemed to weaken. On the ground, aided by Muntz and Rogers, the Blues piled up 237 yards rushing to 85 for the Gaels.

The difference was on defence though, as it was against the Mustangs a week ago in London. Faced by an inspired line, the Blues spent a good part of the afternoon in the Queen's backfield, while bucking a nine-man Gael defensive line for most of the fourth quarter.

While the Gaels test the Mustangs in a home-and-home series the Blues take it easy for two weeks with a pair of games with McGill in preparation for the toughest game of the season in Kingston on October 29.

Blue View . . . Muntz was author of the game's longest run—a 36-yard jaunt in the first quarter . . .

Blue end Dick Risk made the best defensive play in his first intercollegiate start, throwing Braccia for a 21-yard loss late in the fourth quarter . . . Stewart played this one with a bad-back, as did halfback Jim Cruikshank and end Lou Bruce . . . Captain Gary Lewis and tackle Jim Hughes were the best on the Queen's line . . . Stewart was bunched in on kick runbacks too and only averaged 3.2 yards per try . . . Rogers averaged eleven yards running back Thompson's long boons, while Maik averaged seven . . . Blues came out of the game without a permanent injury as did the Gaels . . . Queen's will benefit from the return to action of Al Koeman in two more weeks.

Soccer Blues Thump OAC Intermediates Winners Too

Varsity's soccer Blues recorded their second shutout in as many games Saturday morning on the back campus, blanking the OAC Aggie eleven 6-0. The Blues defeated the Western Mustangs 7-0 last week in their opening league game.

Ed Bracht and John Rava notched two goals apiece for the Blues while Rod Green and Brian King scored the others. Leading 1-0 after the first half, the Varsity crew had a hard time of it for most of the game, bursting forth for four goals in the last fifteen minutes.

Dave Wood and George Ochrym each scored twice as the Intermediates dropped the OAC seconds in a preliminary. The Baby Blues led the Aggies 2-0 at half time and had little trouble posting their second win in as many starts.

The Blues meet McGill this Saturday in Toronto in the first game of a two-game series for the championship of the Intercollegiate's eastern division.

Seconds Whitewash Queen's Rusty Gee Scores 2 TD's

Kingston, Oct. 9 (CUP)—Backed by a strong line, Stew Winters led the Varsity football team to a 35-0 win over the Queen's Comets in their first game of the year. The Blues led 17-0 going into the second half.

The issue was never in doubt as Blue backfielders ripped through centre and around end for long gains. Bob Dann, Tim Reid, and Jim Seigmiller all broke into the clear for 60 yard gains.

Getting excellent protection from his linemen, Winter completed 17 out of 24 passes. Two of his passes to Rusty Gee were good for touchdowns.

So powerful was their attack that the Blues were not forced to kick once in the first half. On third downs the Blues ran the ends for first downs. Blue backs Dann, Reid, Don Comish, John Tattle, Gee and Brian Clark helped the Blues gain 26 first downs to the Comets' ten. Larry Joyn, playing in spite of a sore shoulder, contributed greatly as defensive safety and kicker.

Blue scorers were Dann, Comish, Reid Clark and Gee with two Joyn converted four and Lansky one.

The Blue line of Norm Levine, Glen MacLean, Ted Lansky, Pete Polocrome, Dave McIntyre and Nelson were impressive holding off the few Queen's attacks and blocking well for the Blue backs.

What's the matter with old UC seems to have been the question around this campus for many a year now, and it appears to be the pertinent question again this season in spite of the spirit raising attempts by the press of the former-mentored college. Although UC men might try for the Reid Trophy, the women of Principle Jeanneret's college did not seem in the least interested in the fact that they should have a swimming team and that they themselves have an individual trophy to compete for.

With a good show of enthusiasm all the other women's colleges of this university have been attending the practices which are held for the intramural swimming teams every Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday evenings at the OCE swimming pool. For the speedsters the time to don the bathing suit is 5:30, for the stylists 6:30, and for the divers the board is free at 7:30. No matter what field of this aquatic sport you excel at, Marg Harrington, this year's coach of the Blue Aqua Belles will find time to help you. As the time draws nearer to the Interfaculty meet which is being held by the courtesy of the gentlemen of the university in the Hart House pool because the women of Toronto have no regulation pool of their own and are forced to practise in the OCE Pool or in the bathtub at Lillian Massey, girls are reminded that they must attend five practices in order to qualify for a position on their college team. This applies not only to the unenthusiastic UC types, but also to the mermaids at other seats of learning.

Come on you red and white gals, and show the other colleges that you can at least dress a team for the interfaculty swim on Nov. 5. If you only knew it, the gradmas for the freshie swim tests show that UC has the highest average of good swimmers, so if the juniors and sophomores of the college feel too old for such a training schedule, how about you freshies showing the world that UC has some school spirit and is capable of team participation?

Mustangs, Redmen Battle to Tie

Montreal, Oct. 10 (CUP)—Western's flagging Mustangs, only a shadow of their former greatness, salvaged a 6-6 tie with the McGill University Redmen here Saturday, when Ted Roman's fourth quarter punt went for a single.

The Mustangs had a definite edge in play over the Redmen, but bogged down when in scoring position twice in the scoreless first half. Their touchdown came late in the fourth quarter when fullback Ralph Simmons crashed, over from five yards out, but the convert attempt was nullified by holding in the Western line, and it took Roman's single to force the draw.

McGill had taken the lead earlier in the third frame when Bob Holland skirted the left end for fifteen yards after taking a pitch-out from quarterback Dick Carr. The touchdown capped a 59-yard drive and John Bennett made the convert good to give the Redmen a short-lived 6-0 lead.

The Mustangs dominated play throughout, rolling up 19 first downs to McGill's ten, and out-rushing the home team on the ground 223 yards to 69. McGill however, gained 61 yards in the air, to 43 gained by Western.

And then there's the local man who says his wife uses so many cosmetic creams at night that he doesn't know "whether she's going to bed, or greasing herself to swim Lake Ontario."

RUR
Casting today in Women's Union Theatre—2 to 4:30 p.m.

The evident impotency of the Mustangs may well be attributed to the sudden change in their offensive formation. Coach McEwen scrapped the much-publicized Diamond T after the Mustangs absorbed a 20-2 shellacking from the Varsity Blues last week in London. Now operating out of the straight T, without the services of fullback Willie Casanova, the Mustangs are for the time being considerably weaker than had been expected.

Baby Blue Golfers Victors Western Senior Champions

Varsity's Intercollegiate golfers captured one title and just missed another in the senior and intermediate tournaments last weekend. The title medallion topped five other colleges over Toronto's Lakeview course to win the Intercollegiate championship, while the seniors ran a close second to Western, who wrested the Ruttan Cup from McGill in the senior tournament.

The senior team had a total of 655 over the 36 holes of medal play at Kingston's Catarquin Golf and Country Club, just twenty short of the Western total.

Don Cossar was low man for Varsity with 159, followed by Bob Pezyck and Don Hewson with 163, and Whole Wedelowski with 170. Ray Coole of Queen's won the individual title with a low of 156 for the second year in a row. Osgoode Hall and the University of Montreal entered to add in addition to the big four of the Intercollegiate Union.

The intermediates had a team total of 338 in their 18-hole tournament Friday, made up of Hugh Sampson's 83, Gary Hewson and Steve Angus' 84, and Jim Grieve's 87.

Western's Glen Burgess was individual tournament champion with an 81, contributing to his team's total of 343 which was second best. Waterloo College was third with 356, Assumption and McMaster tied for fourth with 361, and Ryerson trailed with 368.

it's our business

Today, 66 community charities are asking for our help. In the week-long Community Chest drive just beginning on this campus, we will be asked to aid through our donations those in the greater Toronto area who need our support.

The university student objective is $5,000 — a pitifully small sum considering the great need in this city.

There is no reason why this objective should not be met. There is no excuse for university students not realizing — and fulfilling — their responsibilities to their local community.

So let's give — and give enough.

man of the hour

Behold the man of the hour, the good-natured sports-loving fan.

He cheweth gum and cracketh it.

He drinketh liquor and getteth drunk;

Then he maketh big noise to show he is good-natured.

During game he shouteth after retiring woman, throweth his bottles on field, and unrolleth private supply of TP

He weareth sturdy sloppy apparel

After game he runneth on field and fighteth with fans of opposite team to show that he truly understandeth the sport.

He goeth to tea dance, all liquored up.

He screameth at women on way.

He danceth with woman as though she were part of his clothes.

He inviteth her out to party

At party he laugheth much with buddies (to show he is good-natured) and drinketh much

He leaveth girl in corner much of time then he joineth her and loveth her much.

He leaveth her for good at door.

He goeth to bed late, muchly pleased with himself.

a birthday

We Canadians are inclined to beat our breasts because of our lack of Canadian talent and creative activity. At the same time we are inclined to sit like the three apes covering our ears, eyes and mouths determined to see no culture, hear no culture and patronize no Canadian culture.

This week is the seventy-fifth birthday of a well-known Canadian composer, well-known at least in the United States, England and Europe. The composer is Doctor, Healey Willan, University Organist, and choirmaster and organist of the Church of St. Mary Magdalene.

For over thirty years Dr. Willan has directed the musical liturgy of St. Mary's, working steadily, as

UC Women Not Frigid

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Answer should definitely be made to the disconsolate Don Juan who signs himself Amor de Cosmos. This individual, claiming to represent a majority opinion at UC, finds Whitney Hall women "cold, sexless, unaware..." etc.

Actually, such a statement could hardly be farther from the truth — one has only to drop by the night entrance in the early hours of any morning to observe a veritable orgy, and god only knows what would be going on if it weren't for the chastity light. On the whole, Whitney Hall women couldn't be sexier.

The major reason for his plight is self-evident, and is expressed in the opening words of his letter: "I am a freshman at UC and believe that speaks for itself." It certainly does. If this oaf were at Trinity College (heaven forbid), he would find little trouble Spontaneous!

The Editor,
The Varsity:

As Freshmen of Jeanneret House, we feel that we should defend our house against the ridiculous charge placed by some badly misinformed Whitney Hall residents.

The "two weeks of horror," which we supposedly were forced to endure, lasted a mere seven days, and those freshmen who wished to withdraw did so. We who did not withdraw not only enjoyed ourselves thoroughly, but feel we benefited by getting better acquainted with the other members of the House. We feel that initiations are beneficial when they are carried on in a friendly manner as they were here. The freshmen is brought out of his shell and enjoys a riotous week with the seniors.

It has been charged that we were subjected to at least three Hell nights, numerous showerings and a lot of fag duties. In fact, however, there was only one hell night, in which we enjoyed ourselves immensely, and which, we might add, ended at 12 o'clock.

The only showering any of us received occurred when the very Whitney Hall girls who claimed we had been brutally treated hurled water at us. Many of us did no fags at all.

As for the "degrading" tasks which we were forced to do, most of us feel that they were not nearly so degrading as dressing up in ridiculous costumes, which we have seen on the campus. One of us, however, had the degrading task of dating Miss Freshie.

It has been assumed that we feel nothing but "contempt for our despicable seniors." This statement is totally untrue, and most of us are glad to be members of Jeanneret House.

POT's Tread Guts

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Quoting from an article in The Varsity, fraternities "direct the thinking of their members toward lofty principles of self-betterment and moral achievement" and "rest on a strong moral and religious basis." I would compare the aims of these mature gentlemen, obsessed by the quest for the golden grail of brotherhood among men, to their actions without comment.

In this year's recent official initiation of the POT freshmen by the male fraternities, these young ladies were, among other light-hearted and jovial pranks, under penalty of social ostracization for refusal, and forced to walk barefooted through a six foot wide trough of animal intestines, obtained from a local abattoir.

Seeing Red

The Editor,
The Varsity:

As students of this University we were appalled and ashamed by the narrowness of the viewpoint expressed in your editorial on Fraternities. In doing this you have exercised the very discrimination that you accused the fraternities of fostering.

You criticized fraternity members of exclusiveness and social discrimination yet why is it that these people hold many high positions on campus? It certainly isn't because fellow fraternity members were voting for them because these groups are in the minority. Rather it is because the people who seek the benefits of a fraternity are those who have the qualities of leadership and participation.

We as students do not mind giving our ideas and feelings for FORUMS when approached, but when these opinions are published as something totally different from what was given, then we see red. It is only common sense to realize that when approached in the future by some nincompoop representing The Varsity, we must refuse on the grounds of the possibility of being misquoted!

We are losing faith in our Varsity as it seems the paper is not a good and fair representative of the student body. Let's take measures to return it to its former position as one of the top University papers.

Toleration

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Articles such as the one in The Varsity, October 7th, about Professor Lamont of Columbia University appear frequently and indeed, I believe, disgust most Canadians with U.S. methods of controlling "communism." Each time I come across one of these accounts I appreciate a little more our own Canadian system of 'watchful toleration.'

Fine Examples

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In refutation to the comments issued by co-eds and quoted by Miss Franks in Thursday's Varsity, I wish to point out a few obvious facts pertaining to fraternity women on this campus.

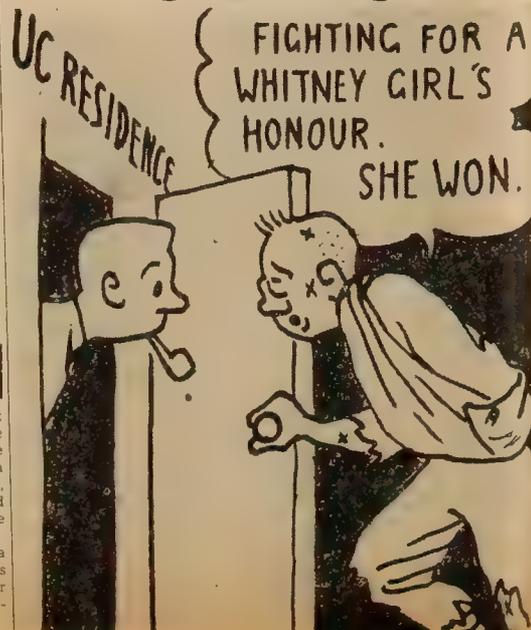

What is more important in this world than one's relationship with other people? If fraternity life builds a sound basis for social compatibility, surely this is not putting importance in the wrong place, but on the contrary in the right place. I ask you to show me a fraternity girl who would ditch her girl friend for a man, I have yet to meet one.

Of all the girls on this campus, I do not think costly wardrobe competition is a characteristic of fraternity women. I would not hesitate to indicate others far more conscious of this sort of foolishness. And the cost of the average fraternity pin for women at this university is not thirty-five dollars, but closer to one quarter of this price.

Finally, I ask you to consider the activities and scholastic stand-up of our fraternity girls. You will see many fine examples of activity in sports, theatrical work and executive duty on various faculty-student government bodies, as well as standings of scholarship levels. I am inclined to feel that these criticisms are prompted by ignorance rather than fraternity experience and understanding. Perhaps this is partially due to the fact that women's fraternities are not recognized by this university.

With great pride, The Varsity salutes Dr. Healey Willan, who celebrates his seventy-fifth birthday to-morrow, October 12th. Organist to the University of Toronto, sometime Professor of Music in the University, Dr. Willan is without doubt the most distinguished composer and musical scholar that this country has known.

Dr. Willan and his Work

In 1913, Dr. Willan was invited by the late Dr. A. S. Vogt, then principal of the Toronto (now Royal) Conservatory of Music to come to Canada and take charge of the theory department at the conservatory. Organist for ten years at the London church of St. John the Baptist, Holland Road, he continued his church affiliations in Canada at St. Paul's Church, Bloor St., moving to St. Mary Magdalene's in 1921.

Here, over the past thirty-five years, he has established a standard of liturgical use that has been an inspiration and a guidance to many other choirs throughout the country. In spite of limited financial resources, his scholarship, musicianship and faith have led his little group—he usually has about twenty singers enlisted in his gallery at St. Mary's, and perhaps eight in the chancel choir—to an understanding of the liturgy and its beauties that is wonderfully reflected in their singing of it.

Dr. Willan's most significant work as a composer is probably his settings of the liturgy, for which he has written eleven short settings of the Ordinary of the Mass, and his motets and anthems. His great motet for double chorus, The Apostrophe to the Heavenly Host, was requested by Dr. Herbert Fricker, and, owing to an altered deadline, was composed in three days. A work that has brought him great renown in recent years is his Homage Anthem from the Service for the Coronation of Her Majesty the Queen in 1953.

His music has been described as ultra-conservative. This is true enough, in that the music fits in exactly with his time and generation. Although he admits to no one teacher of composition, one sees reflected in his work his education in a London that had begun to seek after the key that would unshackle English musical thought from that of northern Germany. The next generation, Vaughan Williams, Holst, and Bax, found in the sacred and secular music of 15th and 16th Century England the release that their elders had sought, and raised a new group—Walton, Tippett, Rawsthorne—against a background of music with an already typically English flavour. Dr. Willan appears to us now as of that middle generation which, no longer bound by the rigid tonal concepts of the 19th Century, established a place for itself in the development of music by substituting for them the free modal usage of the Renaissance.

On this page are a number of appreciative comments on Dr. Willan by some of his closest personal and professional friends. They describe sufficiently well a man whose humility is only exceeded by his love for and pride in his art. His philosophy in his own words: "I love beautiful noises, and I hate ugly ones."

This, surely, is the love of music reduced to its simplest terms, and a motto fit for all of us occupied with the art.

Michael Oliver

Nothing that can be said here can replace knowing the man through his music. The CBC, on its Wednesday Night Programme will present two-and-a-half hours devoted to Dr. Willan's music. The composer will conduct the choir of St. Mary Magdalene in some of his unaccompanied part music, and later Geoffrey Waddington will conduct the CBC Symphony Orchestra, with the Festival Chorus. Their programme will include the Homage Anthem from the Coronation.

On Saturday, 15th October, a programme of choral and organ music will be given at St. Paul's Church, Bloor Street East, starting at 4:00 p.m.

SOUND AND FURY

Wherefore Macbeth ?

It is, I think, unfortunate that the Canadian Players this year chose Macbeth as one of the two productions with which they will show the United States what Canada is achieving in the field of drama. As staged Friday at Eaton Auditorium, on the eve of going over the border for two months, the production gave all-too-clear signs of the right (that is, the expedient) means being put to the wrong end, and of a fine cast having their obvious talents frittered away in a play that should never have been attempted.

Saint Joan, staged last year and this year to be repeated, is far more receptive to director Douglas Campbell's off-with-their-trappings approach. Physically static, the play teems with ideas. Its characters sit around and talk, with every word a weapon.

Its long passages of dialogue, and the fact that each character is distinctly individualized by his approach to the one great ideological issue of the play, mean that cast-doubling has no jarring effect on the audience's tender sensibilities. But take a play where all depends on action, on the terrifying spectacle of the world of action overtaking and crushing a fundamentally introspective figure, and what do you have with the Campbell approach? In this case, a welter of fuzzy personalities, with too few people doing too many things, and doing them a little over-obtrusively.

This criticism is not born of a love of the traditions of the Shakespearean stage, complete with orotund principals and 127 extras. Othello, for instance, would have positively benefited from a new emphasis on the mind, and Mr. Campbell's mode of direction could have given the Moor a new impact. Yet he chose Macbeth, and then inexplicably shied away from non-externals.

Which brings us to William Hutt's Macbeth, surely one of the craziest theses to stamp about a stage. The Campbell thesis was simple—a callowish warrior is prodded into action, with a resultant and immediate effect on his sanity. Mr. Hutt was round the bend by the banquet scene (an "admitted disorder" not very much admired by this reviewer), and the play became the squashing of a burly beetle by a sort of Scots Paul Bunyan—Douglas Campbell's Macduff.

Frances Hyland's Lady Macbeth was reminiscent of her Portia in Stratford's The Merchant of Venice. Here again she was a flighty little thing who bit off more than she could chew, but here there were no law-books to help her out. Lady Macbeth's "great" speeches became a little girl's whistlings in the dark, and she achieved stature only in the sleepwalking scene, where she could at last admit to herself the enormity of her guilt.

For all twelve eyes twelve of the cast, dowdiest declamation was the directorial order of the day, with stylized gestures that ill accorded with the simple sets and shimmering curtains that made up the set. Credit goes to designer Clarence Wilson, whose costumes made boldly effective dusky splurges against the backdrop, and to the members of the cast who beautifully kept hooded heads averted in various scenes because they'd just been killed in the scene before.

Dave Dunsmuir

I watched with excitement the feet under the curtain of Eaton Auditorium last Thursday night, as I had heard that dynamic and novel things were being done in German ballet. Now I would see.

I was both gratified and let down by the Dance Theatre-Berlin. What I did see affected me like a teeter-totter, sending me way up in the air at one moment and landing me on the ground with an uncomfortable thud the next.

Unfortunately the opening ballet, Ballade, was rather in the third class. Stylised and formalised the choreography was static and unbalanced, while the dancing itself was uncertain and unco-ordinated.

Hamlet in five scenes, which followed, was quite another matter. It did have its difficult moments, due to the constant shifting of the king's throne in attendant black-outs and the sparseness of the two-piano accompaniment; however, these could mostly be attributed to conditions of the particular stage facilities.

The conception, choreography, and execution of the ballet itself were such as to grip the spectator strongly and shake him down for his emotional change. Harsh, unclassical, pulsating and repetitive movements of mental agony characterised the choreography, which was designed to express passion.

The Hamlet theme is a rather difficult one to translate into pure movement. In most cases, this ballet is successful, although in some a fairly intimate knowledge of the play would seem necessary.

The queen's sensuality, for instance, is easily translated as the did Bach, in one relatively small community. Building slowly and laboriously he has established a repertory of first-class creative music for the Anglican Church Calendar, writing what he believed theologically and musically. He has established a choir which over a period of years has set a standard of excellence in A Cappella singing.

At the same time he has written two symphonies, one piano concerto, an overture to an unwritten comic opera, the opera Deirdre of the Sorrows and several larger works of religious inspiration.

Three years ago his commissioned composition was performed at the Coronation of the new Elizabeth.

These are his writings, which combine modern harmonies with early starkness, and basic forms with an Elgaresque romanticism.

But there is more to his contribution to music than his writings. There is his inspiration and directions as a person. His influence in the Canadian College of Organists and in the Gregorian Association has been an all-important guide.

His teaching of theory for many years at the Conservatory has guided many people in and out of consecutive fifths. His enthusiasm for Tudor music has had much to do with its performance and revival in Canada and elsewhere. His stern eye has turned many a tremulous young soprano voice into a clear and steady reed. And his wit has left many people speechless with or without laughter.

There are great men among us if we will but see them.

people say...

"He is an enthusiastic man, a man with a twinkle in his eye. He is probably one of the youngest seventy-five-year olds we have around today..."

Louis Appeltaum

"His organ playing is very sound. I don't know how he does it, because he gets very little time for practice. He knows the value of silence; the instrument does not intrude where it should not, and when it does come in, it comes in with a colossal sound."

Charles Peaker

"In composition his style is what we would call ultra-conservative. Actually we find influences of Parry and Stanford in his work. In addition to this, his music has a definite vitality. It is strong, personal, and very much alive."

Geoffrey Kidout

"Healey can on occasions be gruff with strangers—but he is the most genial of companions in his circle of friends. They all know him as an irrepresible raconteur, and on meeting him one is often greeted with, 'I say, old man, have you heard this one?' Then he will probably switch to some more serious topic—and is quite happy if you happen to disagree violently with his opinions."

Sir Ernest Macmillan

"His music is unmistakably English with a flavour of the Irish thrown in. There is undoubtedly mobility in a great number of his works. His music expresses the character of the man."

Geoffrey Waddington

"Humble, in spite of magnificent achievements, proud of the art which he serves so well. Healey Willan at once obtains a kind of loyalty which few men ever receive."

From a St. Mary Magdalene Choir Member

"I admire Healey Willan as a musical composer. I love him as a friend. Healey, may you live to be a hundred and may your capacities then be working at full blast as they are now."

The Hamlet theme is a rather difficult one to translate into pure movement. In most cases, this ballet is successful, although in some a fairly intimate knowledge of the play would seem necessary. The queen's sensuality, for instance, is easily translated as the dance allows movements that would seem out of place in a play. Ophelia's madness was also easily translated and her drowning was most masterfully mimed.

Mental crises, naturally, were more difficult, and the emotional content of the To Be or Not to Be soliloquy and the king's attempt at prayer slipped out in impression. I had expected the grave-diggers scene to be equally unsuccessful, but no attempt was made to mime the content of the Shakespearean scene and the same spirit of grotesque fun was reproduced by humour of action.

After intermission there were two shorter ballets. Orpheus, a tragic ballet based on the classical legend, and Souvenires, a comic ballet, were loosely connected.

Charge Freshies Intimidated Forced To Walk Thru Guts

Charges that first year P and OT girls were forced to walk through a six-foot pit of cow's intestines as part of their initiation by St. George street men's fraternities were confirmed late last night by several of the freshies involved.

Although several freshies confirmed the story, they were either unable or unwilling to disclose the name of the fraternity responsible. The charges of excess brutality against the frats were first made in a letter to The Varsity, which appears on page 4 of this issue.

The POT girls are traditionally initiated by a group of men's fraternities. This year, the girls were initiated in groups of ten, and each group was taken to three different fraternities, where they were made to perform for the members. In one frat, they were doused with cold water, and in another they were made to answer questions while sitting on a block of ice.

"In one fraternity, we were blindfolded and told to take off our shoes. Then we were taken out in the back yard and told to walk through the pit. We were all terrified," said one of the freshies who was forced to walk through the cow's intestines.

But, she added, they were later allowed to wash the blood off their feet.

On the whole, the girls seem to hold no hard feelings. Said freshette Betty Ormiston, "My idea of initiations is that we all enter into it in a spirit of fun."

One of her classmates added "The other fraternities went to a lot of trouble to prepare initiation — it was really terrific. Just the cow's intestines put the dampers on things."

When questioned, several fraternity members denied doing anything out of the ordinary, and insisted that nothing which would harm anyone took place.

One unidentified fraternity member, however, admitted that the fraternities had "gone a little too far." In reference to making the girls walk through the cow's intestines, he said "I wouldn't make my dog do something like that."

Last year, similar charges of excess enthusiasm were made against the fraternities, and were stoutly refuted. The frats stated that they only did the initiating at the request of the P & OT society.

The letter to the Editor also charged that the girls were afraid not to take part in the initiations under threat of social pressure. The letter was signed "disgusted Frat member."

Friday. If the scoreboard hadn't been repainted, it couldn't have been used, he added.

Mr. Loosemore said that so far the incidents had been considered as student pranks. But there is a limit, he added. It is hard to say how far we can go in considering things like this just as student pranks. He said that up to date no action with regard to the Queen's students had been considered.

"It was Queens students of course, who took down the posts," he said. As far as the painting of the stadium is concerned, we can only go by the signs, he added.

It was only last week that Richardson Stadium, in Kingston, was badly defaced by student vandals, who painted signs about poor seating arrangements in the stadium. A couple of years ago, Queens students were in trouble for wrecking train coaches on the Queens-Varsity weekend. Since then, constables have travelled on the special trains, supervising the Queens students en route to Toronto.

In North Carolina

Color Bar Down

Durham, N.C. (Exchange): The color bar has been lifted successfully in one southern university. The Duke Chronicle, interviewing the three Negro students who have been admitted to the U of North Carolina, reports that they are happy about the situation.

They were the first Negroes to be admitted to the university.

All three feel that integration into their new university life has been successful so far. "We didn't get there in time for Orientation Week," one reported, "but the professors were understanding about it. Everything is going smoothly."

When asked about "voluntary integration," the students replied that "to ask someone to do something, isn't voluntary." Such a plan, they felt, would be to make excessive demands on the Negroes where a plan of that type was put into effect.

In their opinion, their own admission would cause an increase in Negro applicants next year. Many more advantages in special fields were now available that were previously not open to Negroes in the South.

CONCERT

Hart House Orchestra May Fold -- Neel

BY MICHAEL PENGELEY

Ontario's notorious Sunday Blue laws have clamped down.

And it may cost the existence of one of Canada's finest orchestral groups — the 18-piece Hart House String Orchestra, formed only a year ago by famed British Conductor, Dr. Boyd Neel.

The orchestra was to have been "kept alive" this winter through a series of five Sunday night concerts in Hart House. But Lord's Day Alliance officials yesterday threatened police action if the concerts are held on Sundays.

Last night, student officials of the Hart House Orchestra Association — the group sponsoring the concerts — said they had cancelled the series.

"We find it impractical to go on," Henry Best of the Associates' executive said. He said money would be refunded to ticket-holders.

The Lord's Day Act of Canada states that no paid entertainment of any kind except certain specified sports may be provided on Sundays — although there is nothing which prevents a collection from being taken up.

"Evidently," said Dr. Neel when informed of the situation, "You can play baseball in Toronto on Sundays but you can't play Beethoven."

Dr. Neel called the situation "Preposterous." "How can we hope to keep music alive in this country in the face of this kind of opposition?" he asked. "The whole lot of them ought to be blown up."

Dr. Neel said future plans for the orchestra were now "very much in doubt."

"That was a last chance sort of thing," he said. "We were counting on those concerts to keep us together during the winter."

Rev. A. S. McGrath, Executive Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance said he was "sorry" his organization felt compelled to force the issue.

"Our position is clearly defined by the law, however," he told two University of Toronto students visiting him yesterday. He read then a section of the Lord's Day Act of Canada.

All arrangements for the five-concert series had been made by the ten-student executive when information was received of the Alliance's decision to prosecute.

The students now find themselves, according to one executive member, with nearly $200 preliminary expenses to be paid and with no membership support.

Conferences Report

NFCUS Informed Students Need Aid

Edmonton (CUP): A seven million dollar scholarship and bursary plan was suggested to the National Federation of Canadian University Students last Monday.

Dr. M. E. Lazerte former Dean of Education at the University of Alberta, said at the opening NFCUS banquet that there was a definite need for such a plan. He said that the federal government would institute the plan to equalize educational opportunity across the nation.

He told the seventy-five delegates and observers that many high school graduates today do not attend university simply because they cannot afford to. Doctor Lazerte, now Research Director for the Canadian School Trustees Association, continued that the scheme should be increased to eleven million five hundred thousand dollars in the next ten years.

The delegates at the conference represent twenty Canadian University students' unions. There are observers from student groups in four countries—United States, Germany, France and Pakistan.

Also attending is Jiri Pelikan of Prague, Czechoslovakia, President of the Communist dominated International Union of Students. On Monday Mr. Pelikan outlined to the first plenary session nine points for furthering international cooperation with special reference to Canada.

THE POINTS WERE:

1. Canadian university hockey teams to tour Europe.
2. Canadian students to participate in organize tours behind the Iron Curtain.
3. Cultural groups from universities in the IUS to tour Canada.
4. Art tours of Canada of works done by members of IUS universities.
5. Canadian participation in an International Student Chess Tournament to be held in Sweden.
6. NFCUS representation at the 1956 IUS Conference in Vienna.
7. NFCUS representation at the 1956 IUS Seminar to be held in Munich.
8. Canadian student participation in such projects as summer camps sponsored by the IUS.
9. Canadian University press representation at forthcoming International Student Press Conferences.

Canada To Lead At WUS Confab

Dynamic leadership is expected from Canada and its delegate, Lewis Perinbam told World University Service delegates in Saskatoon last Friday.

The executive secretary of WUS in Canada addressed the opening session of the tenth national WUS conference.

"The people of this country hold the key to the future of the world, because both Great Britain and the United States are mistrusted by many nations," he said.

"Colonial imperialism on the part of Britain, and economic imperialism on the part of the United States in the past have caused many countries to be suspicious about these two nations. One result of this mistrust is the hope that Canada will be impartial and fair in its dealings with other states," he added.

The WUS delegates from thirty universities and colleges across Canada have met to consider plans for assistance to university groups in Indonesia, Israel, and Japan.

Mr. Perinbam told them that relief projects such as those planned for Israel and Japan for the coming year, have produced a greater unity among human beings than he could have imagined possible. He praised the projects as examples of positive assistance at the basic level of student life.

Guest speakers at the sessions have included members of the faculty at the University of Saskatchewan, and representatives of the students' council.

One concert presented by the Association last spring was not objected to by the Alliance.

Rev. McGrath said that he was informed of the Hart House plan for holding Sunday night concerts by a clipping from an advertisement left on his desk last Friday morning.

"We failed to take action in this case, we would be leaving ourselves open for criticism when an organization much less to our liking wanted to do a similar thing," he said.

Calling the whole thing "the most iniquitous thing that has ever happened in this century," Dr. Neel charged that some other groups were overlooked by the Lord's Day Alliance people. "Why must they pick on us?" Dr. Neel asked indignantly. "We get paid for giving coverage over the CBC on Sundays; why not in Hart House?"

sublimely ridiculous

Sunday blue laws — aided and abetted by that group of sanctified zealots, the Lord's Day Alliance — have halted in its tracks a unique plan of some students to sponsor an orchestral series on the campus this winter.

Their plan would have benefited the students, through an opportunity to hear at very reasonable prices one of the top orchestras of its kind on this continent.

It would have benefited the orchestra, through enabling its leader, Boyd Neel, to keep the group together thru the slack winter season. The orchestra may now have to disband.

It would have benefited Canada, by preserving one of the few really outstanding achievements in Canadian Music—the Hart House String Orchestra.

But it would not have benefited the Lord's Day Alliance, with their plans of narrow-minded, tight-fisted 19th century prudery and bigotry.

So these protectors of the sabbath peace blew their legal whistle, the Lord's Day Act, and halted the plans of the student group.

But the real villains in this are the law-makers, who allow this age-old and outmoded act of legislative puritanism to remain on the books.

A country which will allow ball-games but not Bach, hockey but not Handel on Sunday can only be described as sublimely ridiculous.

bach or bacchanalia?

Though we are not completely in accord with the aims of the Lord's Day Alliance, there are times when it is possible, at least, to appreciate its aims.

At other times, its self-evident virtue seems misplaced.

Such a case now threatens the Hart House String Orchestra.

Formed only last spring, the Orchestra has already achieved national fame at the Stratford concerts.

The Lord's Day Alliance solemnly pronounced, however, that this was not to be.

It was better the Sabbath sanctity be preserved, it cried, than students should have an all-too-rare opportunity of concerts their purses can afford.

Behind the Alliance stands the majesty of the Law. Toronto's "blue laws" permit Sabbath boxing — but forbid a Sunday afternoon recital.

Without extra revenue, the Orchestra may have to disband.

Licking the wounds it suffered in the battle over baseball, the august Alliance now pits its might against Bach. —I. M.

Masterson Revises Pass Attack As Blues Ready For Redmen

"We'll look a lot sharper on Saturday," said Bob Masterson, referring to the Blue pass attack that appeared so weak against the Golden Gaels last week.

The Blues threw sixteen passes and only completed four while opposing Queen's 11-6, and the Varsity coach is aware of the need for a potent aerial offensive to go with the rampaging Varsity ground attack. Most of last night's practise was devoted to this facet of the Blue attack, and Masterson expects to be able to do even more damage to McGill through the air than the Gaels did two weeks ago.

End Don Smith turned an ankle last Saturday and only went through a light workout last night, while tackle Walt Radzick has a bad knee. Halfback Jack Rogers, whose running was one of the big Blue threats against the Gaels, picked up a charley-horse in the game, but seems to be improving after last night's practice. Other than these three the Blues are injury-free, and end Gene Chorostecki, who sat out last week, will be ready to go against McGill.

Meanwhile, the Redmen, winners in two starts, will be looking for a much-needed victory this Saturday afternoon. It is highly unlikely they will be able to withstand the Blue onslaught and achieve this end, despite the quarterbacking of ex-Columbia flash Dick Carr, or the line-play of Hamilton's Buster Brown. Along with Carr, the Redmen will offer the running of Bob Perry, Rick Adrian, and Bob Hutcheson in an effort to secure a win and stay in the swim for the Yates Cup.

Although Saturday's victory can somewhat be attributed to luck, the way the Blues are shaping up it looks like there's be another Intercollegiate football championship this fall. If Masterson comes up with a pass attack against the Tribe, that, coupled with their already proven running offensive, should spell Yates Cup.

Track Championship Today

The unveiling of Varsity's best athletes, track and field variety, will take place this afternoon at 1:30 at Varsity Stadium. The occasion will be the University Track and Field Championships, the results determining the composition of the senior and intermediate Intercollegiate teams. The results of to-day's meet will give some indication of Varsity's strength for the Intercollegiate finals next Wednesday at London. Bolstered by the acquisition of Rich Ferguson, Western looms as an important threat to Varsity's track supremacy.

The remaining veterans of last year's Blue team are expected to get quite a battle from the promising freshmen winners of last week's intramural meet. The sprint will be of special interest as ace speedster, Dick Harding, faces opposition in the persons of Bruce Faulkner and Arnie Deacon.

Freshmen are expected to provide plenty of opposition, also, in the middle distance events, especially the mile and three mile. This promises to be an exciting afternoon with many upsets expected.

Intercol Tennis Opens Today Varsity Host

Med's Robin Arnold swept to the University tennis championship in straight sets yesterday, downing Skule's Barry Smith 6-4, 4-4, 6-2. The win brought Arnold the McEachern Cup and the number one berth on the senior Intercollegiate team.

Smith will take the second spot and the other three will go to Bill Grove, Hal Browne, and Ken Dixon. The intermediate team will be composed of Bruce Sonley, Justin Berkeley, and Barry Fine. The senior tournament gets under way this morning at 9:30 at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club, when teams from the University of Montreal, Laval, McGill and the University of Western Ontario invade Toronto for the first time in four years.

The intermediate tournament will begin in London on Thursday with Western as the host University. Thus far entries have been received from Toronto, Queen's and McMaster, as well as Western.

NFCUS - What's That?

NFCUS stands for the National Federation of Canadian University Students. And what does that stand for? This article attempts to explain the history, purpose and the achievements of NFCUS, together with the reasons for the controversy surrounding its value.

What is it?

NFCUS is the national university student organization of Canada. Almost all countries have national student organizations; the one in Great Britain going by the horrendous title of "The National Union of Students of England, Wales, and Northern Ireland."

Who belongs?

You do. You may not realize it, but you are a regular dues-paying member of NFCUS. When you paid your fees this year to Simcoe Hall, you paid $5.00 to the Students' Administrative Council, and the SAC turned around and gave 50c of your money to NFCUS as your membership fee.

In all, about 22,000 students at 20 Canadian Universities belong to the organization. The decision as to whether or not a university — and hence all its students — should be a member or not is always up to the local students' council.

McGill, Montreal, and Acadia Universities are not members.

Why NFCUS?

Why do we have such an organization? For one thing, it seems to be the fashion for groups of similar people to band together. The Canadian Manufacturers have done it. Canadian Universities have done it. Workers have done it. And students have done it.

The reasons are fairly obvious. A large organization representing 40,000 students is going to be heard — by governments and by the public at large — far more than small local groups would be.

Another object of NFCUS is to promote understanding and better relationships within Canada. This is done by student exchanges (students of one university studying for a year at another) and student conferences.

NFCUS also represents Canada abroad: both as an observer at meetings of the communist dominated International Union of Students (IUS) and as a member of the non-communist international student organization (COSEC).

NFCUS also is supposed to be of direct service to the student through such activities as attempts to lower text prices, and university fees, obtain a "student discount" on purchases at local stores, and organize art and other contests.

What is the organization?

NFCUS has a national headquarters in a couple of dingy rented rooms in Ottawa. It employs a full-time secretary-treasurer (Yves Pilon), and a full-time typist.

NFCUS also has a full-time student President who takes a year out of his studies to work for NFCUS. NFCUS is divided into four regions — the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, and the West — each with its own vice-president.

The real basis for NFCUS, however, lies in the local campus NFCUS committees, composed of a few ardent NFCUS-types. These do most of the work on such NFCUS projects as the art competition, student scholarships, etc.

The organization has a budget of about $22,000 a year. — One-quarter from the U. of T.

The national conference of NFCUS is now in session in Edmonton.

Why the controversy?

NFCUS has been a subject of controversy for years. Many steadfastly affirm that students need a national organization, and that NFCUS is — or can be — worthwhile. They point to past NFCUS successes — a travel bureau for cheap overseas travel, inter-university exchanges, cultural contests, debating contests and increased student aid in Ontario.

They point to the potentialities — foreign exchanges, student discounts, more scholarships. They stress the necessity of a national student group to speak for Canadian students at home and abroad.

NFCUS critics generally dwell at great length on NFCUS inefficiency — and quote amazing tales of how NFCUS actually operates Pictures are lost from the art competition, the travel service collapses in June when it is too late to make other arrangements. Letters are mislaid, projects are bogged-down. And yet, they say 90% of the NFCUS budget goes for administration.

NFCUS, they say, is just a big wind and a big waste of money.

What's your opinion?

Board Discusses Goalpost Damage

An Athletic Board Meeting was held today to discuss the question of the $500 damage done to the Varsity goalposts last Saturday.

Mr. Loosemore, Secretary of the University Athletic Association, stated that no definite conclusion has been come to about a complaint to Queen's, nor has there been any decision as to whether the steel goalposts will eventually be replaced by wooden ones.

French Cine Club Shows Six Movies

The University French Cine-Club begins its fifth successive season today. The first film shown will be Le Diable Boiteux.

This year the Cine Club holds its programs at Eaton Auditorium instead of the Royal Ontario Museum. A larger seating capacity is provided, and a better opportunity to recapture on the screen an authentic French atmosphere.

As these films on this year's program are shown in their original French versions, each member will be provided with program-notes thus helping English-speaking students to learn French. There will be study groups after each performance.

Only club members will be allowed into the films.

Ontario Town

The Modern History Club will be sponsoring a tour of historic Ontario landmarks in the near future, a club spokesman announced. All those interested in this automobile tour should attend a meeting today in Room 105, Flavell House, at 1:10 p.m., he stated.

Star Man Says New Stars Now

Stars are still being created in far-off galaxies, says Professor John Heard.

Guest speaker at the October 6th meeting of the Maths. and Physics Club, Dr. Heard is Director of the David Dunlop Observatory and Head of the Department of Astronomy.

Also discussed was the verification of recent theories of astronomy, in particular the relation between very hot stars and dust clouds in galaxies.

Born at St. Thomas, Ontario, Dr. Heard obtained his B.A. at McMaster University. He did post graduate work at McGill University and received his Ph.D. in Spectroscopy in 1932.

For his work at McGill, Dr. Heard received the 1851 Exhibition Scholarship which enabled him to spend two years at London University and obtain a second Ph.D. degree.

After spending a year at the Yerkes Observatory, Dr. Heard came to the University of Toronto in 1935 to teach Astronomy. In 1945, he became an Assistant Professor and for three years has been director of the Observatory and Head of the Department.

COUNCIL BATTLES BLUE LAWS

Checking The Books

A curious third-year Law School student checks up on the Lord's Day Act in the Statutes of Canada, Volume III, Section 171. Meanwhile, the controversy rages on about the Act's ban on Sunday concerts. VSP By Ed Staworzynski

President Denounces "Intimidation" Points Out "Bigger Fish To Fry"

The Sunday night concerts are off—but students of the University of Toronto want the Blue Laws changed.

The Students' Administrative Council last night formally suggested to Premier Leslie Frost of Ontario that such concerts be made exempt from the province's Sunday Blue Laws. Meanwhile, President Sidney Smith termed the threat of the Lord's Day Alliance to prosecute if the concerts were held "ridiculous" and "preposterous." "I can't understand their attitude," he said.

University officials were forced to admit they could not help the students fight the move in court, because "legal opinion advised not making an issue of the case."

The Lord's Day group said Tuesday they would ask the law to intervene if admission rates were charged for the five-concert series, sponsored by the Hart House Orchestra Associates.

The first concert was to have been held this Sunday night, under the direction of Boyd Neel.

Dr. Neel said last night it would be impossible to continue with the series on a speculative basis as suggested by Rev. A. S. McGrath, executive-secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance. Mr. McGrath had suggested "voluntary offerings" instead of direct charges.

Henry Best, one of 10 U of T students who originally sponsored the idea of Sunday night concerts by the internationally-renowned Hart House orchestra, put it this way: "We're only students and we haven't the financial resources to put the thing on a basis of mere voluntary contributions.

"The members of the orchestra have to earn their living by playing music. We can't expect them to play for nothing. We'd have to guarantee at least $500 and we just haven't that kind of money."

President Smith said he regretted students had to be exposed to the kind of intimidation seen in connection with the matter.

A debt of some $200 spent on advertising will have to be absorbed by the 10-member student executive.

Dr. Neel, disheartened at the situation, said last night: "It's like the Dark Ages coming back . . . here in a free country, we're not allowed to play (Continued on Page 8)

Rape Of Arbor Room Theme Inspires Witty UC Literates

"The Rape of the Arbor Room" provided impetus for poetic efforts of University College's Modern Letters Club Tuesday night as members met to compare handwork on "the living room of the campus."

The club decided to set its members the task of composing heroic sonnets on the Arbor Room, in order to develop their poetic ability under the discipline of a set subject and a set poetic form.

The Arbor Room is a coffee and snack bar located in the basement of Hart House and is open to male and female students alike from 3:00 p.m. to 11:30 p.m.

When it was first opened last year, there was considerable fuss from some males who objected to free female access to the former male stronghold.

Wit and compactness of thought featured the poems. One aspiring writer of modern letters, Marge Vasilieff, UC, wrote:

"Of all the subjects to incite the Muse,
The Arbor Room is least which I would choose . . .
For what is transcendental in a joke?"

And is there beauty in a cloud of smoke?
A hot-dog does not much of me inspire;

And mustard does not heat my soul with fire."

Again, with end-stopped lines, Joe Keogh of St. Michael's opened somewhat cynically:

"The Arbor Room, the Arbor Room,
Has been re-opened twice too soon.

This subterranean of repute classy in secret, a damned Massey chassis,
The Arbor Room, the Arbor Room,

It's bigger than the barber room. Outside exams, no hair ripping;
The managers still manage clipping . . .

The Arbor Room, the Arbor Room,
We dally pray the day come soon:

When Guv'nor Massey and his clan Demands the dents be his tomb."

Professor F. E. Priestly, leading the student group, added these final, wistful lines:

"Now what was once the male retreat and harbour
Is metamorphosed to a treeless Arbor . . .

Here wast thou bayed, brave Hart, here did'st thou fall!
Here breechless Amazons have breech'd thy wall!

Who gave the prompt this male retreat to sully?
What Eve what apple gave to Joe McCully?"

Campus Gallup Finds Friends, Foes For NFCUS

Surprisingly enough, University of Toronto students do know something about the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS).

Though they have many reservations most of them are in favour of the organization, and think it should continue.

In a poll taken at The Varsity this week, 95% of the students had some knowledge of NFCUS, though many of these could not outline its purposes or accomplishments. Only 18% were in favour of disbanding.

"I like the sound of the name—sort of like a dog scratching itself," said one Victorian student.

"All the money in its treasury should be divided among the various universities—then it can fold", said another.

Another student, a graduate at St. Mike's, said that he could not make his mind up about NFCUS because of the excessive bias of all the material he had read pro and con.

Exactly 170 students were polled with representation from the various faculties and colleges of the University taken proportional to their population.

Students were asked:

1) Have you ever heard of NFCUS?

2) Are your opinions generally favourable or unfavourable?

3) Should NFCUS be disbanded?

Students answering the second question generally stated their opinion was based on the ideal conception of NFCUS it was favourable; on the actual condition of NFCUS it was unfavourable, 24% of them had no opinion, 65% had a favourable opinion, and 20% an unfavourable one.

To the third question, students largely dealt with NFCUS as it actually is, 18.2% were in favour of disbanding the organization, 60.3% were against disbanding it, and the other 16.5% had no opinion.

"Less talk and more work" - "Closer knit organization" - "More publicity for activities" - "Do some work instead of disbanding" - "Cut down staff expenses to 15% of the budget and make it a leader in student activities" - "Have a strong enough central authority to see that projects are carried through", were some comments.

Students who felt they had received no positive benefits from NFCUS tended to be resentful.

More cross-country contacts, closer co-operation between local and national office and an energetic house-cleaning campaign, were among the plans suggested for NFCUS.

Robinson Elected Commissioner As Council Vacancies Filled

Three new faces came into view as the second meeting of the Student's Administrative Council swung under way last night.

Mary Latimer, representative from OCE, and Miss Elizabeth

Harper from the School of Graduate Studies, were introduced.

Ed Schofield, the elected representative from St. Mike's, was also present for the first time.

Tom Robinson (Wycliffe) was elected as Publication Commissioner and Ed Schofield filled the other vacancy on the Publications Committee.

Don Forester, University College student, will fill the UC vacancy on SAC until the election on Tuesday, October 15. A Social Work representative is also to be elected.

Give Enough!

Collections for the Community Chest Campaign are now being taken in all faculties and colleges.

The need is great: the time to give is now.

Medsmen Protest Canadian Interning

Delegates from Toronto to the annual conference of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes have gone armed with protests about matters causing much comment in medical circles here.

The two Toronto students, Arnold Arai and Irwin Gollish, went to Montreal to argue for lower fees for membership in the association and also to protest against compulsory interning in Canada.

Present per capita dues for CAMSI are $2 a year. Toronto, as well as other universities, claims that too much is being spent on administration. A reduction of 50c, delegates contend, would not be too much to ask.

On the question of interning, medical students fear there will be a move to compel graduates to do two years in Canadian hospitals. The feeling is that this interferes with individual freedom. (Medical graduates are not licensed to practise until they have completed a specified period of internship.)

The conference, which began on Monday, ends this week. It is being held at the University of Montreal. Apart from these two controversial questions, delegates will discuss general topics, and problems of medical students and internes.

Runneth-Over

Durham, North Carolina: Students who took part in a rowdy party raid at Duke University are threatened with expulsion. During the raid one freshman was badly beaten up, several housemasters were injured, and some property damage was inflicted.

The judicial council of Duke has announced that convicted offenders will receive the maximum penalty (expulsion or suspension). A number of names and license numbers have been turned into the Dean's office in connection with the raid.

Fredericton, New Brunswick: Students will pay for the cost of damage to the Memorial Hall at the University of New Brunswick. Considerable damage was caused in the Hall when the Sophomore Court was held there, at the end of the Freshman Week.

A snakedance formed at the conclusion of the Soph Court swept through the city of Fredericton, obstructing traffic, and leaving a trail of damage behind. The dance broke up in front of the women's residence.

Wolfville, Nova Scotia: Initiation sentences came to an abrupt halt at Acadia University last week when the provost intervened to stop proceedings. Despite repeated warnings from the President of the Student union and the Provost, upper classmen continued to hurl water, vegetables, and eggs from the balcony of Convocation Hall, where the trial was in progress. The only way to prevent serious damage to the Hall was to halt proceedings and disperse the students.

Winnipeg, Manitoba: According to the Manitoban, WUS is an organization not representative of university students alone, and is dominated by communist nations. The delegates to the World University Service national conference just held in Saskatoon may have something to say about that.

SKULE TRACK TEAM DETHRONES VIC

Norm Williams Individual Champ Cops Cody Cup With 21 Points

Led by sprinter Dick Harding, Skule captured the Rowell Memorial Cup, and the Interfaculty track and field title, at yesterday's University Championships.

The Skule tracksters picked up 7 firsts to dethrone last year's champions, Victoria 57-43. UC-PHE placed third with 23 points. Harding helped his team to victory by turning in a triple win, capturing the 100, 220 and 440 yd. sprints.

The meet's outstanding performer, however, was Vic's Norm Williams who copped the Chancellor Cody Trophy for individual point honours. Norm amassed 21 points with two firsts, three seconds and one third. He showed his versatility by winning both hurdles events, placing second in the shot put, broad jump and javelin, and also finishing third in the discus.

Bruce Hughes of UC won the 3 mile with a time of 16:17, finishing ahead of Bill Varey of PHE. An outstanding performance was turned in by Paul Mitchell of Architecture in the field events. Mitchell won the shot put and discus, and placed third in the javelin.

Other good track efforts were turned in by Doug Mason of SPS, Bruce Faulkner of Pharm., and Bob Hamilton of Dents.

The results of yesterday's action greatly influenced the choosing of the Senior and Intermediate teams for the Intercollegiate finals at Western next Wednesday, but other factors are also considered. If yesterday is any indication, Varsity will have a strong senior team to defend its track and field title won last year.

One of the meet's amusing sidelights occurred in the mile relay. UC-PHE, anxious to enter two teams, found itself two men short. Two of the PHE track officials good-naturedly consented to run for the second team, which gained third place.

Vic Girls Lose To PHE 14-0

Yesterday the younger sisters of the top-rated Vic team (of the women's softball league, that is) were humbled 14-0 by PHE. 1. Although they were definitely outclassed throughout the game by the superior skills of the PHE team, their spirit and enthusiasm did not take a tumble with their no-hit score.

The athletic gals took a decisive lead in the first inning with a score of 6-0. After Vic had suffered a strikeout in the second inning, there was no stopping their forward drive. Home runs by Ruth Marshall and Marg Haines gave the spectators a few tense moments as the two slid home with only microseconds to spare.

The star of the game was PHE's answer to Johnny Podres, Marg Haines. The winning team had a head start, even before the first ball was pitched, with her on the mound. Marg's right arm tactics were more than slightly outstanding. With our new discovery and a strong team to back her up, it looks like a new contender for the softball crown!

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

"The game of rugby football in Canadian scholastic circles exists for two reasons only: to build healthy bodies for young men who will be leaders of our country in their respective fields and to provide fun and recreation for these young men and their thousands of fans. Natural rivalry and the spirit of competition produces all the side effects of competitive big-time sport."—George O. Hartwell, Chairman of the Intercollegiate Rugby Rules Commission. Mr. Hartwell also states that our officials, also, are learning to recognize the spirit and rules, "so that the game will be of benefit to scholastic players and will provide increasing spectator enjoyment."

Mr. Hartwell has commented on the function of the game and its officials. But we would like to know when someone will begin to promote football as being "fun and recreation" and "natural rivalry."

In recent Intercollegiate games we have noticed gross inconsistency in the way in which the players are numbered. The University of Toronto is the only team with a uniform numbering system—the centres are numbered in the 20's, the guards in the 30's, the tackles in the 40's, the ends in the 50's, quarterbacks in the 60's, wingbacks in the 70's, halfbacks in the 80's, and fullbacks in the 90's.

We are thinking specifically of Queen's and Western whose numbering system has confused both fans and officials alike. We can sympathize with officials who are responsible for knowing the football backfielders' numbers so as to prevent ineligible men from receiving passes or running with the ball.

Three of Western's halfbacks are numbered in the 20's, one in the 30's, one in the 50's, and so on ad absurdum. Other players are numbered in such a manner. We would like to know what would happen if a centre numbered 20 caught a pass and went for a ten yard gain with the official thinking all the time that number 20 was a halfback. Such a situation is possible and if such did occur we can well imagine the embarrassment of officials as well as the anger of opposing players.

We do not see why other teams do not adopt the same numbering system as the Blues who have themselves adopted the Big Four's numbering system. We have illustrated our point using Western as an example, but Queen's, and, we understand, McGill, have equally perplexing numbering systems.

We cannot help but think they are trying to confuse each other and the Blues. But they are simply confusing the officials. The idea that an incoherent numbering system will confuse coaches is ridiculous. Bob Masterson, Dalt White and their players not only know what opposing players look like, but can probably give complete player histories. We certainly hope the number situation will be remedied before anything serious happens. This is a problem that can be solved by the Athletic Directors of the Colleges involved.

Victoria Has Green Team But Boasts Speedy Entry

The football situation at Victoria College as expressed by John Chisolm, one of the coaches, is summed up in this pertinent phrase, "If speed means anything, we'll give them a run for their money." The reason for that statement is that Vic has come upon green years, green, that is, in the sense that they have lost seven of last year's starting team. This year, Vic is depending upon many green rookies. On their shoulders rests the fate of this year's Mulock Cup hopes.

With the loss of Billy Williams, Vic Kurdyak, J. McCutcheon, J. Benson, and Jim Elliot plus others, the coaches have decided to use the combination "T" and the split "T" this year. Frank Ebenhardt, one of last year's bright lights, is back again this year at the quarterback slot.

To keep up with the speed theme, Norm Williams has returned to haunt opposing teams. Last other teams think that he will be the only team person in the backfield to watch. Chisolm has come up with Jim Smith, rookie upon whom he has great hopes.

Among the list of regulars who will be returning are linemen Jerry Koshan, Terry Byram and Jerry Wylie. These three will be adding to the speed of the line as a whole, as all are fast men.

The team is being coached by Chisolm, he of the cautious predictions, Jimmy Pierson, and John Sopinka, whenever he wanders over from the Scullers—the Argonauts to the uninformed. Chisolm, speaking for all three men, was overly cautious in an interview, but did let the hint drop that Vic would be in there among the contenders come playoff time.

Chisolm reported that the spirit prevailing among his players was a good one, and that indicated that they would give their best for their college. Each player has come out with the will to win, which is a very important aspect in Vic's training program.

With the great attention being paid to speed by Vic, it is easy to see that unless the other teams are in good shape, the Red 201 Gold will run away from them.

Soccer Matches

The Trinity A's began the season on the right foot yesterday, handing Dentistry a 5-0 shellacking on the back campus.

Freshman Witold Weynerowski led the Red and Black machine with two goals, while Clarkson, Trasewick, and Grant each added one.

Lister and Rateliffe each tallied once in the second half as Senior SPS shutout Senior Meds 2-0 in the second game.

Vic vs Skule Seniors In Intramural Opener

Old rivalries will be renewed today when intramural football gets under way. A doubleheader is scheduled for 4:00 on the back campus. Vic and Skule Seniors will battle in one game, Meds and UC in the other.

Vic-Skule rivalry has an exciting history. Last year both teams wound up in a first play tie with five wins and one defeat. Their only loss was sustained at the hands of each other. In the Mulock Cup semi-finals Skule dropped the Vicmen. Skule then entered the finals, beat St. Mike's, 6-2, for their second successive Mulock Cup Victory.

This year Vic and Skule appear weaker. Almost the whole nucleus of last year's Vic team has graduated leaving only five experienced men.

Because of an interfaculty Sports Committee ruling Skule also appears short-handed. Skule Seniors are now chosen from third and fourth years, the Juniors from first and second. As this ruling was not in effect last year, Skule packed their senior team with players from any year, leaving their Junior team unbalanced. This year there will be a balance with no packing allowed.

The UC-Meds game should be interesting. Because of their relative deficiencies in group I last year, both teams have been moved to Group II.

UC seems to have been completely revitalized. Coach Gary Banks has had turnouts of over 30, the largest assemblage of footballers in years. UC have also made their first out, something that was not possible last year due to a poor turnout.

There is no reason why Meds shouldn't show. Their coach, Rich Bethune, has been firing with the split-T which he played under when he attended Williams College in Massachusetts.

1688 and all that "I am sorry they saw fit to cancel them outright". Thus reads the statement of Mr. McGrath of the Lord's Day Alliance on the cancellation of the Hart House Orchestra Associates proposed concert series.

He is sorry, but what other alternative remains when an association finds itself faced with prosecution five days before the first of its scheduled activities.

The lowest expense of such a series would be $2500.00, and so it is obviously beyond the means of students to offer such a series for free or to incur such an expense and hope to come out almost even from a silver collection.

It is also impractical for the students to hold these concerts on week-days, a suggestion which Mr. McGrath kindly made. These week-days are required for completion of course assignments and for student activities that have been scheduled for years as part of student life.

On Sunday, almost the only day that a student has for relaxation, he is to be forbidden to take his rest by attending a concert of his choice and at the same time support an excellent orchestra attached by tradition to the campus.

There is another possibility — that of fighting the issue out to the finish, with a view to establishing a test case for other such activities, or with a view to changing the law, a law which allows other "clubs" to hold even dances of a Sunday.

What can we do about it we ask? Laws are traditionally hard to change. But laws are usually changed because of just such a situation as this one—an obvious injustice which becomes legally just because of a law that does not keep pace with changing conditions, and public opinion.

We have already received a petition from fourth year Mechanical Engineering students. The 11,000 signatures of the student body would indicate the need for a reform of this law.

We invite you to present your views on the subject to the government of Ontario. We invite you to sign a petition for the amendment of the Lord's Day Act.

We wonder what would happen to the night meditators on Philosopher's Walk if that place of evening activity were equipped with very strong lights.

OUR READERS ROAR:

Irrelevant

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Your editorial comments on the attitude of the Lord's Day Alliance toward the proposed Sunday concerts of the Hart House String Orchestra are very much to the point. Many of us will disagree with the stand they have taken on this issue; all of us will abhor their continued inconsistency. The students of this University are entitled to a complete statement of the reasons for their decision.

The Church will never convince the rising generation that religion is relevant to the needs of the individual and of society by negative prohibitions alone.

How irrelevant can you get?

Yours sincerely,

James S. Cunningham,
Chaplain of Hart House.

Vested Coincidence

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We understand the Lord's Day Act has been introduced for the health of our souls and for no other reason. The cynics among us tell us it has been forced through the legislature by the Lord's Day Alliance to protect the vested interest of organized churches in this country. Given less competition the churches shall prosper better. I am not sure this is true.

It is true rather, I think, that the vested interest of churches coincides in the conscience of the clergy with what they consider condition for public morality.

However, there is the question of freedom. We ought to be able to go to hear orchestras, or for that matter movies at any day of the week. People of Jewish religion, as well as those of Mohammedan, are put in an awkward position to respect a law which they could not possibly accept as just. And then what about the people who simply do not care to be saved in the manner thought of as indispensable by members of the Lord's Day Alliance, Inc.

I only hope that this brutal attempt to stifle Canadian culture (and, goodness knows we don't have too much of the stuff in this country) for the narrow, possibly profit-conscious outlook shall wake the people up to see and to force the government to reject this preposterous act.

Bob Brown and Wendy Michener, Editors of The Varsity are to be congratulated for having done a courageous thing in taking exception in their editorial to the stupid, blasphemous, one could say, action of the Lord's Day Alliance Inc.

... Nothing To Offer

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Where will many of the U of T undergraduates spend Sunday evenings this year? As a result of the ruling of a narrow-minded religious group, many of us will be switching on our radios in an attempt to search out some worthwhile music. Perhaps when we have settled for the Firestone Hour, the Hour of Decision or the Hour of Charm, we will be comforted by the thought that no money is being earned in Toronto on Sundays—by the promotion of music at any rate.

It seems a pity that an outstanding English conductor who through his music has everything to offer to the University is prevented from doing so by a minority group who has comparatively nothing to offer. Boyd Neel and the Hart House Orchestra will not be presenting a series of Sunday evening concerts this year as scheduled by the Hart House Orchestra Associates. The efforts of an orchestra to support itself at a time convenient to both musicians and students is condemned by the Lord's Day Alliance group as immoral.

And so, because it is immoral to attend a concert on Sunday evenings, all those who have bought memberships will have to turn them in, and when next Sunday evening comes, turn the radio on. Perhaps some will appreciate the fact that the Lord's Day Alliance, by killing one of the great

A Protected Freedom

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It is good to see that personal freedom in our country is being protected by such a fine group of Christians as those of the Lord's Day Alliance. First of all, they are Christians. They enforce Christ's will in the matter of observing the Sabbath. They know that one is far from God at a concert. On Sundays, they sit in their closets, where God is.

Rev. McGrath observes all Jewish and Catholic holidays. He shuts himself up in his closet on these days. So it is only reasonable that he should expect Jews and Catholics and non-Christians to do the same on Sundays, when his tribe does it. (In fact, he has undoubtedly spent most of his life in a closet.) Rev. McGrath's tribe currently enjoys majority backing in the Province, and he knows that minorities have no rights (that's another Christian idea).

If Christians ever become a minority here, they will look to Rev. McGrath's example to see what treatment they deserve.

Everyone knows that to hold the concerts without charge and to accept donations at the door would never work. Obviously, only non-Christians would go, and these would steal from the collection box. If it were suggested what donation per person would be appreciated, everyone would ignore the suggestion. Let's hope that the Hart House String Orchestra does not proceed on this basis, but bows down to the will of the Democratic Lord's Day Alliance instead.

This is not a threat to freedom; there is no need for vigilance. And let's all vote for the present provincial legislators.

Hangover!

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Our country is a Democracy. How long will the hangover from another century called The Lord's Day Alliance be permitted to function against the will of the majority?

These ancient-minded officials have already earned Toronto its reputation as a graveyard city on Sundays, but let it stop there. Let not this group of fanatical churchmen interfere with the advancement of university culture by directly causing the collapse of one of Varsity's beloved institutions—the Hart House Orchestra.

Denial

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We would like to deny all charges made that the POT freshies did not enjoy being initiated by the fraternities. There was nothing brutal or horrible about walking through "cow's intestines," and there was only a small percentage of the girls that did this anyway. This was entirely voluntary and none felt that they were under social pressure. We are sure that all the girls felt that this was one of the highlights of our freshie year.

After Proposal

Past Proposition

I believe we all have a special place in our hearts for the play that chronicles a marriage from "Young Love" through intra- and extra-mural adventures to the tried love of the "Darling You are Growing Old" type. But then we all have room in our hearts for a collection of pet hates. Even the loathsome lodger with the trombone can sometimes make noises that are amusing and charming.

Happy marriage is not a good subject for drama. The Fourposter is good of its kind, however, and is enjoyably produced at the Crest. Structurally the play cannot be other than a series of isolated sketches, each containing a problem of not very world-shaking importance. Yet it is neatly put together as a whole. The four-poster itself, a different function of which dominates each scene, draws the play together into a kind of unity. And a pattern of unifying echoes is set up, especially in the first and last scenes where the departure from the old bedroom naturally recalls the first wedding night. But the artifice merely links, it does not bind. The play is loose, without being loose.

The Four-poster ranges from sentiment to slapstick, and somewhere very close to the former is a streak of pseudo-sentiment so conventional that it becomes extremely amusing. Sometimes I did not know which side of the line I was on. Nor did the producer. The histrionics of one member of the partnership would grip the audience, whilst the other would perform a contrapuntal accompaniment of deadpan inaction. The variations of contrasting moods are admirably established by Miss Chilcott and Mr. Helpmann, and the effect is one of internal balance similar to that of a chamber music duet, in which the solo and accompaniment is taken alternately. And what better place for chamber music than a bedroom?

The setting, though not itself sophisticated, demands a degree of sophistication from the actors which is on the whole forthcoming. Miss Chilcott is charmingly seductive, and her astonishing smile is a weapon sure of its mark. Mr. Helpmann, caught in the meshes of femininity as symbolized by a lacy pillow, is delightfully awkward. The speed lagged in the first act, but picked up in the second and third, as the actors and the audience adjusted themselves to each other. This makes me hope that as the run progresses the first act also will lose its present unevenness.

The Fourposter is not of a high order of drama, but it is neatly written and well acted, with a touch of satire and a pinch of salt. It purges neither by pity and terror nor by laughter; but if you are seeking entertainment next weekend I can recommend the Crest. The play will amuse and cannot embarrass. And it will provide an excellent comparison for Shakespeare's greatest of bedroom scenes, when the Fourposter is followed by Othello on October 25.

LECTURE

This afternoon, at three o'clock, the Royal Conservatory of Music will present Mr Harold Neden, in the second of its afternoon public lecture series. Mr. Neden, who has many years experience in radio production and script writing with the B.B.C., will lecture on British Light Music. He will trace his subject from the 16th century to the present day and will discuss some of the leading contemporary composers in the field, illustrating his talk with tape recordings.

RECITAL

Mr. Alexander Uninsky, pianist, will give his introductory recital tonight at half past eight, in the Concert Hall of the Conservatory. The program will consist of three Scarlatti sonatas, some variations (K 460) by Mozart, and Prokofiev's Sonata No. 7, (Opus 83), concluding with some mazurkas and etudes by Chopin.

Admission will be by ticket only.

Gigi, the University Alumnae Dramatic Club presentation, tonight having its last performance at Hart House Theatre, is a play designed to take the audience back to those happy halcyon days of turn-of-the-century Paris. To a surprising extent, it does. Brightly acted and imaginatively directed, the play candies over an inherently serious theme in a way that is not at all cloying. It is an entertaining piece of frippery, and as such, a pleasantly relaxing evening.

The production has flaws, mainly owing to the cast's tendency to drag, but these were covered up by director David Gardner's use of the unexpected, which always managed to keep things from becoming stuffy. Brightly-colored posters on two apron easels, for example, were employed to set the place and time, and were changed now and again in front of the curtain by a demure maidservant and stolid manservant.

As Gigi, a budding debutante who comes of a long line of unmarried professional ladies, Molly Golby was buoyant and bubbly—occasionally overpoweringly so. She was at her best as the character approached her own age-group in mental maturity, rebelling against her relatives' attempts to have her follow the family's old traditions. Gigi is a difficult character to portray, a character that starts as a meek little miss and ends by daring to arrange her own marriage, but Miss Golby usually managed to convey even the subtlest of psychological changes.

The rest of the cast served only as foils—rather a pity, as old Aunt Alicia, a retired demi-mondaine resting (metaphorically) on her past amours, should have some very funny scenes when she sails majestically into Gigi's education in the ways of her future world. Unfortunately, her air of prissy gentility did not quite come off, in part because of a delivery that was more codlike than Godlike.

In personality, the others were near-neutral, though this failing was again lessened by some fine visual effects—a woman dressing on stage, from whole bone corset up, can be much more amusing than the same thing in reverse. Cicely Thomson as Gigi's mother made her first grand entrance in this way, and the effect never quite wore off; she remained a gorgeously sloppy, statuesque creature with a chignon and a heart of gold.

Something should also be said for Muriel Cutell, who played the part of a simple and plain woman simply and plainly, and for Eileen Williams and Syd Pattison as the two servants, very different but both fairly amusing. As Gaston Lachalle, the rage of Paris who finds himself teased into proposing to a school-girl, Robert Peace conveyed an impression of vast bewilderment and inarticulate charm, which was about all he had to do.

Production-wise, the play had few flaws, with two unimaginative but definitely functional sets. Alternating them raised the only real problem of the play, as the audience's between-scenes dozes were marred by the sound of scurrying feet and crashing timber.

Bowdler and the Bard

By PETER GRANT

MACD. What three things does drink especially provoke?

PORT. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Lechery, sir, it provokes and unprovokes. It provokes the desire but it takes away the performance.

These immortal lines, as true today as in 1666, when Shakespeare or somebody wrote them, almost failed to survive the Victorian era. Like a good many of the Bard's more informative passages, they were struck from the record by the hero of this dissertation, Dr. Thomas Bowdler.

Thomas Bowdler, M.D. (Edin.), penal reformer, philanthropist and editor, was not, chronologically speaking, a Victorian. He died in 1825. But, in a fairer sense, he may have personified that spirit called "Victorian" as completely as the great queen herself. Who else combined so well that lust for intellectual adventure and that deep reverence for the proprieties, both so essentially British, that blended to form that spirit?

"Shakespeare," said Dr. Bowdler to himself one early nineteenth century afternoon, "is a great writer. All educated British gentlemen should read him. Further, since education should not be too long delayed, British children (who will be adults some day, and have rights) should read him.

"But," he continued, crossing to the opposite side of the floor, "Shakespeare (and it pains me) was coarse, even vulgar at times. It is unthinkable that tender children under pretext of becoming educated, should learn rude language."

No idle dreamer, Thomas Bowdler sat down and rewrote Shakespeare. It was a tough job. At times there were whole scenes fit for the innocent but photographic eyes of children. At others, there was page on page, horribly bristling with bawds, leaping houses, fair hot wenches, whorson caterpillars, and all manner of picture-que Elizabethan slum-dialogue. Bowdler averted his eyes, and deleted. When he got through, Shakespeare was a new man, as proper a Victorian as ever trod neat's leather. He could be read, harmlessly, by "the intelligent and imaginative child."

If Thomas Bowdler had done no more, his name would be assured of immortality. But youth was still in danger. The Bible, conspicuous in every British home, swarmed with words unfit for any civilized mantelpiece. Worse, the Bible was a far more serious threat to youth's morality in these days, when it was frequently opened and read from Bowdler undid the nethermost button of his waistcoat, and set himself to deliver youth from the pitfalls of religion.

Bowdler's revised, clean version of the Old Testament does not seem to have done well. Perhaps it was opposed by less far-seeing men, zealots of the Complete Verbal Inspiration cult. Perhaps later waves of biblical scholars, reading the washroom walls of antiquity, rediscovered all the obliterated words. Today, even the Bibles in Fiesherston library are a bit risqué in spots.

Little is heard today of Bowdler's processed edition of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. The fault can not justly be laid at his own door. Edward Gibbon's monumental work, with all the things to be said in its favour, never achieved great popularity as a kiddie classic. We must take a look at Decline and Fall sometime.

Even the famous Bowdler Shakespeare, as time went on, proved to have lost some indefinable element of the original's charm. Shakespeare-ated youngsters, for whom the good Doctor had worked so hard and lovingly, spurned his works for the unexpurgated quartos hidden away in adult libraries. His labours lie neglected.

But his name and spirit live on. His name shares space with words he would never willingly have associated himself with, in all the better dictionaries and encyclopedias. Students tend to confuse it with that of Baudelaire. His spirit is perpetuated by teachers, clergymen, referees, and occasionally by mayors of large cities. Perhaps its finest commemoration, however, is in the Bowdler Society of Cambridge University. This dedicated group meets to discuss the master's work over light refreshment in clean, well-lighted places, chooses as its Queen the coed adjudged to be the purest in the University and wears, as its proud emblem, a royal blue tie with tieleaf pattern.

CRITIC ON HER TOES

Russe is Rough

The ability to achieve a high arabesque seems to be the only qualification necessary to become a member of the corps in the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. This group, which was once considered the greatest in the world, could profit from the example of our own Canadian National Ballet Company, whose technical imperfections are tempered by their warmth, spirit, and acting ability. The brilliant dancing of the few principals is the only saving grace for an otherwise weak dance group.

Why Swan Lake was chosen for the opening number is beyond me. The dancers could not even begin to portray the abstract feelings of swans. The dancing was sloppy and heavy; I've seen better at ballet-school recitals. The dance of the four little swans, usually a delightful interlude, could have been done with more precision and grace by chorus-girls from a downtown honky-tonk. Gertrude Tiven's performance as Queen of the Swans, although technically perfect, lacked feeling and fluidity.

The Black Swan pas de deux was better. Nina Novak, obviously determined to erase from the minds of the audience such a miserable beginning, attacked her role with a vehemence that ruined her dancing and overshadowed the seductive character she was trying to portray. But Igor Yousekevitch, one of the finest male dancers on the North American continent, dazzled a bored, unhappy audience. From the moment he leaped onto the stage, one knew it was a great dancer performing.

A new ballet, The Mikado, was next on the program. Its apt choreography, and the fine arrangement of Sir Arthur Sullivan's music seemed to be more suited to the capabilities of the group, for they danced with a zest and feeling that awakened the audience. A most unique quality of the group, brought out clearly in this number, is the great superiority of the male dancers, principals and corps, over the ballerinas. Joseph Savino gave an outstanding character portrayal of the romantic Nanki-poo, while Victor Moreno and Alan Howard in the comic roles of Ko-Ko and Katishu were quite enjoyable.

Gaite Parisienne, the finale of the evening, was danced with an abandon and gaiety that still failed to cover up the inadequacy of the corps. The performance, however, was greatly enhanced by the beautiful and poised dancing of Yvonne Chouteau as the flirtatious glove-seller.

By removing from the repertoire all strictly classical dances, the company could pass as a reasonably good amateur group—but what it really needs is three months of extensive training at a disciplinary ballet school.

Float Parade Is Saturday Theme to be U of T - 1984

"The University of Toronto, 1984" is the theme of a routin'-tootin' rip-snortin' float parade Saturday as Varsity celebrates its annual Homecoming Weekend.

Starting at 10:30 A.M. at Devonshire Place, the parade will follow the same route as last year, along Bloor to Yonge, then south to College, and along College to the campus, where the floats will be judged in front of University College.

Colonel Greer of the University Alumni Association will judge and present the shield to the winning float. Also judging will be E. A. Macdonald, permanent secretary-treasurer of the SAC and Dean Bissell, representing President Sidney Smith, who is still recovering.

Ron Winthrob of the Blue and White Society estimated about twenty floats would be entered in the parade.

Last year the School of Law, using the theme of legal progress as their basic idea won first prize with Engineering standing second.

Do We Need Remedial English?

Of Course Not!

By ALLAN JAMES

Five hundred first year students wrote a "Remedial English" exam on Tuesday, and many of them didn't like it.

"Nearly drove me crazy."

"That first question was ridiculous."

"...felt like such an idiot..."

"I've been living under a misapprehension that I'm good in English."

These and many other similar laments were heard after the fresh—mostly from University College—had written the test.

The examination, according to a spokesman of the UC English Department, was to test the students' ability to read critically, and to organize and summarize what had been read into effective sentences and paragraphs.

Professor Harris of the UC English Department said that his department does not feel that the Ontario fifth-form examinations give sufficient indication of a student's ability to read and to write accurately.

The purpose of the test, Professor Harris said, was basically to make the student aware of his deficiencies. "After the results have been posted (in a few weeks time) those students who are interested in self-improvement may discuss their paper with the examiners," said Professor Harris.

And if they really want to bring their English up to par, they can also take a special course in "Remedial English," Professor Harris stated.

However, the remedial course will not be compulsory for the students who missed the exam, the department spokesman added.

In previous years, the failures were compelled to take the corrective course—held at 8:00 a.m.

University College is the only one of the four arts colleges to im-bringing in the "Literacy" exams in the future. Here are their comments:

TRINITY

Professor Barker of the Trinity English Department said that at one time his department had an exam and an essay to determine the freshman's knowledge of composition, but it was found that the essay alone was sufficient indication.

As a result, Trinity freshmen and freshies will have to hand in an essay on October 23rd. Their grades on this essay will determine whether or not they will be compelled to take a special "Course in Essay Writing." Usually, said Dr. Barker, there are more students wanting to take this course than can be accommodated.

ST. MICHAEL'S

Father Madden of the St. Mike's English Department said that their students in first and second year must write 500-word essays every two weeks. He said that the smaller enrollment at St. Michael's permits the staff to discuss each essay individually with the writer.

VICTORIA

Professor Frye of the Vic English Department said that he believed an examination of the UC model would be of value, but his staff is not large enough to be able to give such a test.

COULD YOU PASS IT?

Here is a summary of UC's "Remedial English" examination, given to UC freshmen last Tuesday morning.

- 1: In one unified paragraph, describe the principle features of the room in which you are now sitting.
- 2: Write a brief summary of a long passage by Cardinal Newman on "The Nature of a University."
- 3: Given 19 "Goals of Education," organize them into headings and sub-headings as a logical plan of an essay. Spelling and punctuation were also marked.

pose a "Remedial English" exam on its students, although first year students in other faculties—Physical and Health Education for example — who take English classes at UC also had to take the test.

WUS Elects Smith Passes Resolutions

Saskatoon (CUP)—At the annual assembly of the World University Service last week, President Sidney Smith of the University of Toronto was announced as new president of WUS in Canada.

Governor General Vincent Massey continues to be Honorary President, and Prof. John Morgan, a member of the assembly for the last three years, replaces Dr. A. John Coleman as Chairman of the Administrative Committee.

The assembly, meeting for the first time in the west—at the University of Saskatchewan—decided that Germany will be host for the next summer seminar of WUS.

Swinging into action Saturday morning, the assembly heard reports before breaking into round-table group discussions. Reports were presented on the WUS summer programs in Japan, West Africa, the West Indies, and the International WUS Assembly meetings held in Helsinki, Finland.

Plans for the International Conference to be held in Indonesia were also tabled. At this conference, WUS will continue to follow developments concerned with the admittance of WUS to the Assembly at Geneva.

Until recently the policy of WUS has been that WUS should be included in the Assembly. However, the IUS Program has run into conflict with WUS, particularly in Indonesia. In addition the representatives proposed by IUS were from outside the Iron Curtain and in countries in which WUS already had national committees.

The following resolutions were also passed:

(1) That Canadian support for the international WUS program be renewed and given priority and that $6,000 be divided equally among Japan, Indonesia, Israel, and Pakistan to support student health and housing projects.

(2) That scholarship offers be transmitted to the WUSC National Office as soon as possible each session and not later than Nov. 20; whenever possible the university administration be asked to support the scholarship program by fee-waivers and similar concessions.

(3) That every attempt be made to hold a Canada Seminar in the summer of 1956 and that the Administrative Committee be empowered to investigate the possibility of co-sponsorship of the seminar with NFCUS.

In the words of the Administrative Committee: "In the program of WUS lies a positive answer to the isolationism, provincialism and apathy which cloud many of our campuses today. It is our hope that the involvement of the Canadian universities in this kind of program will help to awaken us to our responsibilities—and opportunities in an anxious world."

Settlement Will Benefit Support Feather Appeal

What is the University settlement?

It could be described as two rather unimpressive buildings, painted in Varsity colors, behind the Art Gallery on Grange Road.

Or it could be described as one of the 68 Red Feather services in the Greater Toronto area.

The settlement is actually the social, cultural and recreational centre of the overcrowded, underprivileged neighborhood it serves. To really know what the settlement is one should go to the corner of Beverley and Grange to watch the never-ending stream of people of all ages going to and from the houses.

There at the settlement house the people of the neighborhood are given help and guidance by more than 150 volunteers.

The settlement is particularly concerned with underprivileged youth and holds special classes in everything from woodworking to English composition.

In order to keep up this good work the settlement needs help from University students. They can give their time to the settlement program by calling the Program Director at EM. 8-4335.

Or they can give to the Red Feather campaign through the tag day. Mr. Davidson hopes the average contribution will reach 50 cents, totalling more than $5,000 for the campus.

The Red Feather campus campaign is now rolling into high gear, said Davidson. A Community Chest tag day will be held this Saturday at the football game and at the float parade, he said.

The Red Feather campaign on campus will culminate in a Red Feather Concert, to be held in Convocation Hall on Thursday, October 20.

OPPORTUNITY

All students interested in Red Feather activities are invited to take part in a tour of Red Feather activities in Toronto, Davidson announced. "Just come to the Children's Aid Society—33 Charles St.—today at 1:30", he said.

Religion Impedes Human Progress

Religion was described here last night as the enemy of human progress rather than its ally by Dr. Robert Gordis, an eminent U.S. University professor whose field is religious knowledge.

Dr. Gordis of Columbia University was quick to add, "this is only part of the truth . . . some achievements of religion have been notable; as, for example, the preserving of Classical literature."

Speaking to a meeting of the campus Hillel Society in the Museum Theatre, Dr. Gordis spoke of the detrimental effects of "The Black Book of Religion."

He said religion had been an ally of war, persecution and intolerance. He said that it had often impeded scientific advancement.

good music that supplies spiritual refreshment for students".

Ontario's law prohibits all forms of Sunday entertainment where admissions are charged, except where they take place in churches—or where they are certain specified sports as defined in the Lord's Day Ontario Act, 1960.

The SAC motion read in full: In view of the Lord's Day Alliance's threat to ask for prosecution of the Hart House Orchestra Association if Sunday evening concerts are held, the SAC suggests to the Premier that such concerts be exempt from the provisions of the act."

The Hart House orchestra was formed by Dr. Neel about a year ago as a Canadian prototype of his world-famous Boyd Neel orchestra in Great Britain, which he conducted before coming here as Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music.

This summer the orchestra highlighted the first annual Festival of Music run in conjunction with the Shakespeare festival at Stratford, Ont.

The five Hart House concerts had been proposed by the students as a means of keeping the group together this winter, and also as Henry Best put it "of Members of the U of T Engineering Society decided yesterday that freshmen this year had been "well initiated."

The motion "Resolved that freshmen engineers were well initiated this year" was upheld, after spirited discussion, by a 24-12 majority.

The subject was of considerable interest because this year the first-year skulemen were given the task of helping to clear up one of the city parks, instead of the more traditional forms of polite torture.

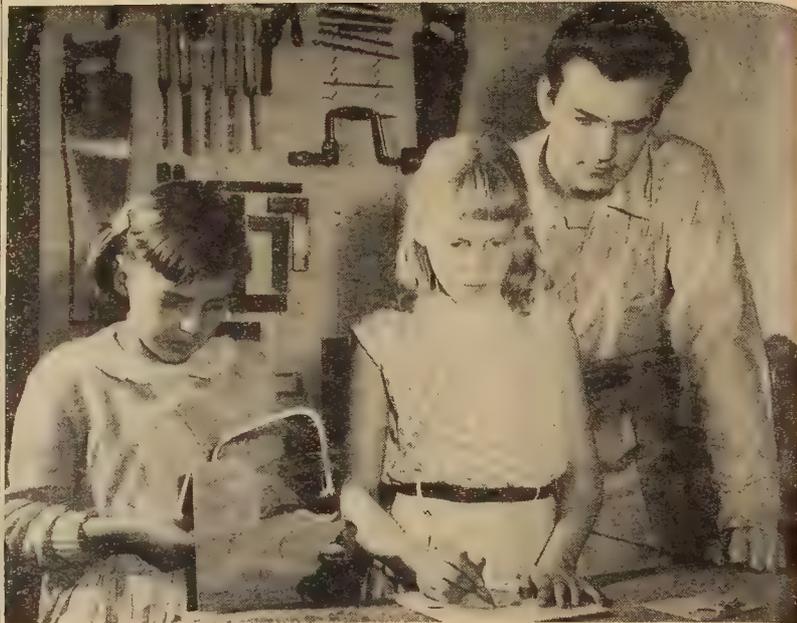

The opening speaker, John Rumble, chairman of the initiation committee, gave a resume of the proceedings at Bickford Park. He pointed out that this year there had been no riots and that nothing but praise had been bringing the best music available to the campus at rates to fit every student's pocket book."

But the concerts are off.

Dr. Edward Johnson, one-time manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company and now head of the Royal Conservatory Opera School, summed up the situation:

"It's a perfect shame," he said. "I certainly hope something can be done to avoid this."

First "Constructive Initiation" Mayor Thanks SPS At Fete

Engineering freshmen cheered and the famous Skule cannon boomed in Bickford Park last Friday as official speeches were made to commemorate the completion of the first "constructive initiation" undertaken by the School of Practical Science.

Speaking at the ceremonies, Mayor Nathan Phillips thanked the students on behalf of the city.

Electrical engineers won the prize offered the group who were judged best in the week-long clean-up of the city park.

"Although all the engineers worked hard, the electrical crew under the guidance of club chairman, Joe Grasso, literally scraped out first place", commented Paul Walters, president of the Engineering Society.

The society president added that electrical engineers would receive tickets for the "Engineers Informal" in December. He said he was "entirely satisfied" with the year's initiations.

"John Rumble, chairman of the initiations committee, did a wonderful job", Walters concluded.

SPS Initiation Debate Defeats Polite Torture

heaped upon the engineering students.

He said that, since the freshmen had worked together, they had indeed developed school spirit, as well as finding friends among their classmates.

Chairman Rumble asked members to compare the final $4,250 cost of last year's fracas with the mere $150 which the 1955 edition cost. He also quoted Mayor Nathan Phillips as saying "the amount of work the engineers did would have cost the city $6,000."

Winston Hay, I Mechanical, thought the initiation had failed in its object, for the dictionary definition of initiation was "a rite, or an ordeal."

He asked listeners to recall what they had heard about Masonic initiations. He said these never brought discredit on the societies.

Engineers, said Gary Hewson, SPS president, were gentlemen. He added that President Sydney Smith and Dean R. R. McLaughlin were very pleased with this year's festivities.

Leo Gray, IV Engineering Business, claimed the purpose of the initiation was to introduce newcomers to engineering traditions. He advocated a formal rite, and did not think the correct approach had yet been found.

Sportspeaking On Friday

Jim Proudfoot, sportswriter for the Toronto Daily Star and former Varsity staffer, will deliver the second of the five-lecture series on journalism.

He will talk on features and editorial writing in the sports field, following up the speech of John Dauphinee, General Sports Editor of Canadian Press, last week. Mr. Dauphinee spoke to an estimated 100 persons on general news writing in the first of the Varsity-sponsored lectures.

Mr. Proudfoot, past winner of The Varsity's Anita Friedman award for excellence in writing, worked for this newspaper for four years, including two on the masthead. After graduation he was hired by the Star and has since worked in their sports department.

The lecture is to be held at 1 p.m. in Room 13 of University College this Friday. All students are welcome.

Parade Sparks Gala Homecoming

By CELIA SCHACTER

They may thus stand united, side by side, McGill and Varsity—with each it's pride, Let games like this one we have seen today,
A double glory to the world display, Where emulation struggles void of spite, And men who play the game shall guard the right,
If it were possible a toast to fill, I'd give, you Friends, Toronto and McGill.
—Stephen Leacock

A rip-roaring time is on tap as Toronto University's 7th annual "Homecoming Weekend" looms in sight tonight. A monster street dance, with up to 5,000 students likely to take part, will lead off the three-day weekend here.

McGill University students will be the guests as the Redmen face Toronto in Varsity Stadium Saturday.

"It's the biggest thing the Blue and White Society has ever done," exclaimed Bruce Campbell, the organization's publicity agent. "There'll be things doing every minute."

Toronto's first "Homecoming Weekend" was held way back in 1927 when the university was celebrating its 100th birthday.

After a 21 year lapse, the idea was resurrected in 1948 and has been popular here ever since.

A gay carnival atmosphere will pervade tonight's big street dance in gaily-lit Devonshire place—the street directly west of Varsity Stadium. It will begin at 8:30 p.m. Clowns, mascots, effigies, cheerleaders and U. of T. bands will add to the display. In the words of Bruce Campbell, "It should be a terrific do."

On Saturday morning, the float parade will be held. "The quality of the floats will be high" said Campbell. The colossal display will start at Devonshire Place at 10:30 A.M. and then proceed along Bloor Street to Yonge, down Yonge to College, and then to the front campus to be judged.

The big feature of the earliest Homecoming Weekends was a huge Grandstand Show at Varsity Stadium somewhat along the line of the C.N.E. Grandstand Show. It was held on Friday night and featured campus talent. In 1953, it was decided that such a show presented too many difficulties. It was discarded in favour of the street dance and pep rally.

The high point of the game will be at half-time. Joining in the frolic will be clowns, mascots, horses, drunks, and a mysterious personage whose identity will be revealed at the game. This personage was reported lurking in the bushes near Whitney Hall. "A magnificent display of flesh" is the description of the inter-faculty cheerleaders by Bruce Campbell. They have worked out a spectacular routine with the Blue and White band.

A tea dance at the Drill Hall will follow.

Five bands will be present at the football dance at Hart House Saturday night.

Hold That Baby!

Varsity Red Feather Campaign To Help Children's Aid Work

Several weeks ago a mother of four, stricken with a condition requiring a major operation, was removed to a hospital leaving four children unattended.

Elsewhere a drunken father who had tied his young son to a chair and was beating him mercilessly with a rubber tube was reported to the police.

In both cases special Red Feather Agencies moved in quickly to provide care for the children until the conditions under which they were suffering had improved.

Five years ago such cases might have been attended to by neighbours or good friends, but in the complex social system in which we live today, all members of society must band together to become the "good neighbours" of these children whether they are known to us or not.

This year University of Toronto students have a $5,000 objective which must be reached by Oct. 20. With this money workers of the Children's Aid and Infants' Homes can be helped—people who have banded together voluntarily to act as "good neighbours" for children who need protection—children who through no fault of their own have been born into terrible conditions.

The aim of Red Feather is to build up family life in order to enable children to remain in their own homes. If this is not possible, they provide as an alternative a wholesome family life experience and skilled help in minimizing the effects of the burden carried by children who cannot live with their own families. In these ways the child is permitted to grow up in normal healthy surroundings—away from orphanages and institutions which emphasize the fact that they are waifs and different from other children.

Yesterday a group of five Varsity students visited the Agency's modern new building on Charles

St. and, guided by the agency's Dr. Long, saw some of the facets of the Home's services; with psychologists they looked through a "one-way" window, as an infant played significantly with a small rubber ball; spoke to unmarried mothers whom the society also aids; and saw the many facilities of the Home which aid in the task of the agency.

Hold That Throttle . . .

Benny Wants his Bottle

It is being the big weekend when all the graduated luses are returning to the Campus and each carries with him the symbol of success—a choking-full twenty-sixer and a batch of old Benny's betting slips. Because of this business is very heavy all week and I do not have much time to dribble at all my trusting little fish who know that Benny is the best book with which to go bankrupt. This makes me very sad but I am salving my hurts with counting all the lovely long green which oozes into my pouches.

As this is one big game and the McGills are thinking themselves to be dark horses, while the Varsitys think them to be only cooked geeses, I am explaining to my fish what it is that makes me arrive at my calls.

All week I am sifting through reports—I am a very siffy fellow indeed and my agents are informing me that the McGill horse is indeed in the dark, being as it does not see the light of day by the time my own sweet Blues finish them. It is very sad as the McGills strain all day using their "Buck and Wing" formation, which is being all a song and dance to me, but it gets them a big pot of private enterprise in Moscow which is being only borscht. The meanwhile my Blues who are thriving on Bob Masterson's secret system which is being to feed his suave Blues largish size chunks of raw meat at the training table, are rather bullish as they handle the McGills with much thoughtlessness. This is done when Bob Masterson waves his new red kimono under the Blue noses and they roar in fury as they are charging out on the field where they see the Red shirts from McGill which are immediately being sent to the inactive list—it is all a very gory business.

The final outcome is ridiculous as it looks as though the McGills do not even show up for the game, since the Blues are taking 4 touchies with converts while the McGills are throwing in so many towels that they all pile up in front of the scoreboard and hide the proud name of old McGill which is being just as well since all the McGills are hiding under the pile too.

Western drops another one and the Gaels who are a very fine club take 3 scores while the Horsies get only 2.

McGill Frats Restricted Women's Visits Limited Stress Good Behaviour

Montreal (CUP): Discipline over fraternities will be exercised by McGill University authorities under the provisions of a new code regulating student conduct. According to this code, which is not yet official, women will rarely be allowed into the frats.

Women can be invited to fraternity parties only four times a session, under the provisions of the code. Open parties are not permitted during the academic session or during the Christmas holidays, except by special permission.

The code of behaviour was drawn up by members of the fraternities at the request of McGill University. It has been passed by the university senate, and must now be accepted by the individual houses, before it can become official.

As fraternities at McGill are still in the position of private clubs, they have the legal right to reject the proposed code. However, if the code is accepted, fraternities will be officially recognized as McGill organizations. From then on, they will be under McGill jurisdiction, and can be disciplined by the university authorities.

An editorial in the McGill Daily states that the university's action was "not unexpected." Nor does the editorial seem to expect that the fraternities will turn down the proposed code.

Just why the frats of McGill should voluntarily place themselves under the jurisdiction of an outside authority is not at all clear. If the code is accepted, it would seem that the fraternities are permitting arbitrary restrictions on their self government and freedom.

"The circumstances that led to the enactment of this Code were such that the Code is, of necessity, largely prohibitive or restrictive in its nature."

With these words the Senate of McGill University concludes the provisions of the "good conduct" code. Throughout the code, the emphasis is on "the good behaviour" of individual fraternity houses.

The editorial in the McGill Daily points out that McGill is a private institution, and that ultimately the authority of the Senate and the Board of Governors over all phases of University life is supreme. They hold certain prejudices concerning the activity of their student body and through decisions in the past, have made these clear, it states.

Key To P. 4 What's 1984

1984 is the theme of this Saturday's Homecoming Parade, 1984 is also the date on the inside four pages of this issue—a special issue of The Verity, the university paper of 29 years in the future.

The original 1984 was a book written by George Orwell, an English author. Orwell was concerned with the current trend towards collectivism and socialism, which, in his opinion, was leading to disaster and totalitarianism.

Thus he wrote 1984, a book about the England of the future, Orwell's England of 1984 is peculiarly horrifying. It is the world of "BIG BROTHER"—the glorified dictator of "Oceania," which comprises England and the Americas. Oceania is constantly at war with Eastasia or Eurasia, the only two remaining countries.

Oceania is a land of spies, of two-way television screens where the Thought Police have every person constantly under surveillance; it is a land of the "Anti-Sex League," and of "Newspeak"—the new language of 1984. It is a country of crushing absolute conformity.

And on the inside four pages of this paper, you have a glimpse into this world at U of T.

If you're looking for the lost joys of the ivory tower, we hope you find them, even if you are looking for them inside a mickey of whiskey and in the yells of a football team.

If you're looking for the old friends of the ivory tower, we hope you find them, even with the disguise of years.

If you're looking for the old ideals of the Ivory Tower we hope you can find them, even through the haze of a week-end's celebration.

But if you're looking to find that the old Alma Mater just ain't what she used to be, we hope you won't find what you're expecting.

Cheers!

The Editor, The Varsity:
 Three cheers and another one! At long last we are in complete agreement—phooey on the laws that killed the concerts! I hope your mighty journal soon carries an appeal for 11,000 screams of protest, in unison. And let us schedule the event for a Sunday!

Womanhood?

The Editor, The Varsity:
 All hail to Progress! Another glorious victory in the battle for woman's rights has been won! Not only have the women of this University long since attained the privilege of being insulted in your respectable and intellectual newspaper, but now also, as appears from Tuesday's issue, certain among them have achieved the right to be maltreated in an unspeakably disgusting manner by certain gentlemen of the University, who have cast off that remnant of antiquated superstition known as Respect for Womanhood. These glorious tidings lead us to hope that women in this country may soon attain their full liberty and be allowed to work in steel mills and salt mines, as they are under the enlightened government of Soviet Russia.

I do suggest, firstly, that it is incumbent upon these gentlemen to deliver to this newspaper a signed apology for what they have done, and secondly, that if such brutal and degrading practices must continue, they be at least confined by the men who carry them out to members of their own sex.

Charles Pegis, Fellow in Mathematics.

Manger Digger

The Editor, The Varsity:
 It's a pity, isn't it, that so much interest and enthusiasm couldn't be aroused on behalf of the famous concert series when it was alive, rather than now when it is dead.

However, maybe all the fuss can be put to some use; if enough of us can band together, perhaps we can succeed in closing down all the churches during week-days. That should fix their wagon.

BIG BROTHER NEWSPEAKS

BIG BROTHER, acting with the sublime condescension of which he alone is capable, spared half an hour from the onerous duties of government yesterday, to address the Freshman class. Here follows the text of his speech.

"You are a select group. You have been picked from the Labour Pool Training schools all over this great sub-commune of Ontario, picked for your obedience, your devotion to myself and to the principles of NADCOM, for, above all else, your Faith. I have the confidential report on each one of you, presented to me by our magnificent Thinkpol (Thought Police), and I know that not one of you, in all your basic training, has ever questioned anything.

"If you had, of course, you wouldn't be here.

"Now that you're here, remember that every privilege is also a responsibility. You all long to acquire truth, and our staff members are quite capable of giving it to you. If they didn't know more than you do, they wouldn't be teaching you. So keep your mouth shut and take good notes. If the things they tell you seem hard to believe, remember you have been chosen for your ability to believe even the impossible.

"Be proud! Credulity has always been the goodest good of which man is capable.

"You have come here to learn how to think. Appropriate thoughts will be given you each day by your professors, and you must practise thinking them, until you can think them without even thinking. Students in the past wasted a great deal of time, thinking thoughts that were not plusgood. Therefore, always read, your Verity; it contains only plusgood thoughts, as well as only plusgood news. I read it every morning myself, just to make sure."

Big Brother's speech was unanimously cheered by all the Freshmen, except one very small one who had gone to sleep, and was removed quietly by Thinkpol.

BIG BROTHER spoke in newspeak, of course, and this report of his speech is only a poor attempt to reproduce in Oldspeak, or English, his brilliant remarks. You cannot bellyfeel the words of BIG BROTHER unless you both newspeak and newthink double-plus good all the time. Indeed, as BIG BROTHER himself said, "Oldthinkers unbellyfeel NADCOM."

News Of The World

Thinkpol Burns Crimethink Books

Flesherton: (NADCOM Press)—A book burning was held here last night. The event, a rare occurrence in these book-free days, was well attended by both young and old.

The fun began on Wednesday evening, when a local Thinkpol (Thought Police) Constable discovered a so-called "library", containing illegal archaisms—"books."

Books were somewhat like newspaper, the constable explained, except that they were not gathered up by the ministry of garbage every night, and contained ideas.

"Ideas are harmful, especially to the young and impressionable," the Constable said. "By destroying all books," he said, "we are advancing the day when Crimethink will be impossible, because there will be no way of obtaining ungood thoughts."

Marshmallows and the librarian were roasted. A plusgood time was had by all.

Revolt Ungood Lie

Kingston (NADCOM Press)—There is no truth whatever in any rumours you may have heard of a student revolt at Kingston.

Hamish Campbell McFerguson, Commissar of Queen's indoctrination centre, today called the rumours "Doubleplus ungood Eurasian lies, spread by rotten spies, saboteurs and crimethinkers."

"Queen's students," he went, "are perfectly contented. Their loyalty to NADCOM is unquestionable. When told that they would have to give up their seats at the Kingston Arena to high Party Officials, they made the sacrifice in truly heroic fashion, without a word of complaint. There was no protest, no demonstration, no painting of seats."

"Besides," said Commissar McFerguson, "the students responsible have been vaporized."

The Verity

The Verity is published by the Ministry of Truth at the Toronto University of Party Indoctrination, solely in the interests of BIG BROTHER.

PLUSGOOD EDITOR: B.B.

All matter published in The Verity is the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; and not merely that, it is the highest form of Objective Truth obtainable—the Opinions of BIG BROTHER.

"Suffer yourselves to be blamed, imprisoned, condemned; suffer yourselves to be hanged; but publish BIG BROTHER'S Opinions: it is not a right, it is a duty."

doubleplusgood truth

What BIG BROTHER says is true. We listened to his speech to the freshmen with stars in our eyes, and a great, glowing pride in our heart. We have heard that speech five times now, and each time it does more to increase our love for BIG BROTHER, and our loyalty to NADCOM.

Perhaps, for the benefit of freshmen (microbes, as they are more commonly called), we should reiterate some of the basic and essential history of NADCOM—The North American Defence Community, now so invincible, began as a humble unappreciated, unpronounceable organization called NFCUS.

But, humble though it was, NFCUS had high goals and fierce ambitions. It infiltrated the Universities of what was then Canada, planting picked members in positions of importance. It exacted fees from every Canadian student. By subtly increasing the fees, year by year, NFCUS eventually acquired the entire fees of every student in Canada.

All, however, was not peaceful. IUS, an evil foreign organization, now controlled the entire student fees of Eurasia, then a number of small countries. War was inevitable. NFCUS declared war on IUS, at the same time seizing the wartime emergency powers which it has retained ever since, and changed its name to NADCOM, a far more euphonious title.

BIG BROTHER was chosen by NADCOM as the man who best embodies its principles. The party executive elected him its chairman. His first official action was to vaporize the rest of the party executive.

"True Liberty," He said, in one of his deathless statements, "does not mean rule by the many. It means rule by the best."

students, arise

BIG BROTHER remarked the other day that our fraternal organizations are not doing enough to control and standardize their members. And he is right.

There have been two incidents in the past month when fraternes were convicted of crime-think.

Nobody but an Inner Circle Party member is allowed to become a fraternes, and it is therefore utterly ridiculous that our thought police should be required to take valuable time away from the supervision of the proles.

One of the fraternes was found to be wearing a non-regulation jacket which he bought on the black market in competition because it was cheaper. Another refused to drink his day's quota of Victory gin and made a most disgustingly sober display of himself at the hate rally.

These students are both double plus ungood.

We call for a spontaneous student rising to vaporize these iniquitous fraternes: Time will be eleven-fifteen to-day.

Telescreens Terrific

By FRANKLY TRUTHFUL

In his opening address BIG BROTHER complimented present University students on their lack of individuality. "Too often in the past," he said, "students have deviated into individualism. The more conformism, the doubleplusgooder."

And yet last week a University College student was vaporized for sabotaging the telescreen in the Whitewashed Hall Pubescence Pit. Mrs. Porter was vacuum-tubed in a state of nervous prostration to Euthanasia. All after-lunch leaves have been cancelled.

This is not the first plusgood act committed against the Telescreen Order by University students. Last year at Unity College a firehose fight defaced and permanently damaged the telescreen in the Margarine Room. Dual reception was cut off for nineteen and a half minutes before the Commissar of Thinkpol arrived to catch and appropriately punish the transgressors. They are no more.

Obviously there has been some misunderstanding about the doubleplusbenefits provided by telescreens.

Every washroom, bedroom, common-room and dining hall in all University residences has a telescreen. BIG BROTHER takes time out at 7.30 every Wednesday night to dictate a special campus program. At any time of the day or night no matter where he is or what he is doing a student may enjoy Big Sister and constant indoctrination.

And, too, at any time of the day or night no matter where he is or what he is doing a student is under the loving observation of the Thought Police. No other shepherd takes such care in preserving the student mind from individualism as our Thinkpol.

Students may enjoy their daily two minute Hate Period in the companionship of like thinking fellows. They even have the opportunity of choosing a special freshman or the most hated University professor on whom to direct their thinking.

The latest slogans are immediately available for all students. Only an incardinated individualist can avoid hearing and remembering for his weekly exam the most recent of them.

BIG BROTHER says, "War is peace. Freedom is slavery. Ignorance is strength." Don't you fall into the pit of individuality. Remember, as the free go, so go the vaporized.

Glorious Vaporization

The Verity,

Dear Eddie:

I am full of thanks to BIG BROTHER and all his little big brothers who are watching over me and keeping me from any sins whether they be original type or just old-fashioned plagiarism kind. When I think of way I am acting in bad old days before establishing of Sot-Control I have tremens and I am sick with myself. This is because I can find nobody to be sick with since all girls are now members of inspiring new Anti-Sex Leeg which is keeping them all pure and all us boys very dour. But do not think I criticize the Leeg as I think it is being one great thing, especially designed for ingrates.

Progressive measure which most impresses me is new classification of peasants, I have long believe that human material makes best fertilizer and at last lower classes are making valuable contribution to social betterment and besides it is fine way to cut vaporizing costs, as personally I do not believe peasants are worthy of new refined method for clearing overcrowded areas.

When I talk of Vaporizing I get warm glow all over. This happens ever since a kindly old Commissar nabs me outside Insurance Company Office building in Downtown Toronto as I am making plays for luscious girls coming out and, as he is not realizing that I am only testing the girls' loyalty to new Anti-Sex principle, he makes mistake and gives me Buck Rogers treatment.

But do not think that I mind being vaporized. It is pleasant feeling floating around like on dust cloud. It is only when I am sometimes getting in mine own nose that I have sneezing fits. But I bear this slight discomfort for glory of BB and I am happy to be of surface.

yours sand-cerely

Irreverence!

The Plusgood Editor,

Cheesed Off

The Chief Worker,

The Verity:

I am sick and tired of reading the Verity, nauseated with your sheeplike adulation of Big Brother, and completely cheesed off with that worthy's own unending speeches. I do not like life in the North American Defense Community, and consider the sacred principles of NADCOM entirely for the birds. War is not Peace! Truth is not Falsehood! Freedom is not Slavery!

O. Spittoony, IX Sophistry

P.S. Don't bother sending the thought police. I just took strychnine. Suggest you do likewise. Mud-in your eye!

Ed. Note: Reader Spittoony is obviously insane.

Huzzah!

The Chief Worker,

The Verity:

I want to tell you how much I enjoy reading the Verity. Until I read my morning Verity, I do not know what to believe. I agree with every one of your editorials, and your reporting is so true, so good, so beautiful, that it fills my soul with hatred for the enemies of NADCOM, the highest passion of which man is capable. I have kept all my Verities for the past six months, and read them over again. Long Live Big Brother! Huzzah for the Verity!

The Red Feather Campaign Calls Now

SAC Fanatics Search Verity Files Captured By University Thinkpol

Late last night, traitors broke into The Verity Office, but were apprehended almost immediately by the Thought Police. A Verity reporter was graciously allowed to interview the miserable wretches at the inquisition department.

After brief preliminary questioning with polyethylene truncheons, the culprits admitted to being members of the so-called SAC, a fanatical underground group. This organization, of which only a few members remain, advocates overthrow of Responsible leadership by BIG BROTHER and a return to the prehistoric chaos of student government.

John Garbage, ringleader of the group, confessed that they had sought to rifle The Verity's files, in the hope of finding several ancient speeches by Big Brother, purportedly in praise of individual liberty and freedom of thought. Naturally, no such speeches have ever existed.

The SAC members have been sent to the Double plus good Institute (formerly the Best Institute) for study and vaporization.

Big Brother Day Alliance Squelches Ungood Music

It was reported last night that a subversive group of students planning to desecrate BIG BROTHER's day with crimethink actions had been vaporized by the BIG BROTHER Day Alliance.

The group had planned to meet subversively and listen to music instead of participating in the regular Hate activities planned for BIG BROTHER day.

"We could not allow this ungood activity to continue," said MacGrasp, BIG BROTHER's Day

Commissar. "Listening to music at any time is an ungood activity, inclined to reduce people's hate, but on Big Brother's Day which is exclusively devoted to Hate activities it is a double-plus-ungood activity."

The seven students were taken to room 101, Ministry of Love, to be brought into submission, but since it was found that there was only one thing they could not stand modern music—and since all music is an ungood activity no discipline could be applied. The students were forthwith vaporized.

It was discovered after their vaporization that they had also resurrected several prehistoric musical instruments and that they had a secret supply of recorded performances of a most subversive "Hart House Orchestra" existing in pre-BIG BROTHER times.

Their plan was unspeakably ungood," said BIG BROTHER, who had privately "lent" the instruments to the students. "We must protect our Hate Day."

Dentist Gets Dented

Joe Sloegin, subcommissar of the Ministry of Dents, is caught by the camera in a playful moment during the recent freshman initiations. In his third year, the young initiate will learn how to make himself some new teeth.

Poisoned Proles Popping Off Dresden Ash Turns To Dust

Dresden: (NADCOM Press). A local restaurant owner has been vaporized for serving food to Proles charged with violation of the Unequal Rights Act. Proprietor George Escoffier denied having admitted Proles to his restaurant. Evidence was produced, however, to show that several Proles, found dead in the streets, had been poisoned by food served at Escoffier's Restaurant.

"We cannot allow Proles to be treated like Inner Circle Party members," commented Labor Commissar Dali; "At all costs we must preserve the arbitrary social distinctions, without which BIG BROTHERSHIP is impossible.

REDMEN OUT TO SCALP OUR BLUES

McGill Is League's Dark Horse May Give Varsity A Hard Time

McGill's apparently impotent Redmen, fresh from a 6-6 tie with the Western Mustangs, will invade Varsity Stadium tomorrow afternoon as the feature attraction of the Homecoming football weekend. But to hear Bob Masterston size up tomorrow's contest things might not be as rosy as the past two weeks would indicate. "We're expecting a lot of trouble from those guys" said Masterston last night, while surveying his new pass attack, devised especially to give the Blues more scoring punch. The Varsity coach is not just talking either, when he gives the tribe a fighting chance against the unbeaten Blues.

Featuring ex-Columbia flash Dick Carr at quarterback, and a bevy of hard-running halfbacks like Rick Adrian, Bob Hutcheson, Bob Perry, and Bob Holland, the Redmen are in a position to make their best bid in years for the Yates Cup.

Along the line the Tribe boast a host of veteran footballers drawn from all over the North American continent, among them ex-Tigercat guard Buster Brown, and the net result should be an afternoon of rough football with McGill being stronger than ever before.

The Blues may be without end Don Smith for this one, as well as halfback Al Riva. Smith's sprained ankle is not responding to treatment while Riva is a doubtful starter. Other than that, the Blues will be at full strength Saturday to face the Redmen.

Meanwhile, down in Kingston, the Golden Gaels attempt to get back in the swim against the Mustangs. With only one more game before the return of Al Kocman, the Gaels are still very much in the running.

The Sportswoman

By MERLE OVERHOLT

Now that the cross-lake jaunters are temporarily out of commission until the spring thaw, the Varsity mermaids are coming to the forefront. Although none of the girls will ever make the 32 miles of Lake Ontario, the challenge of covering the 50 or 100 yard sprint in record time is just as exciting.

The gal who is responsible for training this year's team is by no means a stranger to Varsity for Marg Harrington is a 1950 graduate in P.H.E. After graduation, the bonny shores of Nova Scotia beckoned and Marg went to Acadia where she became recognized for swim coaching. Following this was a year on the McGill staff, then on to Toronto and Ryerson where she is at present.

Not only has Miss Harrington proven herself to be an outstanding coach, but she is also a swim star in her own right. During her three years at Toronto, she was a member of the Intercollegiate team each year.

This year the various colleges will be competing for the Baxter Trophy. This is a comparatively new trophy which is awarded on the percentage basis. Each swimmer receives a point every time she turns out for a practice and two points for participation in the meet. The number of points are tallied at the end of the season and worked out over the percentage of women enrolled in the college times a hundred. This cup was introduced to encourage individual participation and incidentally, cannot be won by the team that wins the meet.

Well girls, we hope to see you out at the next practice either supporting your college or as an aspirant to the Intercollegiate team. The only prerequisite is a medical in order to join the splash party at OCE on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday, at 5:30 for speedy ones, 6:30 for ornamental and 7:30 for the divers. If there are any questions get in touch with Barb Gluck, P.H.E. III. Don't forget now, we will be expecting to see you at the next practice.

Baby Blues Against Colts Expecting A Tough Battle

Coach Jack Kennedy leads his Baby Blues into London today against the Western Colts in what is expected to be the toughest game of the season. The Colts, who own a 46-0 win over Ryerson, are expected to come up with their usual fast backfield, led by ex-Etobicoke quarterback Bruce Ford and Bill Turner who supervised the Danforth Tech squad last year. These two will lead the Colts out of the famed Diamond T, scrapped recently by the parent Mustangs.

Stew Winter, who completed 17 out of 24 against Queen's, will lead the Toronto Intermediates' backfield, with two-touchdown man Rusty Gee at the wingback spot, John Tattle at full, and Bob Smart and Tim Reid starting in the half positions. Kennedy, obviously quite pleased with his team's showing against Queen's, said that he considers ex-Ridley star Reid "one of the best halfbacks the Baby Blues have ever had." And he feels quite sure of victory today if his line equals the sterling performance it produced in Kingston last week. Pete Polezone will start at centre with Bruchoresky as second man. Hunter, Eytan, Canlett and Jaremko will play the guard spots, while Levine, McLean, McCutcheon and Syron are in at tackle. Nelson and Lansky will start at the end spots, with Stacey and Lee ready for relief work.

The alternate backfield sees Naylor at flying wing, Jim Seigmiller at fullback and Don Comish and Bob Dann in the half-back slots.

Toronto and the Colts split home and home games last season with each team victorious in its own back yard. However, this year there is the added pressure of the fact that the teams are members of an organized league and there is a league championship at stake. Kennedy, who feels the teams are pretty evenly matched, has his boys ready for this tilt in high spirits and injury-free, and feels fairly confident of victory if his squad repeats its performance of last Friday.

UC Wins Over Meds 5-1 End A Two Year Drought

By HOWIE MANDELL

For the first time in two years University College hit the winning trail yesterday afternoon with a 5-1 win over Meds. The winning touchdown was scored by Sid Weinrib on a pass from Johnny Lambier with only five minutes to go in the game.

In the dull first half the U.C. men had a slight edge in play. They muffed their big scoring opportunity in the first quarter when a high snap on third down prevented a Med kick and set the red-and-white men of U.C. up on their opponents' 19 yard line. But then two U.C. passes were knocked down and Weinrib's attempted field goal was partially blocked. Neither team had any other scoring chances during the half.

After taking the kickoff in the second half the men of medicine marched down the field. On the first play Paul Druckman hit John Elder with a fifteen yard pass. A handoff to John Hamilton for ten yards and a U.C. penalty put the ball on their own twenty-five yard line. After two incomplete passes, Hamilton got off a tremendous punt which sailed way over the deadline and gave Meds a one point margin.

Penalties and fumbles kept U.C. bottled up in their own end for the rest of the quarter and most of the fourth frame. Then, with only five minutes to go in the game, Lambier, from his own twenty threw a thirty yard pass to Weinrib who outraced the Med team for sixty yards and the score.

Other bright lights for U.C. were lineemen Ron Bezoff, Marv Grossman and Norm Berstein while Ron McIntosh on set and Dan Strandert at half stood out for Medicine.

Victoria lived up to its promise of a fast squad and completely outplayed Skule yesterday afternoon for a 22-6 win. SPS came up with a surprisingly sloppy display despite the good play of little quarterback Al Wong.

Vic took an 11-0 lead in the first half and never looked back. A

By JOHN BROOKS

Skule fumble paved the way for the first Vic touchdown in the first three minutes. Quarterback Frank Ebenhardt pitched out to Norm Williams who went twenty yards around the right end for the score. Bruce Sutherland, who was a standout on defense, broke through to block the convert attempt by Ebenhardt. After an exchange of punts, Ebenhardt intercepted a Wong pass and galloped fifty yards for a major. Wong was rushed on the play by Jerry Wylie who broke through consistently to rush the passer. Ebenhardt converted his own score to give the red-and-gold their 11-0 halftime lead.

It only took Vic seven plays to increase their lead in the second half. After a bad snap, the Engineers were forced to relinquish possession of the ball on their own ten yard line, and Terry Bertram barged over for an unconverted touchdown.

One of the sloppiest plays of the game less than a minute later set Vic up for another major by Norm Williams. Skule fumbled on the kickoff, and after Money went for four yards through the line on two tries, Williams took a direct snap with the team in the deep punt formation and scooted thirty-five yards around the left end to boost the score to 21-0. Sutherland was in again to block the convert attempt by Ebenhardt.

Skule struck back for their lone score but it was a short-lived outburst. Vic fumbled an Engineer punt and two successive passes by Wong to Weaver and Russell sent the latter across for the major, which Ken Selby converted.

Near the end, Ebenhardt, who kicked well all day, hoofed one to the deadline to round out the scoring. Ebenhardt and Williams were the big guns for Victoria, while triple-threat quarterback Wong was by far the only SPS player to produce anything worth mentioning, although Al Weaver did come up with a couple of good catches. Skule coach Wally Mellor, his team definitely weakened by the ISC ruling, certainly has his work cut out.

Carabins Lead Intercol Tennis

The University of Montreal swept into the lead in the senior Intercollegiate tennis tournament yesterday gaining seven victories in singles play to boost their total to thirteen.

The University of Western Ontario settled for two wins and a second place tie with Laval with nine points each. McGill and Varsity trailed with seven and three respectively.

Rain late Wednesday night forced postponement of yesterday morning's matches and only singles games were played. There are still twelve doubles and eight singles matches left to the meet.

Basketball

Basketball practices will begin for the senior and intermediate Intercollegiate teams Monday night in the Hart House gym at 5:00. All newcomers will be welcome to attend the sessions under new Head Coach John McManus.

SMC Girls Wallop Meds

St. Mike's continued on their winning ways yesterday with a convincing 15-3 victory over Meds at Varsity Stadium. The Double Blue countered two runs in the first inning and unfolded their batting power in the second with ten runs. Meds could only retaliate with a single run in the second and two in the third.

Morya Cakell sparked the winner's at the plate with a tremendous round tripper in the third, as well as stealing home in the previous inning. The Meds' catcher, despite the losing atmosphere, displayed fine ball playing. St. Mike's defensive playing showed itself to be as strong as its offensive while Meds were somewhat weaker. All in all both teams demonstrated good ball playing.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

C L O U D B U R S T

Three buddies, Gene Kelly, Dan Dailey and Michael Kidd, come back from the war and meet in Tim's Bar. They make a bet with the barman that they will be back in ten years, still firm friends.

This is the slender plot on which It's Always Fair Weather (at Loew's) is based. Nobody expects a musical comedy to have a strong plot, still less a believable one. But one does ask for sympathetic characters and good words and music.

We have one sympathetic character, a hamburger-stand operator in Schenectady, played by Michael Kidd—but we are shown nothing of his life in the ten-year period. Instead, the film gives us capsule versions of the lives of the other two—a pill-swallowing, "audio-visual, video-wise," TV commercial, executive vice-president (Gene Kelly) and a smart operator in the tight-fixing business (Dan Dailey). Both are fairly despicable people and we don't really care what happens to them.

Unfortunately, what could have been a stormy musical—of the calibre of Seven Brides, Band Waggon, and Singin' in the Rain—merely ends up as a cloudburst.

One feels that there was a bunch of very frustrated script-writers who decided to knock down all the Aunt Sallies within reach. However, some of this frustration produces good numbers.

Dolores Gray, as a sickly sentimental mistress of ceremonies in a "This is Your Life" type of show, works off her frustration in a marvellous song-and-dance routine called (if I remember rightly) "Thanks, but No Thanks." The set for this number was obviously inspired by the paintings of Dalí and di Chirico and neatly suggests the dream-world of TV. The only trouble is that this particular TV hostess would be incapable of such intelligently-expressed frustration. Cyd Charisse, who plays an intellectual idea-girl for TV, would have been a more sensible choice.

There are many other high spots in this film, and much to be learned from them. The examples of Griffith, Abel Gance and Sergei Eisenstein are finally having their effect on the cinemascope screen.

Griffith's influence is apparent in a scene in a high class restaurant. The three buddies voice their feelings of what-crashing-bores-these-other-two-are to the tune of "The Blue Danube" played by the restaurant orchestra. As each character sings his thoughts the huge screen closes up in to normal dimensions, a feat accomplished by use of a mobile masking technique.

Abel Gance's 1927 film Napoleon, which used a tryptic screen of roughly cinemascope proportions, is the inspiration for a dance sequence in which the three buddies, although in different locations, do a synchronized dance together, each dancer being placed in a separate third of the screen.

Although I have, in a sense, named It's Always Fair Weather as a musical comedy, it is definitely a film to see, if only because it points to a creative use of the usually unwieldy cinemascope screen.

Progress Report

NFCUS Conference

Edmonton (CUP): Exchange tours with Iron Curtain countries may be arranged for Canadian students next year, an observer at the annual NFCUS conference reported last night.

The National Federation of Canadian University Students has accepted the proposals of Jiri Pelikan, Czechoslovakia, that they should promote the tours. In addition the delegates proposed that one student from such a country be offered a scholarship to study in Canada for one year.

Drastic revisions in the administration of the federation have been suggested by the two Toronto delegates, Michael Shoemaker (IV Trin) and Diana Haas (IV UC). Some of the proposals of the President and Vice President of the Toronto Students' Administrative Council have been incorporated into the recommendations of the commission on administration.

Shoemaker and Miss Haas were sent to the conference armed with suggestions to improve the administration of the federation. Some of these included a reorganization of NFCUS administration, and even the hiring of an efficiency expert to oversee the Ottawa national office.

Although membership in IUS has been rejected, NFCUS has decided to send observers to the next IUS congress. The congress will be in Prague, next summer.

This is in keeping with the programme suggested by Mr. Pelikan to increase international co-operation between students of Canada and communist countries. NFCUS has also decided to continue its active participation in the programme of the international student conferences and CoSec (the Co-ordinating Secretariat of International Conferences).

Toronto Newspapers Join Varsity Condemn Holy Alliance Interference

Editorial comment in Toronto's daily newspapers yesterday strongly supported the U of T's stand against the "interference" of the Lord's Day Alliance with the Hart House Sunday evening concerts.

President Sidney Smith transferred the talk to action by paying a visit to Alliance officers. He hopes to find a solution to the situation which arose when the Alliance threatened to prosecute should the concerts take place as scheduled.

L. Cassells, legal council for the University, promised a statement would be issued Monday.

An editorial in yesterday's Globe and Mail said: "The Lord's Day Act is steadily gaining in disrepute owing to the stupid uses to which it is put by the Lord's Day Alliance. The latest misuse by secretary A. S. McGrath resulted in the killing of a series of five Sunday night concerts in Hart House..."

The lead editorial in last night's Telegram sustained the journalistic attack on the Alliance: "Fortunately, there is a remedy for the protection of the public against the kind of pressure that, in this and other instances, the Canadian people resent.

"It is high time that the Prime Minister of Ontario, Mr. Leslie Frost, looked over the whole body of legislation of which the Lord's Day Act is one example, to make sure that small but vocal pressure groups are not permitted to dictate to other citizens who are not so vocal or so well organized."

Frank Tumpane, writing in his Telegram column, said: "And the Lord's Day Alliance, by its nagging and interfering with perfectly innocent cultural activities, is helping to put voters into a frame of mind where they'll carry a request for Sunday saloons along with other innovations."

Sportswriting Topic In Journalism Lecture

Sports writing will be today's journalism topic as Jim Proudfoot, Toronto Daily Star sports writer, gives the second in a five-lecture series on newspaper work in University College.

Mr. Proudfoot, a former Varsity sports columnist, will speak in Room 13 at 1 p.m., today.

The winner of the Anita Friedman Award—the Varsity's coveted award for journalistic proficiency —Mr. Proudfoot was a writer on The Varsity for four years.

Old timers in The Varsity office who remember him, say his trademark was an unending thoroughness. "If he didn't know every detail of a sporting event," one sports columnist said, "he'd make certain of it before he sat down to write. And when he wrote, he wrote with clarity, without embellishment, telling his story directly and to the point."

Single Vote Saves Time Magazine St. Mikes Students Say It's Slanted

By the margin of a single vote, TIME Magazine escaped condemnation as an "affront to the intelligent reader" by the St. Michael's Oratorical Society. The house, including the main speakers, acknowledged a definite "slant" in TIME's reporting, but was divided on the question of whether or not such a "slant" is reprehensible.

Jerry Day, the opening speaker for the Government admitted TIME's technical excellence, but claimed that by overlapping the pale of opinion and the pale of fact, TIME has become "one big editorial posing as fact," and called its news "pre-digested rather than palatable."

Speaking for the opposition, Yvonne Adams pointed out that no one is without bias, and that if TIME "slants" the news, "it should only serve as a challenge to the intelligent reader to ferret out the truth." She called the magazine "valuable," for its comprehensiveness and unique format, "which informs, as well as entertains."

"TIME readers are somehow made to think of themselves as different... above the normal run of men," said Mary Baldwin, the second speaker for the Government. "TIME gives you the week's news and the proper reaction at the same time." Miss Baldwin cited different examples of TIME's work including "the vicious hatchet job done on McCarthy," and submitted specific instances ranging from "distortion to outright lie."

Dick Mastrodonato concluded for the opposition by wholeheartedly endorsing TIME's interpretive reporting, which he felt was not detrimental to the intelligent reader, "who cannot be spoon-fed ideas," although he "enjoys another's viewpoint, with which he may agree or disagree."

The debate was the first bi-weekly meeting of the St. Mike's Oratorical Society, the aim of which is "to engender a grassroots interest in public speaking by giving everyone a chance to speak."

UC Freshwomen Become Initiates With Candlelight

Candle-carrying seniors formally initiated U.C. freshmen into the College at a traditional service held Wednesday night in the Women's Union Theatre.

The evening began with the presentation of four skits by the freshmen. Daphne Bell, as convener of "Portia Faces Life," accepted first prize for a parody on the ancients. Lollypops were awarded to the winning cast. Wolve's and fast grandmothers presented a modern day "Little Red Riding Hood," while daring freshmen enacted the flapper days of Dean Innis and President Sidney Smith. One group of freshmen presented a charade on the word "freshman" and asked the audience to interpret it.

In the opinion of most seniors these were the cleverest skits in several years.

At the close of the formal initiating service, seniors paid for their entertainment by feeding all present on donuts and chocolate milk.

NFCUS TO SAVE MONEY

Go Dave!

Economy Highlights NFCUS Decisions

Edmonton, (CUP) — The National Federation of Canadian University Students is out to save money for students this year.

Decisions to implement a life-insurance scheme and to organize a Student Discount Service on a national basis were made by the 80 delegates and observers.

No major changes were made in the organizational structure of the federation but an advisory council of prominent businessmen and educators will be set up to counsel the NFCUS executive.

While membership in the International Union of Students was rejected, the conference decided to keep the door open for possible co-operation on practical issues.

Delegates also voted to try to persuade some Universities to waive tuition and residence fees to permit an Iron Curtain country student to study for one year in Canada.

The Student Discount Service will be organized on a local basis by NFCUS committees where feasible. The National Office will make arrangements for similar discounts of from five to 10 per cent with national commercial companies.

Delegates discussed a group insurance plan similar to that now promoted by the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes. The executive of the federation and the advisory council will investigate certain legal and financial aspects of the proposed scheme.

Another money-saving scheme was the reduction of the National Office staff to four—national president, Travel Director, secretary and part-time bilingual secretary.

The president will perform most of the functions of an Executive Secretary and will not carry out a presidential tour of the country.

Proposals of Toronto's representatives, Mike Shoemaker (IV Trinity) and Diane Haas (IV UC), president and vice-president of the Students' Administrative Council were incorporated into many of the decisions of the conference.

Their suggestion to constitute an advisory committee to be made up of faculty representatives was modified to the later suggestion of a committee made up of prominent persons.

The decision to make the national president, in effect, an executive secretary also arose from a suggestion by the Toronto representatives.

Delegates decided to continue the cultural contests normally sponsored by NFCUS and added another one — photography — to their schedule.

NFCUS Voting Chose Martin New President

Peter Martin, fourth-year University of Toronto student, was elected Saturday as full-time president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students for one year.

Martin, last year Regional Vice-President for Ontario, will take up duties at the NFCUS head office in Ottawa when he returns from Edmonton where the conference was held.

Nearly 80 delegates from 20 universities also elected Walter Tarnopolsky, a law student from the University of Saskatchewan, as International Affairs Commissioner. He was with a WUS-sponsored seminar in Japan last summer.

Ivan Cody of McMaster University, was elected commissioner for the newly named NFCUS Debating Association.

John Sherman, of the University of Alberta in Edmonton was elected President of the Western Region; Gary Keyes, of McMaster, president of the Ontario Region; Ken Claire of Sir George Williams College, Montreal, president of the Quebec Region and Dave Peel, Dalhousie University, Halifax, president of the Maritime Region.

"Billy" Goat And Apple Cider Help Varsity Fans Raise Hell

The 11,000 college football fans on hand for Saturday's Varsity-McGill game were treated to some of the most colorful carrying-on that have ever transpired at the old Bloor Street bowl.

There were times when spectator attention was not wholly on the game!

For example, up in a remote south-east corner of the stadium —perched high above the heads of other spectators—sat members of the self-styled Lady Godiva Memorial Band. From time to time, they flashed a life-size portrait of the nude Lady of yore. When they weren't doing this, they were thumping away on bugle and drum.

Then, not far away, sat a jubilant engineer with a five-gallon tank of something that wasn't lemonade. At intervals it took a swing up above the crowd in a slightly inverted condition.

(Experts reported the contents of this cylindrical-shaped contraption to have been apple cider

St. Mike's won the Homecoming Float Parade with their theme "Progression or Retrogression." Runners-up were Emmanuel and Knox. For pictures —see page 8.

mixed with a concoction colloquially known as "Purple Jesus".)

To accentuate each "Homecoming" touchdown for Varsity, some ingenious students had devised a rocket system which shot skyward with each gleeful score.

And on the field, you could hardly see the players for cheerleaders.

In most cases the cart-wheels were generally recognized as a delight to the eyes—but those poor St. Mike's girls—they were like strip-teasers in Victorian skirts!

(Big Brother has reported to us that Big Sister said "no!")

At half time, the Blue and White Society marched on field with a glittering spectacle of colored ribbons and precision drill by Varsity's band. Faculty and University Cheerleaders added their own inimitable color to the picture.

And, to wind everything up right, everyone was formally introduced to "Billy" the campus goat who was on hand in person.

Vic. Women Sexy? Hot Debate Tonight

"Vic. women are among the sexiest on the campus, potentially at least" stated Jerry Wylie (IV Mod. Hist.) last night, in outlining the government's position on the resolution "Vic. is Victorian." This will be the opening debate in the 97th session of the Victoria Debating Parliament.

The debate, commencing at 8 p.m. tonight in Alumni Hall at Victoria, will be highlighted by Principal Bennett of Victoria, acting as Lieutenant Governor, and the inauguration of a new constitution for the Debating Parliament.

Opposing the resolution, Bob Saunders (III Mod. Hist.) claims firmly that "the only thing about Vic that's Victorian is the architecture."

Don Cock, another speaker for the affirmative, characterizing the opposition as "saintly, white-haired, grandmothers," said, "The engineers represent the modern age—the age of scientific advancement. They do not take the round-about route. Rather they go right after what they want, and, I might add, they usually get it. This is an age of enlightenment—when is some of it going to creep into Vic?"

Debating Parliament president, Wes Turner, said, "This promises to be the hottest debate at Vic, in some years. Everyone seems to have an opinion one way or other." He stressed the fact that the welcome mat is out to all who care to attend.

The Junior Common Room — University College's coffee-quaffing salon — reopens auspiciously this afternoon after extensive re-modelling.

A debate and — of all things — a tea-party highlight the afternoon's proceedings, with coffee service starting up tomorrow morning. The resolution in the University College Mock Parliament debate is not a new one: "That the spirit of UC should be uncorrupted."

"Prime Minister" Marg Penman and Tom Hammond will support the motion, faced by Bailey Istovce, Leader of the Opposition, and Stan Schiff, a veteran of many Parliament battles.

Hammond made a non-committal statement: "For years students of University College have been mumbling dubiously — even querulously — about that highly metaphysical concept, 'The Spirit of Old UC.'"

He promised that the long traditions of "uproarious tomfoolery, memorial rhetorical duels and profound (and occasionally even, original) thought" would be maintained.

Nearly $10,000 has been spent on sprucing up the JCR, giving the floors a new shine, reconstructing the coffee counter and introducing new furniture. Al Millard, IV Pol. Sci., headed the "JCR Renovation Committee," which directed spending.

The grand opening starts at 3 p.m. with the tea party, followed an hour later by the debate. Officials reminded UC students that they are all welcome and entitled to participate.

A Sour Taste

The Editor, The Varsity: Flesherston and the Lord's Day Alliance are but two eruptions of the obscurantism before which Canadians cringe. It is a sorry spectacle to see officials of a university institution prostrate themselves before a self-appointed morality squad of puritan imbeciles, to obtain their permission for Sunday concerts.

Submission to the high priests of the Lord's Day Alliance represents a surrender of a certain amount of freedom of expression; to acknowledge this body as an arbiter in cultural activities is equal to trying to expect sunbeams out of cucumbers.

The Editor, The Varsity: Since the University saw fit to invite Billy Graham to speak in Convocation Hall, I would like to suggest that they also invite Dr. Paul Blanchard, well-known critic of Authoritarianism and author of several controversial books on that subject, to present his opinions in Convocation Hall. He is currently lecturing in Toronto to capacity audiences, and notice of one of his lectures appears elsewhere in The Varsity.

Considering the gusts raised by Graham's recent appearance on campus, I am sure that a lecture by Blanchard would create a veritable hurricane of controversy.

St. Mike's Gamble Third Down Score Major For 6-0 Victory

BY JOHN VOJTECH

Gambling on third down paved the way for St. Mike's last Friday, as they upset their arch rivals, Trinity, 6-0 in a football game that was played under a steady drizzle. The rain and wet field hampered both teams' attacks. The weather however, didn't deter or dampen the spirits of the cheering crowd which showed up from both colleges.

Frank Kiely, the St. Mike's quarterback, late in the fourth quarter gambled on a third down pass from the Trinity forty. He tossed a thirty yard pass to Pete Burns who took the ball in full gallop with four Black Panther defenders clustered around him, and waded over the line for the major. The first convert attempt sailed wide of the posts, but Trinity was called offside. The second attempt by Kiely was good.

Although St. Mike's had the majority of play throughout the game, it was the fine kicking of Trinity's Brook Ellis that kept them at bay. In spite of the slippery condition of the field, St. Mike's unveiled a powerful running attack which was sparked by veterans Ron Renzetti, Jude Fusco, rookies Ken Stanton, Mike McDonald and Jack Fenn, who thrilled the crowd with his agility and speed in broken field running.

The Irish gambled four times on third downs and they were successful three of those times. Credit for this is due to the fine blocking of the line. Defensively it was as great as that of last year's team. Tim Donovan, Curt Russell, Ted Ingson and Bill Priestner played a bone shattering game on the line. The Trinity team put up a good fight as Bill Sanderson, Jimmy Louchs, Dave Smith and John Evans came up with fine defensive plays. Brook Ellis, Jerry Aziz, and Bob Macdonald were the Panther best in the Trinity backfield.

Despite the poor weather there were only three fumbles, two by Trinity who recovered them, and one by St. Mike's. Late in the game, Ellis took to the air but Phil Wood intercepted. He in turn dropped the ball as he was tackled and the ball was recovered by Pete Sanderson. Ellis tried another pass but this too was intercepted by Bob Doud. The game was complete, even with a public address system which unfortunately seemed to have only the St. Mike's lineup.

Carabins Take Intercol Tennis

Rain forced the cancellation of the last day's play in the Intercollegiate senior tennis tournament Friday, but by the unanimous vote of the five team captains, the championship was awarded to the defending champion University of Montreal, who were leading with 13 points at the end of Thursday's play.

Western and Laval were tied for second place with nine wins each; Laval was awarded second place on a percentage basis. McGill finished in fourth place with seven wins and Varsity fifth with three victories.

Before cancellation of the final day's play, the U. of M.'s Raymond Page had won all four singles matches in defense of his individual title, Mike Carpenter of McGill, who also had won four singles matches, earned the right to challenge Page for the title, and the issue will be decided next week in Montreal. No doubles champions were declared.

In London, the University of Toronto won the Intermediate tennis tournament with seven points. Queen's and McMaster tied for second spot with six points each. Western had three and Ontario Agriculture College had no wins. Varsity won the doubles by defeating McMaster 7-5, 7-5, while Hugh McMurray of the Hamilton college won the singles championship.

No Scalps For Redmen Blues Take 33-12 Win

By MOISHE REITER

Playing with merciless method, Varsity Blues scored five majors, as many converts, a field goal and a relaxed victory over the McGill Redmen, Saturday last, retaining first place in their run for the Yates Cup. The Redmen managed only a brief spasm of contention when, in the third quarter, down under a 21-0 Varsity lead, Dickie Carr tried to carry old McGill back into the game on his brilliant passing arm, throwing twice in four minutes for majors. Matching this in the final period, the Blues kept on, winning 33-12.

With the blue wingline weakened by injuries to guard Don Johnston and captain Don Smith, Varsity faced a surprising club that a week before had held Western's "greatest team in 40 years" to a one score tie. The only department in which the Redmen lived up to the clippings they brought with them was passing, and even in that it was Carr throwing to perfection and no one to receive.

The Blues opened up quickly with a touchdown drive from the McGill 48 first time they had the ball. It was Gerry Lansky on a tricky reverse play from the 13 that gave Varsity their first score and sent McGill to keep company in the cellar with Western Mustangs.

A smothering Blue pass defence in the first half kept McGill to the ground where the Varsity front wall absorbed their very faint drive. On those few occasions when Carr took to the air the passes went mostly to nowhere, while on one Ed Skrzypek grabbed it at centre field, carrying back to the McGill 48. The next play was for five points on a long pass Wilson to Burt Kellock with Kellock kicking off a Redman tackler at the 15 to go all the way.

Much of the Varsity edge was in one man, Ed Skrzypek performing effectively defensively, outkicking McGill's Ferrabice by almost double yardage and even carrying the ball with most harmful effects to Redmen defences. Probably the Blues' most underrated player, Skrzypek seemed to be the best all-round player of the game. Despite Skrzypek's punting edge the Blues consistently lost on kick exchanges, getting only one runback of any important distance all afternoon while the McGills made good gains when their turn came.

Carr established himself as one of the two best quarterbacks in Intercollegiate ball, passing brilliantly and showing a necessary calmness in the face of frequent Blue breakthroughs, never being caught for losses on pass plays. Varsity passers, however, were nailed several times, Wilson once for a loss of 15 yards and Skrzypek for one deficit of 21 yards.

It was a big day for rookies in the Varsity lineup as back Dave Cresswell atoned for some bad first half bobbles by going for the two final Blue majors in fine form and rookie lineman Pete Copland intercepted a Carr pass and ran it back to the McGill 26, whereupon Skrzypek threw neatly to Cresswell for his second touchdown.

Statistically, in the matter of first-downs McGill held an incredible equality with Varsity, matching the 13 Blue moves, but otherwise it was Varsity all the way. With nothing special to strain themselves about, Varsity's top men let up a bit, still counting outstanding records. Top men for the day were Jack Rogers with 6.8 yards average, Pete Maik next with 6 even and then Phil Muntz with 5.5.

Varsity wingback Gerry Lansky is shown scoring the first of the Blues' five touchdowns Saturday after going for thirteen yards on a reverse. Blues In Rugger Win

Last Saturday on the Back Campus, the Rugger Blues scored a 6-0 win over McGill, and thus for the first time took the lead in the race for Intercollegiate rugger honours.

From the outset, it was clear that this would be a walkover for neither team, and the play progressed hard and fast, with the Blues electing to keep the ball in the scrum for the most part. After twenty minutes of the first half, an excess of exuberance on the part of McGill led them to foul near their own try line. Chris Jacques made no mistake with the penalty kick, and half-time came with the Blues three points up.

In the second half, the Blues began to open up the play, and with some first class three-quarter movements, sparked by the running of Stan Lepper, Chris Jacques, Mike Loughton and Jack Burger, it was obvious that McGill were slowly being put on the defensive.

The score when it came was, peculiarly enough, a solo effort of one of the forwards. McGill tried to pull a sneak line-out, but the ball eluded all their forwards, and was gathered up by the Blues hooker Bill Thomas, who raced forty yards for the touchdown, with McGill tacklers never more than three feet behind him the whole way. The try was unconverted and in the remaining few minutes, the Redmen were unable to pierce the Blues defence.

This Saturday, the Blues go to Montreal for the return match, and, it is hoped, to bring back the Intercollegiate crown which has eluded them for so long.

Dazzling Colt Punt Return Defeats Intermediates 7-5

London, Oct. 16—A phenomenal runback, from their own one yard line, of a Baby Blue punt, gave Western Colts a 7-5 victory over the Varsity squad here, Friday afternoon. Frank Loftus, Western's speedy defensive half, went all the way for the only Western major after taking Larry Joyn's punt practically beneath his own goal post. He started up the sidelines with the ball, then reversed his field, crossing up Baby Blue tacklers to break into the clear. Once ahead, there was no catching him.

The dazzling punt return was the first scoring play of the game, and came early in the third quarter. The convert was good and gave the Colts the lead they never lost. They made sure of the victory with a kick to the deadline by quarterback Art Turner, shortly after.

The Blues made a vain attempt to get back into the game in the same stanza when quarterback Stew Winter fired a pass to wingback Rusty Gee for a touchdown. The play covered about 25 yards, and the attempted convert, that would have narrowed the Western lead, went wide.

The Blues have a 1-1 game record so far this season, and play Ryerson Rams here, tomorrow, in Varsity Stadium. The Rams are winless to date, losing 46-0 to Western, and dropping a tight 14-13 tilt to the Queen's club. In their only other game this year, the Baby Blues walloped Queen's 35-0, so they'll be out for a repeat tomorrow afternoon.

But disaster struck at the slim Western lead as the second half opened. Diminutive seatback Gary Schreiber bobbled the kickoff and then eluded a half-dozen Mustang tacklers to carry back to the

Surphlis Leads Queen's To Win

Kingston, Oct. 15 (CUP)—Golden Gael fullback Bill Surphlis burst wide open in the first three minutes of the third quarter here Saturday to score two touchdowns and play a major part in Queen's 12-4 victory over the hapless Western Mustangs.

Playing before 7,200 die-hard fans in the pouring rain, the Mustangs moved into a 4-0 half-time lead, after end Bob Labett booted a field goal and a single in the second quarter.

But disaster struck at the slim Western lead as the second half opened. Diminutive seatback Gary Schreiber bobbled the kickoff and then eluded a half-dozen Mustang tacklers to carry back to the Western 14. Surphlis crashed for eight and on the next play burst through centre for the major. Thompson converted to put the Gaels in front 6-4.

Thompson kicked off to Britton who got to the Western thirty.

and after two plays Labett put it to Gael half Jim Cankshank who got back to the Queen's 41. On the next play Surphlis cracked on the right side of the line and broke away for a 69-yard touchless gallop. Thompson again converted and the Mustangs' ship sank 12-4.

Western fullback Ralph Sammons was the best man on the field, creating 28 times to 117 yards. Bill Britton contributed 170 yards to the Mustang total. Surphlis picked up 140 yards for the Gaels, while Stewart ran for 114.

The Mustangs made 25 first downs to Queen's 17, but had trouble cracking the Gael defence when in dangerous territory.

Bracht Counts Two Goals Paces Soccer Blues' Win

The University of Toronto Blues defeated McGill Redmen 4-1 in the first game of a two game total-point series for the Eastern Senior Soccer Conference Championship.

McGill opened the scoring in the first half when Nezzus Fawcok headed in a pass from right wing Trevor T. McGill led until the dying seconds of the first half when Ed Bracht leaped in front of a pass from Rod Green and chested it into the net to tie the score.

Varsity went ahead to stay early in the second half when left wing Brian King took a pass from Green and blasted a high shot past the McGill goalie from about fifteen yards out. The prettiest play of the day paid off in the Blues third goal. Bracht chested the ball to King who in turn slipped it over to Green. Rod made no mistake as he blasted the ball into the net. The Redmen put up a spirited last-ditch effort to get back in the game, but Ed Bracht's second goal at the end of the last few moments of the contest put the outcome beyond doubt.

Both teams turned in a display of first class soccer, and special credit should go to the goalkeepers, especially for the visitors. Had it not been for his outstanding efforts, the Blues would have racked up a much higher score.

nothing much

The 19th annual NFCUS Conference is now over — and Toronto's two delegates are now on their way home to tell us their opinions of the melee.

It is now too soon to the event to formulate definite opinions about the conference's results — or lack of them. But some facts seem to stand out — even now.

First of all, the conference itself was badly organized from the beginning. The agenda was late in arriving in Toronto, and as events later proved was entirely too tight. Delegates worked from 9 in the morning till 10 at night — and the last session lasted till 4 a.m.

The discussions on the floor and in the commissions showed clearly that more organization and leadership was needed in the organization. There was a crying need for a strong voice of leadership and experience, and there was no answer.

Another weakness that was sharply pointed up at the conference was the lack of trust and mutual confidence. When some of the delegates — including Toronto's Michael Shoemaker — retired to another room during one of the conference debates to discuss issues among themselves, another delegate leaped to his feet to accuse the "smoke-filled backroom meeting" of plotting the overthrow of NFCUS. Wild charges and counter-charges then filled the air, and the entire evening session was completely disrupted.

As far as the conference results go, it is difficult to say a great deal — perhaps because there was very little done.

a limit

Sure, fun is fun: but vandalism is just plain stupidity.

This year's homecoming float parade was marred by an attack on the SPS float by a group of Medsmen. The students swarmed up to the float as it was passing down Yonge Street, damaged part of the decorations, and manhandled one of the Skule cheerleaders.

We would be the last to decry any outburst of student highjinks on this campus. Indeed, this university needs more vigor and humor in its student affairs, not less.

This incident is not overly serious in itself. But it could provoke retaliation; and retaliation could provoke more retaliation until the limits of good sense and decency have been left far behind.

Slow Boat To Europe

A British Summer

Two Toronto students, Diana Haas and Margaret Gulham, both from University College, spent their summer working in Great Britain. This is a brief account of their impressions.

The idea of finding summer jobs in Britain originated with the student council of St. Andrews in Scotland. Their suggestion was that two students from U. of T. should spend their summer working in Britain at jobs found for them by the students of St. Andrews. In the same way, two students from that university should spend their summer in Canada.

As we didn't find out till quite late in April that we'd be leaving in May, there was frantic worry as to how we should get there. But thanks to the help of NFCUS Travel Service, bookings were finally arranged.

The fact that the boat looked about 1,000 years old — (actually only about 30) — may have accounted for the small passenger list; for though this was the end of May with the tourist rush full on, it was half empty.

But one shouldn't go by appearances. For the boat was seaworthy, though reluctantly so. Even comfortable. And the food was good.

For many it was obviously a last resort, for some merely a spontaneous gesture—one man arranged his passage at the dockside minutes before we sailed. Consequently the passengers were a far more interesting and bizarre crowd than one would have encountered on any of the better known lines, and we had a wonderful non-boring crossing.

Two days before our arrival at Southampton we heard news of the rail strike in England. But thanks to effective organization on the part of the shipping company, buses were waiting at the dock to take us to London. So we went to London.

We really didn't mind. The two days spent there before we could catch a bus north to Stratford-on-Avon gave us an excellent opportunity to see a bit of the city, and even get to the theatre.

Our first job, throughout June and July, was at the Arden hotel in Stratford. We had no idea what the work would be until we arrived, in the rain, at the hotel. Within 15 minutes Margaret was delegated to making tea, coffee and beds, while I was to be a waitress.

Though we were strictly novices we soon caught on, working nine hours a day, six days a week, for a salary of little over 4 pounds a week (about $11). Though this sounds ridiculous by our standards it was really quite good as there were no living expenses.

The hotel—actually three houses—was small, with only fifty guests. As it was quiet and only a few yards from the theatre, several of the actors lived there or had their meals there. John Gielgud had just left with the 2nd Stratford Company for Brighton, but the Oliviers strolled in at odd times during the day (the day they came for lunch was, of course, our day off).

We were also fortunate in getting tickets for performances of the four Shakespearean productions showing at the time. The most impressive of these was Sir Laurence Olivier's performance as Macbeth.

We made many good friends in Stratford and regretted leaving.

WRITING READERS:

Amazing!

The Editor,

It is amazing to me how so many apparently highly-educated people can become so baffled and fooled by a simple frustration of their plans! The Hart House orchestra must fold because it cannot operate within the limits of the Lord's Day Act. How ridiculous.

If men had stopped trying to build flying machines simply because a flapping grator or some other early monstrosity didn't get off the ground, then we would all still be pedestrian—physically, as well as mentally.

A Sunday evening concert can be financed in other ways than by the sale of tickets. A silver collection, reimbursed, if necessary, by the S.A.C. or Hart House; or the sale of Orchestra Memberships are at least two very apparent alternatives.

These methods, besides having been proved successful for similar undertakings at other universities, have the added virtue of remaining within the limits of the law. No matter what we think of the Lord's Day Act, let us at least not blame it for our own lack of ingenuity!

Kenneth F. Somerton
School of Social Work

Our next job was looking after a professor's children in the Highlands. At least, that's what we were told.

We really did a bit of everything,—peeling potatoes; cleaning, cooking, and sometimes even looking after the children, aged seven and eleven. We did this work independently. I began alone while Margaret went up to London for two weeks rest; she took over later when I left in the middle of August.

It was an interesting experience working with the family—he was a Physics lecturer at St. Andrews and his wife had studied Classics at Oxford.

Perhaps it was the clash in interests which accounted for their chaotic state. But even so, it was pleasant being with them.

They had taken a little house in Ullapool on the north-west coast of Scotland and we mountain climbed, swam, bicycled, fished, walked,—every day something different. It really proved to be a wonderful holiday.

Our official jobs ended at this point,—for Margaret, the beginning of September, for myself, the middle of August. On our itinerary for the first two weeks of September there'd been scheduled grouse-beating for the Royal Family at Balmoral, but we decided against it.

After having worked for two and a half months the thought of tramping ten miles a day over the Scottish moors had lost some of its appeal.

So we changed our minds about that. Margaret decided on a tour of Germany, France, and the Scandinavian countries while I spent the last two weeks of August in Paris and then back to Scotland visiting friends and the Edinburgh Festival.

It's unnecessary to add that both of us thought the summer the most satisfying we've had. For this we thank the members of Toronto WUS and St. Andrews SAC who made it possible. So far I've heard little of the two students who came to Canada, though I understand that Ron Gould, the WUS Chairman of 54/55 found employment for them in Ottawa.

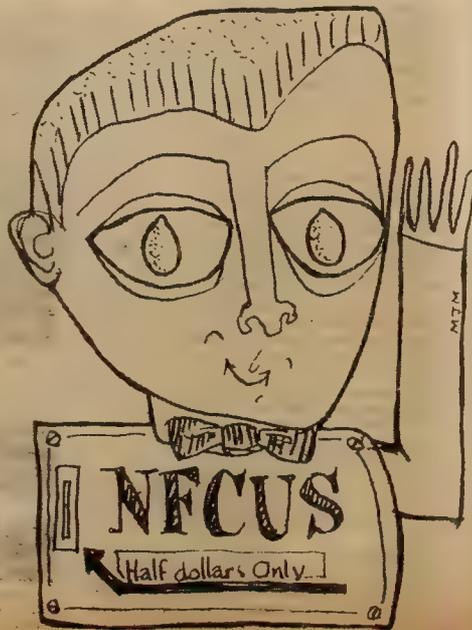

The success of this summer exchange will, we trust, be an incentive for future exchanges. It is so much more satisfactory to be able to live in a country for awhile—to meet and make friends with the people there, and to lose the feeling of being just another tourist.

Although work in Britain can be found independently, the fact that jobs are ensured through this exchange will enable students to spend a wonderful summer abroad at very little expense.

Ann Kilgore, the P.&O.T. EAC Rep., working under WUS, is in charge of next summer's program. It is hoped that more universities in Britain and Canada will become interested and take part in similar exchanges. Also, there is a possibility that employment for graduates who wish to spend a year in Europe may be arranged through the universities here and abroad.

This summer was, I hope, the successful start of promoting relations, connections, and interests with the students and people of Britain.

Revivalism Revisited books drama

By JOHN McFARLAND

Many scholarly works have been written on the psychology of revivalism. Few have been devoted to a sociological study of the phenomenon. Billy Sunday is a book that attempts to examine the revivalist and his message against their social background, and to determine the extent to which both can be moulded by that background. While not underestimating the religious aspect of revivalism, the author shows that its specific message is popular or not, depending on its strictly social appeal.

The average convert is an individual who has a powerful feeling of ill-defined dissatisfaction with life, his society and himself. Lonely and insecure, he wants to be convinced that the traditional ideals, in which he finds it hard to believe, are after all valid. The revivalist satisfies this need. He is a man intuitively aware of the fears, hopes and prejudices of his contemporaries, and equally aware of the answers they expect from him. He reflects the contemporary mind and provides it with a religious justification for its beliefs. His is the average mentality brought to a position of leadership and power through the conviction that he speaks with the voice of God. His panacea is one that the person of little education and less reflective thought wants to hear. It consists mainly in an exhortation to return to God, and a promise that this will bring peace and happiness. Society, its values and ideals, are fundamentally sound; they need not be radically changed, only restored. The system can be made to work if those unconverted individuals who have been perverting it to their own selfish purposes will undergo a change of heart. These points are well illustrated in the life and career of Billy Sunday.

The period of Sunday's popularity as the leading exponent of revivalist Christianity in the United States coincided with the economic, social and cultural upheaval occasioned by the nation's transition from a rural to an urban industrial economy. The new industrialism brought its well-known problems and fears. The old urban middle classes resented the masses of strangers who flocked to man factories and establish homes. The new working classes feared for their own security. To those caught up in it, the system seemed heartless and inexorable; an unbeatable machine that could dispense with the individual at any time. The middle class world had altered beyond recognition, and the old ideology seemed to have become invalid. Men found it hard to believe in self-reliance, rugged individualism and an optimistic relationship with God. It was Billy Sunday, among others, who helped to restore confidence in this ideology and to perpetuate it for more than two decades.

the prophet

As against the visionaries who advocated regulatory state action as the only remedy, Sunday preached a return to the "old-fashioned, God-fearing, Christian morality of their fathers" as the one condition necessary to bring about good government, happiness and universal prosperity. In addition he pandered to every fear and prejudice in the minds of his middle class audiences. A Christian was not an immigrant, an oriental, a socialist or a union man; nor did he engage in labour agitation. He was a loyal American who did not criticize the government, worked well, benefited his employer in real profits, and was rewarded for his industry. Both his material and his spiritual security were assured if he accepted Sunday's version of Christianity and tried to live up to its ideals. Nor were these ideals constant. As conditions changed, many of them were altered to fit the prevailing temper. It was when he could no longer keep pace with the rapid changes after World War I that Sunday's popularity vanished.

During his heyday Sunday was often referred to by disaffected liberals as "the greatest strike-breaker alive." Socialists saw him as the willing tool of Big Business, teaching the worker to be content with his lot. Certainly he had the support of many individuals to whose advantage it was that workingmen should not lose faith in the basic soundness of a system of unimpeded competition. John D. Rockefeller, S. S. Kresge, H. J. Heinz, John M. Studebaker and Henry Leland all devoted time and money to his 'campaigns.' Yet, charges of willing complicity with capitalists are almost certainly unfounded. Those of his critics who heard him are agreed that he was entirely sincere. If he pandered to popular prejudice and advocated the current business philosophy, it was because they were both tenets of his belief.

"BILLY SUNDAY WAS HIS REAL NAME": William G. McLoughlin, Jr. University of Chicago Press (Canadian outlet, University of Toronto Press): 1955. pp xxix: 325, $7.50.

He never saw beyond the superstitious illusions of the Iowa farmer in the 'Bible Belt' where he was born. His mentality was gauged to conditions that had passed away with the Nineteenth Century.

the process

In addition to these aspects of Sunday's revivalism, much of the book is devoted to an examination of the mechanics of mass conversion. Charts and figures show the months of careful preparation, the large amounts of money and the immense organization that preceded each campaign. They vastly exceed anything used for the same purpose today. Nothing was left to chance. Conversion was less the result of an "outpouring of the Holy Spirit" than the "efficient result of well-planned human activity." The Sunday technique is also examined and shown to be nothing more than that of a highly skilled manipulator of mass responses. Statistics of his 'conversions' are broken down and found to be quite unspectacular. When it is learned, for example, that of the 98,264 persons converted in New York City, less than 200 had joined a church six months later, one is sceptical of the permanence of the process.

The book arrives at no definite conclusion regarding the social benefit derived from the revivalist. But the reader finds it almost impossible not to conclude that the revivalist is dangerous, and that his danger lies in the fact that he is largely unaware of the nature of the social conditions for which he prescribes a remedy. He is reacting against their obvious effects and has no real knowledge of their causes. As a rule he assumes conditions that have, in fact, disappeared. In so far as this is the case the revivalist will always be a bar to progress, rather than an assistance to his contemporaries in understanding their society and adapting themselves to social change. This in itself would outweigh whatever benefit he confers on some individuals by way of happiness and inner security. For the happiness and security that come from escaping real facts are, after all, cheap and dangerous qualities. They are certainly of no real benefit to intelligent social development.

Willan Recital

Paying homage to Dr Healey Willan during the week of his 75th birthday, a concert of his music was performed by his own choir of the church of St. Mary Magdalene, by the Choir of St. Paul's, and by Charles Peaker, organist. Un fortunately what might otherwise have been an excellent performance was considerably marred by the peculiar acoustics of St. Paul's and by the unsuitability of the organ to much of Dr. Willan's music.

The opening work, Prelude and Fugue in C Minor for organ, demonstrated this latter point all too clearly. The low-pedal notes were muddy in tone and indistinct in pitch, and the multiple melodic lines of the fugue with its clarion-call theme were undifferentiated, the subtleties lost in a general mass of sound. Another organ piece, Urb Jerusalem Beata, was much more successful.

Two pieces for choir and organ, O Lord our Governour, and A Prayer of Rejoicing were performed by the choir of St. Paul's. This choir is a large group and not an outstanding one, but what would have been a creditable performance was ruined by the echoey acoustics of the church — the various parts were blurred together hopelessly, and, needless to say, the words were completely indistinguishable.

The highlight of the afternoon was the Gloria Deo performed magnificently by Dr. Willan's own choir. Here was Dr. Willan at his best; writing after the style of 16th and 17th century polyphony he has written a beautiful and powerful work.

The concert closed with the Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue for organ. This is a very original blend of plain-song, polyphony and 18th century romanticism into a work of great variety. As in the case of the other organ pieces, the details were obscured and the powerful ending to the fugue just a mass of ugly sound owing to the nature of the instrument. The collection taken during the concert will be devoted to building a permanent home with an organ for the Canadian College of Organists — let us hope that this new organ will get away from the 19th century love of size and power and return to the more musical values of earlier European organ building.

"camino real" opens drama season

What promises to be an unusually exciting drama season on-campus opens this Saturday with the first night of Tennessee Williams' Camino Real, the off-beat production that starts off director Robert Gill's tenth season at Hart House Theatre.

"It's an unusual and provocative play," says the director, "one from which each individual in the audience should be able to derive his own particular message or moral. And this is most important — anyone who goes expecting to see a naturalistic play is due for a shock."

All the characters in the play — Don Quixote, Jacques Casanova, Lord Byron — are really symbols, with viewpoints that take them outside the framework of individual personality. Put together, they represent what Mr. Gill calls "life in this century at its hideous worst — perverted, degraded, and unspeakably tawdry."

Life is not what it used to be on the "Camino Real" or "Royal Way," a mysterious stopping-place unlocated in space or time. Its throng of transients, with all sorts of social and moral standards, is joined by Kilroy, a bewildered character whose pure heart and simplicity permit him to pass on unscathed, after a set of fantastic adventures. As the play progresses, the audience's awareness of the meaning behind the chaotic action gradually grows to a realization of the Williams view of life as a whole.

The single setting, designed by Leon Major and Les Lawrence, borders on the bizarre, with balconied buildings sprawling out beyond the proscenium. Even this is not setting enough for the action, which occasionally rampages up and down the aisles.

Out of the cast of 40, the heaviest role will be carried by Wally Russell as Kilroy, onstage with only a 20-second break. Others among the top principals are Stan Daniels as Gutman (a sort of sardonic chorus), Aileen Kamis as Marguerite Gautier, and James Mainprize as Lord Byron.

Annette Oelbaum as the Gypsy and Raymond Stancer as Nursie, two of the symbolic characters in Tennessee Williams' "CAMINO REAL," which opens the Hart House Theatre season on Saturday night under the direction of Robert Gill. —VSP By Stan Klosevych

Checkmate!

By FRANK R. ANDERSON and GEORGE BERNER

A brilliant chess game is like a jewel, both beautiful and quite rare. One reason for the rarity of brilliancies is that excellent play is required of the loser, as well as the winner, to produce a high class game. Here we have such a game for the loser Ross Siemms plays an admirable series of defensive moves that are re-puted by Draxl's equally fine combinations.

Canadian Championship

2. PQ4 PQ4

Solution

Solution of the ending study by A. Kovalenko published in the previous issue of the chess column:

1. KB6 KN5; 2. KQ5 KB6; 3. KK5 PK6; 4. KxB5P PxP; 5. KK3! attacking Black's most important pawn. However, if Black now plays: 5... PB8-Q (or: R) then a stalemate results which is undoubtedly a very unpleasant surprise for Black! Even if Black tries to avoid the stalemate by means of: 5... PB8-B (or: Nch), White easily draws the game either by capturing Black's KB4 pawn or by immediately enforcing its exchange against his own K2 pawn. See Tuesday's paper for new problem.

3. NQB3 BN5
4. PK5 PQB4
5. PQR3 BxNch
6. Px2 NK2
7. QN4 NB4
8. BQ3 PKR4
9. QR3 PxP
10. BxN Px2
11. QN3 PKN3

So far both players have played this difficult opening well but here, Black should have avoided weakening himself on the Black squares by playing 11... KB1. Now White prevents Black from castling and aims to open up the center even at the cost of some pawns.

12. BN5 QN3
13. NK2 NB3
14. O-O BK3

19. QN3 QR4
20. PQB4! PxP
21. QKB3 PKN4!
22. PQ5 PxN
23. Px2Bch KQB2!

This is the best defence for if 23... PxP then 24. KRQich KB2 25. RQ6 QB4 26. QRQ1 and wins quickly because Whites grip on the Q file.

Again the only defence for if 34... QN4 then 35. R(4)B7 RQR1 36. RxPch! RxR 37. QB8ch RN2 38. QR8ch! and mate next move.

WUSC Report

Student Help and Travel

What is the World University Service? What happened at the conference of WUS of Canada, held last week in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan? Here Howard Mills (III UC), who along with John Burbidge (III Vic) represented Toronto at the conference, attempts to answer these and other questions.

Have you ever thought what it would be like at the U of T if the problem of getting a room was so acute that four or five students would have to share one room 12 feet square, with little or no furniture?

Have you ever thought how difficult studying would be if 20 students had to share one textbook? Have you ever thought how dangerous life would be if one out of every 25 students on this campus was suffering from tuberculosis?

On the other hand, have you ever dreamed of travelling on a planned study tour of Europe, Asia, or the West Indies, at little financial cost to yourself? Have you ever wondered at the possibility of discussing world and university problems in a foreign country with students from all over the world?

If any of these questions have ever crossed your mind, then this writer can tell you how he got the answers at the last World University Service of Canada (WUSC) conference in Saskatoon Saskatchewan.

World University Service—a world-wide organization of university students, faculty, and alumni—had its beginning about 35 years ago, just after World War I, when students in Europe were destitute for books, food, and housing.

Some students in other countries saw their need as an opportunity to be of service to the world university community, and student relief for these war victims was organized under the name WUS. However, as the need died down interest fell off in the project.

Nevertheless, it was evident that student conditions in many of the less privileged countries of the world were extremely inadequate. Hence, there was still a great deal of work for the world student organization to do.

Along with vital relief work, WUS has branched out to provide opportunities for students of all universities, whether rich or poor, to travel abroad. Exchange scholarships are arranged so that Canadian students may trade places with students from other countries for a year, to study and observe student life there. Many other scholarships each year bring students from foreign countries to Canadian camps, to study our way of life while attending university here.

In addition, each summer, the program of WUS for Canadian students includes study tours of foreign countries and study seminars in other lands, for which any university student may apply.

These projects are for you and me, not just the other fellow, or the student who stands first in the class. These projects further the aims of WUS—"to help other students to help themselves" and "to promote international understanding."

This is a big program, and one which requires all students' support. The WUSC Conference is held to set the policy of Canadian universities towards the international program of WUS, and to enable the local WUSC chairman to compare notes and help one another with ideas to raise the thousands of dollars which are required to carry out these plans each year. Several important things happened there this year.

The WUS International Program of Action was decided upon in which Canada is pledged to support four relief projects—a health centre in Japan, for some of the 20,000 T.B. students, and housing projects for Indonesia, and Palestine, each of the projects being allocated 1,500.

It was decided that the controversial communist-dominated International Union of Students should be, as far as Canada is concerned, allowed to hold two seats in the International WUS Assembly in Geneva, provided it shows good faith and co-operation.

It was also decided that next summer an international student seminar would be held in Germany (comparable to that in Japan last summer), with possible study tours to Russia, the rest of Europe, and the Middle East.

In Saskatchewan, where the students have shown their eagerness to support other students financially, the CCF government has given its support also. This support is possible.

If one government is willing to help others get a few of the many privileges that even the poorest Canadian student enjoys, then lets really get behind World University Service of Canada and give our time and money to carry out this great, unselfish, and rewarding program.

Red Feather Assists Our Settlement Saturday Collection Began Campaign

Varsity's $5,000 Red Feather Campaign was pushed into gear Saturday when some $300 was collected at the Float Parade and football game. This figure was released last night by student publicity representative Alan Davidson.

He added that canvassing in each faculty would take place this week commencing Tuesday, and would culminate with a Red Feather concert to be held on Thursday, Oct. 2.

In order that the $5,000 objective may be reached by October 20, the average donation of each student would have to be 50c.

The money is needed to help support the University Settlement, which is one of the 68 Red Feather services in the Greater Toronto area. Children's Aid and Infants' Home workers will be supported in their aim of building up family life in the settlement houses.

This allows the children to remain at home to enjoy the normal healthy surroundings of the Charles St. Home.

Last week a group of five Varsity students visited the modern Charles St. Home. They were conducted on a guided tour by the agency's Dr. Long and saw some aspects of the Home's undertakings; with psychologists they looked through a "one-way" window, as an infant played significantly with a small rubber ball; spoke to unmarried mothers whom the society also aids; and saw the many facilities of the Home which aid in the task of the agency.

The aim of the Red Feather is to build up family life in order to enable children to remain in their homes. If this is not possible, they attempt to provide wholesome family life elsewhere.

Aptitude Tests Off-Used Rod Needed - Smith

Compulsory, non-military national training was advocated by U. of T. President Dr. Sidney Smith, in a feature article in the October 15 issue of Saturday Night.

He also advocated corporal punishment for children—with the aid of a hairbrush—in an article which described his career.

After a page one photograph of the president, the article went on to say that Dr. Smith championed academic freedom—against loyalty tests. He stressed the need to inspire an evangelical rearguard action against "religious illiteracy" on the campus.

Aptitude tests were favored by Dr. Smith in addition to written examinations. He strongly supported the need for technical institutes and junior colleges.

Assuming leadership of Canada's largest University at a difficult time, Dr. Smith had achieved a two million dollar program of building and renovation, the article stated.

In his public life, he has served as President of the Association for Adult Education, of the National Council of YMCA's, and as chairman of the Canadian Youth Commission.

He urged a better grasp of the underlying principles of democracy, and in conclusion Dr. Smith appealed for preservation of the humanities in a technological age.

Varsity Ph. D. Candidates Awarded 4 Fellowships

Four research fellowships totaling $8,000 have been awarded to Ph.D. candidates of the U of T. It was learned yesterday.

The awards, part of the Union Carbide Canada Ltd. $50,000 annual scholarship program, are "to foster academic research in all branches of the Physical and Social Sciences, and closer relations between educators and industry," said G. W. Patterson, Public Relations manager for Union Carbide.

Mr. Patterson said the company's program, begun last year, would involve giving 12 research fellowships (worth up to $1,500 each) and many undergraduate scholarships (worth $500 each) every year, when it is in full operation.

He named the four Toronto fellowship winners: Gustaf Bolling, who will study in the Dept. of Metallurgical Engineering; Eric Channuch, to do chemical research; Albion Maynes, also in the Dept. of Chemistry; and G. Ramsay Cook, who will study "The political Ideas of J. W. D'afoe, renowned Editor of the Winnipeg Free Press" under Professor D. G. Creighton of the History department.

"The university has full control of the awards; we just provide the money" said Mr. Patterson. "We feel obligated to the universities—we couldn't operate without a continuous supply of graduates. This is why we help out through scholarships."

Mr. Patterson said that the purpose of the grants was to encourage basic research in any field. This is why, he said, that the company—which is itself mainly interested in technological and engineering research—also makes grants in the social sciences.

"The country depends not only on strictly technical operations, but on the social sciences too. The humanity graduate plays an important part in the development of the country—and Union Carbide is interested in this."

UBC Prof. Honoured For Chem. Research

Award of the McCharles Prize to Professor Frank A. Forward, head of the Department of Mining and Metallurgy, University of British Columbia, has been announced by University of Toronto President Sidney Smith.

The prize, which, together with a gold medal is of $1,000 value, goes to Prof. Forward, a graduate in chemical engineering of the University of Toronto, for his work in the invention and development of pressure-leaching processes for the recovery of uranium, nickel, copper and cobalt.

In 1947 Prof. Forward was retained by Sherritt Gordon Mines to develop a new process for the treatment of nickel concentrate from the nickel deposits at Lynn Lake in northern Manitoba. As a result the mines at Lynn Lake, and the refinery at Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta, have been brought into being and are operating successfully.

Presentation of the award will be made on the occasion of the Wallberg Memorial lecture to be given at the University of Toronto November 22.

This prize was designed to encourage research leading to, among other things, improved methods of treating Canadian ores and minerals.

CUP

Runneth-Over

Wolfville, Nova Scotia: The students of Acadia University have acquired a debt of about $12,000—the cost of the new extension to their Student Union Building. The university loaned the money to the Student Union, interest free, and the extension has already been built. By adding five dollars to the student union fees of all students, it is expected that the debt will be paid off in approximately five years.

Ann Arbor, Michigan: An outlay of over one hundred million dollars is planned for the next five years by the University of Michigan. The biggest item on the program (about three quarters of the total amount) is allotted for new construction of educational facilities.

And also from the University of Michigan comes the news that a new $4,000,000 dormitory for student housing is to be built—probably next summer. The new dorm will house 1,000 students and will probably be turned over to the women.

Fredericton, New Brunswick: As engineering students make up nearly half the student body at the University of New Brunswick, a new engineering building is scheduled for construction almost immediately. The new building is the major part of the latest construction program recently announced by the U of NB President.

Edmonton, Alberta: A welcoming party for the freshmen of the University of Alberta was sponsored by the city of Edmonton. It is the first city in Canada to do such a thing.

The city threw a big square dance for the students in the baseball park. Refreshments were provided free of charge, and students were transported to and from the dance by city buses.

Durham, North Carolina: A new type of pep rally, a funeral service to be exact, was tried out at Duke University. The service was ostensibly for the son of William, and Mary. The Duke team was playing the William and Mary Indians the next day.

Appropriate funeral music was played, and the head cheerleader officiated.

Duke students have been expressing concern over the lack of spirit and support evident at the university. Apparently they are trying new angles, in an effort to spark up a little more interest and enthusiasm.

St. John's, New Brunswick: The Newfie Muse, after a silence of one year, is publishing again. The Muse is the student newspaper of the Memorial University of Newfoundland, and a member of Canadian University Press.

Closing date for the Canada-wide NFCUS art competition is this Friday, Oct. 21, said co-chairman Marilyn Salter yesterday.

The date was previously announced as Nov. 15.

Medals will be given for the best work in each of oil-painting, water-colours and tempers, drawings and prints. The $200 prize goes to the winner of all four classes.

Masked Medsmen Bomb Skule Float Cannon Untouched In Teary Attack

Some damage was caused to the Engineering float when it was attacked by a group of medsmen last Saturday, in the annual Blue and White home-coming float parade.

Medsmen, armed with gas masks, home-made tear gas bombs, and flour bombs, surprised the engineering float on Yonge St. The attack, planned from away back, was organized to find and steal the Skule Cannon, said Dave Price, treasurer of the Medical Society.

"The main part of the float was not damaged," said Gord Kelly, first vice-president of the Engineering society.

"But they took off all the extra polish — the details that add that little extra touch."

He said that the wiring for the flashing lights had been pulled apart, and the cardboard uniforms of some of the members had been ruined. One girl was dragged off the float and thrown in the gutter in an attempted kidnapping, he said. "They couldn't get her away, yet they wouldn't let her go," said Kelly.

"They caught us flat-footed," Kelly remarked. "We expected an attack on the cannon, but we didn't think of an attack on the float." The cannon was not brought out during any part of the parade.

"We had planned to bring it out on the campus. We didn't because we wanted to avoid any further brawls in the actual Float parade," Kelly said. He added that the Blue and White Society requested them to avoid any retaliatory measures or any further trouble.

"The engineers had a good float," said Dave Price. "It was unfortunate that incidents developed the way they did, especially as the cannon was not there," he added.

"The whole affair was prompted by a search for the cannon. Any damage caused to the float was the result of group enthusiasm," he said.

"Pretty poor," was the comment of Ron Wintrob, also of the Faculty of Medicine, and one of the organizers of the Float Parade. Damage to the float "was not to the credit of the Medical Faculty," he said. "The engineers had a very good float," he commented.

"This sort of thing should be stopped immediately or it might create a precedent," said Tom Thompson, chairman of the Blue and White Society. "If the raiding of floats enroute went on, there's no telling where it might stop. It might snowball beyond all proportions," he said.

Referring to the keys of the engineering truck, which were stolen and later returned, he said, "Trucks are hard enough to get. It makes it all the more difficult when there are attacks on the trucks themselves."

"Extry, extry" cries Truth Maker In-Chief of The Verity as Engineers stand on the defensive behind their cannon in the Float Parade. Miss Red Feather travels courtesy of a Commerce cab, while the U.C. JCR proves even more lively and clowns cavort on the campus green. The winning St. Mike's float (lower right-hand corner) showed two possibilities: an ultra-modern or cave man existence.

Train Derailed Impact Shocks Returning Fans

About 100 McGill students, returning Sunday night from the Varsity - McGill football game in Toronto, were shaken up in a CNR passenger train wreck Sunday. The two rear coaches which they occupied did not leave the tracks although the first one was turned partially on its side.

All the McGill students returning from the weekend, including the team and band, were on the train.

Mr. Shackell, secretary of the Student's Executive Council at McGill, who suffered a knee injury, described it as a "horrifying experience."

The train left Toronto at 4 p.m. Sunday and was due in Montreal at 10:15. The accident occurred about 9:30, when the flyer collided with a stalled auto at a level crossing near Riviere Beaudette, Que., derailing nine of the 15 cars. About 50 people were injured.

Most people in the leading coaches were tossed from their seats by the impact. A little girl was found hanging from a coat hook. Many hacked their way out of the overturned cars with axes and other emergency equipment.

The car stalled on the track just as the Toronto-Montreal train was approaching. The occupants unsuccessfully attempted to push it off the tracks, but the train was approaching too fast. They managed to escape without injury.

A passenger of one of the front cars described the crash as "awful." The first thing I heard was a little girl calling "mommy mommy" he said. "I looked up and she was hanging from a coat-hook by her neck."

Decry Med Raid

Further comment on the Meds raid on the Engineering Float last Saturday came from Medsman Roy Wintrob, one of the organizers of the float contest.

"It was pretty poor," said Wintrob, "because the engineers didn't have enough guts to put their cannon on the float and the engineering float was damaged. I thought SPS had a good float."

UC Better Left In Bottles Decision In Spirited Debate

The spirit of old UC should not be uncorked, decided the University College parliament, who yesterday defeated the motion 56-18. The debate was sponsored by the UC Literary society, to inaugurate the reopening of the

Stratford Actors May Be Guests At Edinburgh

Following a Board meeting held Oct. 15, the Governors of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival announced that they had received an invitation from officials of the Edinburgh Festival to have the Stratford company appear in Edinburgh next summer.

The Canadian Festival, now entering its fourth season, is already preparing to launch the Festival in New York this winter in co-operation with Producers Theatre. This will be the first time the Festival company has played outside of Stratford, Canada.

JCR New Look

First reaction of this co-ed is to test the chesterfields of UC's newly redecorated Junior Common Room. The JCR, which was opened officially yesterday by UC's Principal Jeanneret, has new coffee tables, red, green and cream chesterfields, and red curtains.

New JCR Initiated Jeanneret Officiated

The new Junior Common Room to accommodate the 1,200 students of University College was opened today by Principal Jeanneret.

He addressed some 200 students sitting briefly the source of the funds which amounted to about 9,000 dollars.

Al Millard, head of the special redecorating committee, had made an appeal for more funds through Mr. Jeanneret to the President of the University. This sum, amounting to 3,000 dollars, was left over from a grant given by the University to University College for their centennial in 1953. About 700 dollars of this fund is still left.

Furniture repairs and additions took the largest amount of money, said Millard. The light new floor which is waxed and polished by the University every night amounted to 700 dollars, he added.

Millard, who started the plan, put great emphasis on the necessity of keeping the Junior Common Room clean.

"The new atmosphere appears much more conducive to student activity than the previous deplorable condition," the principal said.

The bright leather chairs, brilliant red curtains and light-colored floor add to the airiness of the room. The snack-bar is located at the west end of the room on one side, and on the other, the new Literary and Athletic Society Offices.

Marg Penman, speaking for the government, said that the spirit of UC had in the past been more spirits than spirit and expressed the hope that this would be replaced by spirituality.

Speaker for the opposition, Bailey Iscove, felt that the government was probably referring to liquor, and stated her agreement with ancient Greek philosophers, who advocated temperance.

Tom Hammond argued for the affirmative that UC spirit was not something in bottles, but was like ivy, which "climbs the walls and creeps in at night."

Final speaker for the opposition, Stan Shiss, maintained that UC had no spirit and didn't need any. He felt that school spirit was repugnant to the aims of a non-sectarian liberal arts college. He stated that the aim of UC was not to create mass spirit, but to develop the individual.

"We are pleased with both the turnout and the quality of the debate" said Publicity director of the UC Women's Undergraduate Association, Rhonda Strauss.

NFCUS Cards For All For Better Xmas Shopping Predicted At Conference

You — along with some 40,000 other Canadian university students — will soon be given a wallet-size card to prove you're a member of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

The cards may help to get cut prices on a variety of goods used by students.

The new cards will be about the size of the Admit-to-lecture cards carried by all U. of T. students. The exact format has not yet been designed but that matter, the national NFCUS conference in Edmonton decided last week, will be left in the hands of the organization's new President, Peter Martin.

Martin, a third-year U. of T. student, now on a year's leave from study here, was commissioned by the conference to have something prepared immediately and hustled off to the printers.

The cards may be ready by Christmas, one NFCUS official hinted.

"One of the main purposes of the cards," Michael Shoemaker, one of two Toronto delegates to the five-day Edmonton NFCUS pow-wow said, "will be to get discounts on certain items used by students — books, clothes, and theatre tickets for example."

Two Canadian Universities already have discount services. At Halifax and Hamilton, store-owners, in cooperation with student officials, have agreed to grant cut prices on certain goods to students at Dalhousie and McMaster.

Shoemaker said that progress in this direction was being made on the Toronto campus.

Discount cards held by students at Dalhousie and McMaster, Shoemaker said, would be confiscated when the NFCUS membership cards are issued from head office at Ottawa.

A life insurance plan for all card-holding members of NFCUS may also go into effect this fall if plans formulated at the Edmonton convention go ahead.

Briefly, the set-up is this: The policies will be worth $10,000 and it will cost students $37.50-per-year for a 10-year period. After that, the premium rates will meet up to $144-per-year.

But the Dominion General Benefits corporation of Winnipeg, Man., says the program makes definite savings for students. An insurance plan such as this was outlined, it was pointed out at the conference, has been in effect for some four years for members of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Interns.

When last week's conference wound up the insurance plan was left with the University of Manitoba.

The Manitoba Students will immediately for an auditor's report on the feasibility of the plan. If the auditor's report is good, a "substantial" sum will be

Backroom NFCUS

Thursday night's session of the NFCUS conference exploded into a wild flurry of charges and counter-charges, as University of Alberta Student Council President John Bracco blasted a "back-room bull-session" for "plotting" to overthrow NFCUS.

The incident occurred when several delegates — including Toronto's Mike Shoemaker, retired to a back room of the U. of A. student union — where the conference was being held — to discuss NFCUS policy among themselves, while the main convention was still in session.

Bracco then charged the "smoke-filled back-room" with plotting dire plans for NFCUS. He convinced the rest of the delegates that he and Peter Martin should be sent to the plotters' room to break up the plan. As Martin and Bracco marched out of the conference room to the back room, the delegates sung "La Marseillaise."

The offending "plotters" protested on their return that they had only been discussing their personal opinions on NFCUS, and on women, and no palace coup was intended. Bracco also launched a series of charges against Clyde Batten, Varsity News Editor who also attended the conference. These charges were later withdrawn.

The meeting broke up in complete disorder at 10:30 p.m.

New Signboard Soon To Grace SAC Building

The Students' Council building will soon be graced with a modernistic red and white bulletin board.

Ted Siveppiper, IV, Vice-President of the Public Relations Committee of the SAC, said the new bulletin board will be available to general student notices and SAC notices. It will be located in the SAC building.

The board will be made of steel frame, and will be provided at a low price by the Dominion Bridge Co., Ltd., of Montreal.

The board will be available to all students.

No Victorian Outlook At Vic As Pinball Machine Wanted

Strait-laced customs increased the population in the Victorian age and the same may happen to Victoria College if it continues its prudish outlook — hinted Gerald Wiley at last night's meeting of the Vic Debating Parliament.

The session was called to discuss the resolution "Vic is Victorian."

Supporting the resolution, Mr. Wiley contended that enforced respectability was useless since students were not likely to do anything they had not already done.

The second speaker, Barbara Slaty of the opposing team, argued that there was no similarity between the Vic of one hundred years ago and the Vic of to-day. She stated further that there was actually less restriction on liquor than there is now.

Donald Cock, the third speaker, criticized the Vic architecture, the tables on food and backing into the women's residence, and the structures of portland speakers and the discussion of social and religious.

He suggested that pinball machines be installed in the new residence to provide extra revenue for edible food.

Robert Saunders concluded that the poll he had taken showed that 75.4% thought Vic not Victorian, 12.6% had no opinion, and 12% thought Vic Victorian.

The debate ended with the defeat of the resolution by a vote of 60-17 followed by the serving of refreshments at Wymindwood.

A Correction On Dr. Gordis' Speech

An article entitled "Religion Impedes Human Progress" appeared on page 8 of last Thursday's Varsity.

This article gives an account of an address by Dr. Robert Gordis, an eminent Columbia University professor, to a meeting of the campus Hillel Association.

It has been brought to our attention that the account given in this article was not complete or accurate in every respect.

Specifically, the report mentioned that Dr. Gordis described religion as the enemy of human progress, and spoke of the detrimental affects of the "Black Book" of religion. The article also stated that religion had been an ally of war, persecution, and intolerance.

In actual fact, Dr. Gordis said that religion had been the occasion — i.e. the tool — of those obsessed with the lust for power. After explaining the "Black Book" of religion, Dr. Gordis also went on to examine its "Golden Book."

Dr. Gordis condemned those who used the organized forms of religion to their own advantage.

In his speech, Dr. Gordis stressed the contributions which religion has made to man's cultural and scientific heritage. Dr. Gordis also made the point that the positive aspects of religion have far outweighed the negative.

The Editors of The Varsity regret that the incomplete account of Dr. Gordis' lecture may have produced the erroneous impression that Dr. Gordis was "anti-religious."

The Editors hope that Dr. Gordis, an eminent authority in the field of religious knowledge and the Hillel Foundation, the sponsors of his speech, have not suffered any embarrassment as a result of this article.

teachers can't

All United States university students are required to take a scholastic aptitude and intelligence test, which they must pass in order to obtain deferment of their compulsory military service.

Some statistician has taken the trouble to average out the results of these tests according to the type of course attended.

The results were rather startling. Students in Arts or Engineering courses topped all other students, both scoring an average of over 75% on the tests. All the other courses were not far behind, with one exception — Education courses.

Students in Colleges of Education or Teachers' Colleges had an average mark in the low thirties, about half of the average of the rest of the university students.

Baby Blues Meet Rams Bagworth, Karpinski Play

After losing a close 7-5 decision to the Western Colts on Friday, the Baby Blues entertain Ryerson this afternoon at Varsity Stadium. Coach Jack Kennedy will field the same team, although Bob Smart will play with a dislocated shoulder in a brace and likely won't see too much action.

Kennedy was a bit disappointed with his team's showing against the Colts, but feels fairly sure of victory in the return game on October 28th. The Baby Blues lost a great chance to pull the game out of the fire when, with three minutes remaining, they marched from their own forty to the Western four. The ball was directly in front of the posts, and Kennedy sent Stew Winter in with instructions for a field goal attempt. But by the time Winter arrived on the scene, a Varsity player, not realizing the time remaining, had requested that the ball be moved away from the posts. Winter tried a pass which hit the goalpost with a man in the clear. Western took over and held the ball for two downs to end the game.

Don Bagworth and Bill Karpinski, who haven't seen too much action with the Blues so far, will be at Kennedy's disposal for the game today, and will likely see lots of action. The squad is out to atone for Friday's defeat and on familiar ground should come up with a great game. Starting time 2:30.

Dents Down Forestry

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Ray Laine and Ed O'Connor spelled double trouble for Forestry as the two hard-running backs led Dents to a 15-0 win over the foresters. The game was played in a steady downpour which forced both teams to stick mainly on the ground.

In the first quarter, Dents marched 70 yards up the field to score. Laine, O'Connor and Norm Woods shared the ball-carrying with Laine going over. End Al Vaichulis of Dents blocked John McClelland's kick on the Forestry 5 yard line in the second frame and Telesmecki fell on the loose ball in the end zone for the score. Late in the 3rd quarter, Don McInnis of Dents recovered a fumble on the foresters' 40. Jim Gajda ran 10 yards for first down and O'Connor ran 29 yards off-tackle to the one yard line. He then plunged for the TD. All 3 converts were unsuccessful.

Forestry's only chance for a score came in the 1st stanza when a high snap went over O'Connor's head. Forestry took over on the 25 of the Dents. However, two running plays and an incomplete pass resulted in a 20 yard loss. After this, Forestry was continually bottled up.

Curtis Sprague and Glen Crombie were Forestry's best halves while Norm Baird and Jordan Johnston impressed on the line. Jim Sweeney, Jerry Giblon, Al Vaichulis and Mike Cassels were Dents' best linemen. Quarter Fawcett and Don Smith quartered well for the dentists. Despite the wet ball, both Dents' O'Connor and Forestry's McClelland kicked a fine game, each averaging almost 40 yards a punt.

Fusco Ineligible St. Mike's Face Football Replay

Hard-running St. Mike's half-back Jude Fusco was ruled ineligible at last night's Intramural Sports Committee meeting, on the basis of the Interfaculty's residence rule.

With this in mind the ISC elected to have a replay of last Friday's game in which the Irish defeated the Trinity Black Panthers 6-0. Fusco's services were used to great advantage in the powerful St. Mike's ground attack, although the college was unaware of his status.

In Interfaculty soccer action yesterday afternoon Skule Firsts defaulted to Victoria in the only scheduled game.

Volleyball action saw Vic II overcome McCaul House 6-15, 15-5, 15-13, while Emmanuel whipped Architecture 15-8, 15-9.

One lacrosse game had St. Mike's A's walloping Meds 9-4, with Kevin Wheeler scoring four goals for the Irish. Jim McKinnon added two, and Terry Wheeler, Ron Tighe, and Kurt Russell one each. Kerr, Smith, Papsin, and Bull scored for the doctors.

Famous Poet Says New Poetry Vague

"Poets of to-day are satisfying the public's taste for crossword puzzles," said Roy Campbell in a talk at St. Michael's College last night. The noted South African poet, referring to the obscurity of modern poetry, added that they prefer a shallow, muddy pool to a deep spring which is crystal-clear.

Mr. Campbell said that writers of to-day tend to isolate themselves from reality, and to ignore their surroundings. Speaking of his own poetry, Mr. Campbell said that he was dependent on the present for a living, and gathered his inspiration from his surroundings. He illustrated this by reading some of his best poetry, all of which was based on his personal experiences.

Mr. Campbell was born in South Africa, spent a good deal of time in England, and during the thirties was in contact with the group of young poets who have done much to shape modern verse. He lived for a time in southern France, became an expert bull-fighter, lived in Spain and fought in the Spanish Civil War. During the last war he served in Africa with the British forces. Since the war he has lived in Portugal and England, and has held posts with the BBC.

Among Mr. Campbell's books of verse are Talking Bronco, Flowering Rifle, an epic on the Spanish War, and an autobiography, Light on a Dark Horse.

He termed Beaumarchais a "poet of the mind."

Check Mate Chess Problem

By FRANK ANDERSON and GEORGE BERNER

Another fine example of efficient saving maneuvers even with the extremely reduced material on the board which again convinces us that under certain circumstances the arsenal of our defence possibilities is nearly inexhaustible is the following study by Reti:

White King at KR8
Black pawn KR4
Black King QR3
White pawn at QB6

White To Play And Draw
At the first glance the above position seems to be hopelessly lost for White. The Black pawn seems to be beyond the reach of the White King whereas the Black King is just about to capture the White pawn.

However incredible it may sound White can still save the game! Do you know HOW he can achieve it?

The experts among our readers might find the above position too simple. Therefore we humbly suggest that they try (by using the same maneuvers) to solve a similar "incredible" and slightly more complicated position by the same author:

White: KKR5, PQB6 (2); Black: KQR3, Pawns—KR3, KN2, KB3 (4); White to play and draw!

(Correct solutions follow in the next issue of the chess column.)

IUS Man In Hart House

Jeri Pelikan, the delegate of the International Union of Students, a communist dominated organization, chats with the Warden of Hart House, Joe McCully, and Clyde Batten, News Editor of The Varsity. Mr. Pelikan and Mr. Batten have both just returned from the NFCUS conference in Edmonton.

IUS Chief Claims

Life Of Canadian Represents West For Communists

"All the communist countries are looking to Canada to see if your way of life will work" said Jeri Pelikan, president of the communist-dominated International Union of Students, who was in Toronto yesterday, on his way home to Czechoslovakia. He was attending the NFCUS conference in Edmonton.

In emphasizing the need for increased cooperation between students in this time of relaxed international tensions, Mr. Pelikan said, "We must remember that the things which separate us are the products of men and can be changed."

He said students in Iron Curtain countries were more involved in politics than their Canadian counterparts.

"Life there," he said, "is complicated with problems of existence and welfare. It is not possible, as it seems to be here, for the student to cut himself off from the political life of society."

"In many of the countries where student organizations are members of IUS, the problems of life and social development are of paramount importance. When even the possibility of getting an education is threatened, it is no wonder students become involved in politics."

When asked about the controversial relations between NFCUS and IUS, Mr. Pelikan replied: "I did not expect to be able to get NFCUS to join the IUS, but I did hope to establish more co-operation on a practical basis."

NFCUS voted last year not to join the IUS, Canadian universities, particularly the French ones, objecting to communist predominance in the international organization. However NFCUS will continue to send observers to IUS conferences.

At the NFCUS conference, Mr. Pelikan presented nine proposals for co-operation between the two organizations. None were accepted, but he said, "I think that being here I have done something to increase Canadian students' appreciation of the situation in my part of the world."

While looking down from one of Toronto's highest buildings, Mr. Pelikan commented on the Canadian scene: "Your cars must be a social standard as well as filling a need. In my country the great problem is housing space—I guess you solve that by buying cars."

He was unable to comment on Canadian women because, he said, his hosts had not taken the trouble to introduce him to any.

Television Focus On Consecration In Trinity Chapel

The consecration of the new Trinity College Chapel will take place on November 20 and will be televised from coast to coast.

Rev. F. H. Cosgrave will preach a sermon at the consecration. Father Cosgrave is an ex-Provost of Trinity College, and has just retired from the Trinity staff.

Outside of the cathedrals in New York City, the quarter-million dollar chapel will probably be the only piece of Gothic architecture built in the traditional style in North America, said Eric Arthur, professor of Architectural Design here.

The architect of the chapel, Sir Giles Scott of England, designed and built Liverpool cathedral and is now considered the world's leading authority on Gothic style. The style in which the chapel has been constructed is similar to the perpendicular Gothic of Trinity college itself.

The South side of the College is in the architectural style of the reformation era of Edward VI, and the south side of the quadrangle is designed in the Elizabethan style at the time of the Protestant ascendancy in the Church of England, said Professor Anthony Adamson of the school of Architecture, is now exemplified in the architecture of Trinity College. The new chapel represents a style contemporary with the that of the Roman Church when the Anglican Church was founded.

Construction on the chapel has been going on for over a year. The main part of the chapel is now complete and in current use.

Free Trip To Queen's Game Provided By Beneficent Army

Want an expense-paid weekend in Kingston? Want to see the Varsity-Queen's game at Queen's? There is an opportunity for most of the male students of the university to be in Kingston for the Queen's Weekend with transportation, meals and accommodation gratis.

As the guests of the Canadian Army their only expenses for the weekend will be the cost of the game ticket and other miscellaneous entertainment.

Besides free time for the game and social activities, the itinerary will include visits to the Royal Canadian 'School of Signals,' life Electrical and Mechanical Engineering School, and the Royal Military College.

Buses will leave COTC headquarters on St. George St. at 6 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 28, and will return at 5 p.m. on Sunday. The students will be quartered for the weekend at the Royal Canadian Electrical and Mechanical Engineering School.

This offer is open to all students eligible for the COTC. Major Gunter, Resident Staff Officer, asks all interested students to contact him at 119 St. George no later than today.

Farouk And Peron 'Refugees' UN High Commissioner Says

Former king Farouk and Juan Peron, both men without countries, are technically "refugees," according to the UN's High Commissioner for Refugee Affairs. This statement was made by Dr. G. J. van Heuven Goedhart at Falconer Hall yesterday.

Dr. Goedhart is the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. His career previous to his present position has been varied, to say the least. He has practised law, edited a newspaper and worked in the Dutch underground during the last war.

In January 1951, he became the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

One of the great problems, he feels, is in finding a new life for the 350,000 refugees in Western Europe. Apart from emigration to Canada, the U.S. or Australia, his department has encouraged integration within the countries in which they are presently located.

The Ford Foundation, he feels, has been invaluable in this work. It contributed $3,000,000 in 1952.

Some of the work done with this has been:

- 1. The buying and equipping of farms for refugees in Austria.
- 2. The establishment of a bank in W. Germany where refugees

System Of Radio World's Largest - Chief of Police

Ontario's Provincial Police mobile radio system is the largest police radio network in the world and is still expanding. Prof. J. E. Reid, Associate Professor of Electrical Engineering here, said Thursday night.

Professor Reid, who helped organize the OPP radio system, spoke to the U of T Radio Club. He said the Provincial police force has 1,700 men in 16 police districts with headquarters at Toronto.

There are 17 fixed stations, each 230 watts, spread across the province at distances up to 100 miles. Routes to police cars, Dr. Reid said average about 45 miles.

Forty-two OPP detachments have 69-watt stations with ranges up to 30 miles, he said.

can obtain loans on easy terms.

3. The assistance given to student refugees in continuing their education.

4. The establishing of six vocational schools for technical training. Of particular concern are the refugees who are ineligible for immigration. Because of age, tubercular spots, a missing finger or a crippled family-member, some 15,000 refugees are stranded in Western Europe. Sweden has been one of the few nations to offer help. The Swedish Government accepted 60 tubercular refugees and their families without any assistance from UN funds. Few other nations, however, have done much in their assistance.

Canada stands fifth in contributions towards refugee aid. The Canadian Government has provided $125,000, while such countries as the Netherlands, Australia and Great Britain have offered more.

"These people," exclaimed Goedhart, "have given up everything behind the Iron Curtain, to live as free men. They are not beggars and they prefer to borrow and pay back than to accept charity."

Instead of deprecating them, he feels the Western Nations should offer much more assistance.

Cal Jackson Plays In Convocation Hall Red Feather Holds Noon Hour Concert

The Cal Jackson Quartet, a jazz group well known to University students, will play here at a noon-hour Red Feather concert Thursday to wind up a current $5,000 campus drive. The scheme was announced last night by Al Davidson, publicity director of the campaign on campus.

Jackson and his group have recently returned from a trip to Basin Street in New York and are heading down there again next month. They have appeared on a transcontinental radio network this past summer and have made two recordings.

Many faculties are contributing musical talent of varying quality to the concert, Davidson said. The Lady Godiva Memorial Band promises a new number for the occasion and a "recorder band" from U.C. will perform on the "oldest and noblest of musical instruments."

Other colleges and student groups are contributing acts to round out the program, which takes place from 12:30 to 2:00 p.m. Thursday in Convocation Hall. Admission is free, advised Davidson.

Murray Mogan (Law), master of ceremonies for the show, remarked that there was still time for other groups to participate. There will be a meeting of representatives of all participating faculties in the S.A.C. office at 1:30 p.m. today.

Most faculties are winding up their campaigns tomorrow and more complete results will be announced at the concert. Initial returns from Victoria College indicate that Victoria students have contributed more per capita than they did last year, he said.

Some faculties, owing to technical difficulties such as field trips, will be unable to finish their campaigns until next week, so that final returns will not be available for several days, Davidson said.

Sandy Macpherson, Student Service Commission Chairman, stated that "although the objective of the campaign is 50c per student, no amount is too large or too small. Every contribution will be helpful." Any students not contacted by Faculty Reps or who are temporarily financially embarrassed can leave their contributions at the S.A.C. office.

Speaking to Varsity staffers here last night, Davidson said he hoped all students would contribute to the drive. "I know students don't have much extra money," he said, "but I don't think we are asking too much when we want $5,000."

The drive here on campus is being held in conjunction with a greater Red Feather drive being staged throughout the city. Businesses, clubs and individuals, are being asked to put their shoulders behind the wheel to the tune of several million dollars.

BABY BLUES WHITEWASH RAMS 29-0

Reid, Dann Lead Ground Offence Joynt Scores Two Touchdowns

BY JOHN BROOKS

Led by the hard driving of Bob Dann and the spectacular broken-field running of Tim Reid, the Baby Blues rolled to a 20-0 victory over the Ryerson Rams yesterday at Varsity Stadium. Dann's hard-charging offensive play, especially in the second half, was invaluable, while Reid personally accounted for over 150 yards and eight of the Intermediates' 28 first downs.

The Blues received and then marched down the field, only to be stopped up by the Rams on the two yard line. On Ryerson's first play, Sid Biliski was trapped in the end zone by Don Cornish, and the safety touch gave Varsity a 2-0 lead. Ryerson took over, and after two incomplete passes were forced to kick, and the Baby Blues had possession on the Ryerson 40. Larry Joynt struck Larry Stacey with a pass that carried play to the five, and on the next play bootlegged the ball around the right end for a touchdown. The convert was wide.

The University men were unable to score until late in the second quarter, as penalties nullified any opportunities they might have had. Ryerson, in possession of the ball on its own 25, was called for illegal interference on a screen pass play and lost the ball for the penalty. After a short gain and an incomplete pass, Joynt tried a field goal which sailed wide of the uprights. However, Biliski was rouged on the kick, and the score read 8-0. In the following ten plays, no fewer than five Ryerson players were injured and forced to leave the field.

With Varsity holding the ball on the Rams 14, a freak play resulted in the second Baby Blue touchdown. On a pass and run option to the left, Joynt fumbled the ball before the play really got started. The backfield was in motion to the left, and as the Ryerson players followed the supposed play in that direction, Joynt picked up the ball and raced around the right end to score standing up. A sleeper pass netted Ryerson 60 yards as the half ended.

The Kennedy-men started off strongly in the second half, as they marched fifty yards for their third major. Tim Reid skirted, the right end standing up to boost the score to 18-0. A beautiful flying block by wingback Ted Lansky gave Reid a clear field for his run, and the block by Lansky was just one of the many he executed during the game. Joynt finally managed to get a convert, and the third quarter ended with the score at 19-0.

Ryerson put up its best effort in the final frame, but the Baby Blues were undaunted by first downs which carried the ball deeply into their own end. With about five minutes remaining, Joynt kicked a single out of bounds in the end zone to make the final score 20-0.

Although the Baby Blues definitely carried play all the way, the poor condition of the Rams was a major factor in the win. Varsity had 28 first downs to the Rams 5. Ryerson completed seven out of the 23 passes they tried and had three intercepted. Winter and Joynt had a six out of fifteen record with two interceptions. The Baby Blues play Ryerson again in the Stadium on November 4th to kick off the Western weekend festivities.

Soccer Seniors Whip McMaster Green Counts 3

The powerful Blue soccer squad travelled to Hamilton yesterday with a victory cry on their lips. A victory they gained as they trampled over the hapless McMaster Marauders 10-0. The issue, if it could be called such, was never in doubt. Going into the second half the Blues led 4-0. The Baby Blues also handled the junior Maecmen with comparative ease, winning 8-0.

McMaster's display was extremely poor. The players showed little effort and after the Blues had scored several goals, the Maecmen were not even trying to win. Their main object seemed to be to score just one goal. They were much worse than last year when Blues won 5-2.

This was the third shutout for the Blues in four games, quite an accomplishment, even if not a record. The only goal scored against the Blues occurred during the game with McGill last week which the Blues won 4-1.

So easy was the Blues' victory that the forwards frequently changed positions with defence-men and vice versa. As a result three defence-men scored goals.

Rod Green was the leading scorer with three goals, Ed Bracht scored two, and Andy Rava, Ulo Sarna, Ron Finch, Ron Williams, and Ernie Ounpuu each scored one.

In the Intermediate game, Jim St. Rose and Wynia Dolf scored two goals each, Dave Wood, Andy Tit, Hank Van Bers and Mike Uzumeri each scored one.

Watt Sits Out With Injury As Blues Tangle Redmen

Blue footballers are on the limp again. Tackle Al Watt is sidelined for the rest of the season with torn cartilages suffered in last Saturday's game against McGill. John Casey will replace him. Guard Earl Ford has hit the injury trail, with sensitive side muscles. Fullback Don Cheeseman has a chipped elbow. Al Riva, a defensive standout thus far, has once again been sidelined with boils. During the pre-season training period, Riva missed the intra-squad game because of a boil, and last week he was out with hives.

One reason for consolation in the Blue camp, however, is the return of Don Johnston and Don Smith, who both missed last week's game.

Meanwhile the Blues will be preparing for their game against McGill in Montreal this Saturday. Behind the passing of quarterback Dick Carr, the Redmen seemed to come alive last Saturday. His 12 out of 23 completions in the second half, with John Bennett as his main target, were enough to baffle the Blues for a while.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

Up in the Press Box Saturday we had the pleasure of hearing some smooth comments thrown around by officials and reporters. One of the funniest occurred just as the Blues were about to score one of their six touchdowns. Gerry Sutherland, spotting for the Blues, turned to Harry Griffiths, Director of Athletics at McGill, and said: "Do you need a centre, Mr. Griffiths?" "How fast can you dress?" replied Harry. This, of course, reminded us of Harry Griffiths' efforts to organize a strong McGill contingent by signing the best linemen possible. With Toronto last year, Harry has certainly shown his high appointment is justifiable.

While watching the game we were impressed, perhaps not by McGill's strength (because they haven't got much) but by their improvement over Redmen teams of recent years. Their defence has improved considerably. After three games last year the Redmen had 114 points scored against them, compared to 69 points against this year.

McGill's improvement is a direct reflection on the diligent work of their Athletic Director. One position hard to fill being quarterback, Harry started to shop around and came up with Dick Carr, Columbia's ace signal-caller. But Harry probably said to himself: what good's a quarterback if there aren't good linemen to back him? So Harry scouted around and nabbed two former Ticats, Buster Brown and Ron Murphy.

On Saturday one of the three principals stood out. With his slinging arm cocked and eye sharpened, Carr showed his worth. His accurate passes were an indication that, with the right receivers, McGill could be a scoring threat. As it is now the Redmen have scored only a total of 28 points, and are in a last place deadlock with Western, who have scored 12 points. When the College loop opened, many of us gave McGill a fighting chance. In spite of their poor showing there is always the thought that, if Harry Griffiths increases his ranks next year as he's done this year, he might come up with a contender.

But What About Those Blues?

Three wins and no losses with six points, and on top of the heap. At this time last year the Blues were in third place with three points. Western, powered by Don Getty, Gino Fracas, and John Girvin, and Queen's with their 3-S backfield of Ron Stewart, Bill Surphlis, and Gary Schreider were dynamiting and dominating the league. In spite of fellows like Steve Oneschuk, Bob Pinkney, Phil Muntz, Bob Kimoff, Rich Bethune and Al Riva, the Blues couldn't get rolling.

The picture has changed. Name a first string backfielder and you'll probably be naming someone who's been playing well both offensively and defensively. Let's hope it stays that way.

Trackmen Defend Crown Today

Will the Varsity Senior Track and Field team succeed in winning the intercollegiate championship for the third consecutive year? This question will be answered this afternoon in London when the Blue and White squad faces its strongest opposition in some time. The Western, McGill and Queen's crews are completely revamped.

The Blues stack up very favourably, having their best-balanced team in recent years. Strong performances are expected from Dick Harding, Doug Mason and Bruce Faulkner in the sprints, and Bill Gelling, Bruce Hughes, and Bill Vary in the distance events. Ken Money, Bill McLeod and Bob Hamilton appear the best bets to pick up points for the field contingent.

The Intermediates, smarting under last year's defeat to McMaster, are up to regain their former supremacy which, until last year, had been undisturbed for fifty years. Such performers as Arnie Deacon, Bob Hunter, and Mike Berger are expected to lead the Baby Blues back to the title.

Senior entrants in to-day's final include Varsity, Queen's, Western and McGill, while Varsity, McMaster, OAC, Waterloo and Ryerson are vying for the Intermediate honours.

One of the meet's interesting points is the reunion of five of East York Collegiate's TDAAA track champions of 1953 and 1954. This includes Varsity's Walt Mladinow, Keith Stokes, Bruce Hughes, Bob Hunter and Western's Neil Desborough.

on the sideline

BY FLO MIDDLETON

The aspiring Robin Hoods of the campus are reminded to take a close look at their respective college athletic bulletin boards, and if they look closely enough, I think they will find that there is a notice to the effect that all girls who are interested in archery are to sign their names for the interfaculty tournament which is to be held Thursday at the football bowl. How about it girls? Have you added your signature to the list?

With last year's champion archers from St. Hilda's, Doreen Toland and Kay Sladen, having graduated, it is anyone's guess as to who will star in the Thursday meet and for that matter what college will shoot its way to the Interfaculty Archery Championship. Practices have been held for these female William Tell's every lunch hour this week at Varsity Stadium.

Each college or faculty will be required to send a two-lady team and the archers will shoot 18 arrows at 40 yds, 30 yds, and 20 yds, which is not as difficult as the intercollegiate trials which call for 24 arrows at 50 yds, 40 yds and 30 yds. The practices having been well attended and the competition having been quite keen, the meet promises to be one of the best in many a season. Archery has become increasingly popular at Toronto as has been shown by the number of girls who have continued to shoot after having learned how to handle a bow and arrow in first year gym classes.

Last week end, McGill swept to victory in the Intercollegiate Archery championships at Guelph, while our Toronto team of Liz Agnew, Marilyn Chartiers, Marj Reid and Pat Humphries took the fifth place standing.

University Women Fencers Have First Meeting Today

En garde! Fencers take note - there is to be a meeting of the University of Toronto women's fencing club for all those that are interested in the sport of the sabres to-day at 5 in the Household Science Building or for those more intimately associated with the Physical and Education of this Institution, the exact locale is the Common room of the Lilian Massey Building.

The meeting is an organizational one for all girls who come under the classification of experienced fencers. Believe it or not, you are included in this group if you have had one year of swords in first year PHE classes. The grouping, however, is narrowed to the point that it does not include girls who are just curious and want to learn this romantic sport of the sixteenth century. For all types who are just interested and who have never held a weapon in their hand. I recommend that you hustle over to Falconer Hall and sign yourself up for some weekly lessons and then maybe next year you can join the fencing club as an "experienced fencer."

This year, it is hoped that the members of the club will be able to attend the Alpar Fencing Academy through their club membership, and thus they will have the opportunity of challenging expert fencers.

This extra practice will stand the University of Toronto fencers in good stead for the intercollegiate bouts, which will be held this year in Toronto with McGill and Western competing.

Interfac Results

In interfaculty soccer yesterday SPS III defeated Trinity B 5-0. In the one-sided affair Wood scored two goals. Gelf, McLean and Van Loon each scored one.

reflex or reflection?

If you've been to classes you may have seen what we've seen:

Rows and rows of robot students writing as a reflex, but without reflection.

We wonder why students refuse really to listen to their professors once they manage to drag themselves to lectures. They hear enough to write, but it is only a mechanical hearing, like that of an electric transcribing machine.

They disconnect their thinking from note-taking and hence are unable either to ask or answer intelligent questions or even to take down in note form the point of the lecture rather than the actual words of the professor.

We'll agree that some professors may not be worth the listening, but we can't believe that all the bad eggs are in any one basket.

We often hear students complain about the lack of life in a certain professor. It's common knowledge that so-and-so is deadly. Everybody says so.

But it rarely occurs to these same students that so-and-so finds them unbearably deadly himself and leaves the class in a mood of utter discouragement.

We have heard one professor liken the experience of lecturing to University of Toronto students to lecturing to a fireplace full of ashes.

We know that the delivery of some professors encourages long-hand dictation, yet with a little thinking resistance even these talking books might be encouraged into some live thought.

A lecture works two ways, and if most of our lectures are dull, it's just possible the reason is that we're dull too.

Degradation

Just exactly what is the purpose of a University initiation?

If we are to take some examples from this year's offering, the answer might very well be "to degrade the freshmen in every possible way."

Are we forgetting that the primary aim of an initiation is to give the freshmen an opportunity to become acquainted with those mature individuals who call themselves "upperclassmen;" to make them feel a part of the university?

The methods by which some of the fraternity men attempted to achieve this noble aim for P & OT freshettes are mildly horrifying.

But perhaps even more horrifying is the reaction of the freshettes. In their fear of not conforming, of not being "good sports," the freshies not only raised no objection to being led through a pit of cow's intestines in bare feet, but even refused to condemn their tormentors later. "After all," said one frosh, "they did go to a lot of trouble to prepare our initiation."

It is interesting to note that none of these trouble-taking fraternities will now admit to leading the girls through the aforementioned articles.

We should think that they would come forth proudly to be congratulated upon their ingenious methods of initiation!

The Morning After . . .

The Smoke Clears

By MICHAEL SHOEMAKER

Shoemaker, the President of the Student's Administrative Council of the University of Toronto, has just returned from the NFCUS conference in Edmonton.

The 19th Annual Conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students might have been written in the records as the "smoke-filled back-room conference." However, when the sessions were finally over, the smoke had cleared and the delegates could appreciate the fundamental issues and accomplishments.

It would be more than imaginative to claim that the executive had even come close to establishing any organized agenda or direction. The delegates approached this and other problems with energy and intelligence. Everyone was made aware that the structure of their federation demanded positive action and issues were discussed with fighting, persistent inquiry. This persistence, along with the lack of time for relaxation and informal discussion, explains why some issues became inflamed.

The conference reviewed pertinently the National Administration and established a far stronger, central organization both in structure and in the person of Peter Martin as national President. Communications and directives from the national office will be more efficiently handled, due to the fact that the tour of the National President has been abolished, and he will spend all his time carrying out the business of the Federation.

An Advisory Board established by the National Executive, composed of prominent public officials, will provide the continuity and sound advice so badly needed in such an organization.

The Federation will develop its policy along more consistent lines. It will adopt a specific ten point program with primary emphasis on a Life Insurance Scheme. The cultural projects will be continued as will work on Student Discount Service and the Scholarship Campaign.

As a delegate I was impressed. I was impressed by the inefficiency of last year's executive, the irrationality of some of our own and other delegates' actions and proposals. But in all sincerity, when the work was over, I was convinced that this Federation would be progressive, devoted and good.

NFCUS is based on the ideal of National unity. This ideal can only be realized through experience, strong support, leadership and sound finance. In this respect the University of Toronto has a large responsibility and we must continue to approach NFCUS with positive rather than destructive ideas. There is always assurance for progressive action when a convention devotes all its waking hours to the proposition, "that if a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well."

For this they strove!

She came at me slowly, hips swaying, mouth open, moist. Her hot eyes burned into me, made me shake all over. "Go away," I said. "I've got work to do." I walked to the dresser, grabbed my pack of cigarettes and lit one. She was still there. I turned to my books and tried to read. The words were all jumbled and the paragraphs spun around "as she called to me softly in a silky voice that beckoned, hypnotized, I had to fight back. I turned on the radio. Soft, sexy music spread into the smoky room and warmed the pain that tried to work its way out of me, I was melting. I could feel myself turning and looking at her. She lay on my bed, her sleek body languishing over the soft woolly covers. She called to me again, stood up and walked over towards me. She brushed herself up and down me. I couldn't resist, I'd tried, I'd tried very hard. I was going fast. She called to me again, her mellow notes tantalizing. "All right, All right," I yelled. "I give in. I give in. You can have it." And I grabbed and with disgust threw her upon the bed then strode across the room to the ice-box. "Here, damn you. Drink."

She meowed victoriously and ran across the room for the saucer of milk.

So Much Dust!

The Editor, The Varsity:

I speak for a minority of sufferers, the "allergists." We owe our allegiance to the symbol of the red nose. We suffer from dust, etc., etc. The decadent condition of many buildings on campus expresses the need for reconstruction or renovation.

The University does little to reconcile progress with tradition. If the University does not see fit to build, the least it could do would be to keep the old buildings clean. The condition of the Economics Building on Bloor Street is a prime example of the accumulating ability of dust when it is left undisturbed.

The Allergists are continually blowing and sneezing, thereby interrupting lecturers and retarding their own scholastic achievements. In the past we have been relatively silent sufferers.

But, if remedial action is not forthcoming, we intend to unite and water down every dusty room on campus—janitors be forewarned. Brian A. Grosman, II UC

OUR READERS WRITE

Back To Basics

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We read with extreme nausea the snide remarks directed against the St. Michael's cheerleaders, obviously penned by some semi-literate, perverted neurotic with his ulcers working overtime. If you wish to escape "Victorianism," why not inhale the pea soup atmosphere of some third-rate burlesque theatre and clap your sweaty little palms in unison with the rest of the derelicts in the pit.

In our book, the St. Mike's cheerleaders excel all the other squads on the campus in pep and precision. It's cheerleaders we want and need, not bare-legged babes in cheesecloth and fake ostrich plumes! And don't you agree, our frustrated friend, that sweaters, when worn by the young and shapely, have a certain esthetic value?

And as for your clumsy allusion to "Big Sister," don't you think it's about time you forgot the swamp and the still and began to conform to at least the basic tenets of U. of T. society?

THOREAU

The Reflex Arc

New Slant On Quarterly

As Mr. Grant says in his editorial to the latest number of the University of Toronto Quarterly, its "new cover and typography — in 'Times New Roman' — are not a gala dress put on to celebrate the beginning of its twenty-fifth year of publication; they are rather a fresh suit of everyday clothes, to be worn until they, too, fall out of fashion."

The new look, for which the University of Toronto Press is mainly responsible, is attractive. Miss Lingner's cover design, with its off-centre layout, is sufficiently restrained for a Canadian University publication, yet it subtly conveys the fact that the tension of twentieth-century life has finally reached Canada.

The present issue contains an interesting article by Edmund Blunden, the English poet, on Latin verse of the seventeenth century with some of Mr. Blunden's own renderings into skillful English verse.

The Quarterly is now subtitled A Journal of the Humanities. Mr. Grant led me to understand that his definition of the word humanities is broad. He would be very willing to include articles on the natural and social sciences, provided that they were well-written and comprehensible to the "general, cultivated reader." Unfortunately, in Mr. Grant's opinion, very few scientists know how to write.

However, the new editor's broad conception of humanities will receive its first exemplification in the January, 1956 issue of the Quarterly. This issue will consist mainly of a survey on education, which will certainly attract wide interest, as it is a burning issue on both sides of the Atlantic.

Among the contributors to the January, 1956 issue, the name of Eric Ashby should be mentioned. Mr. Ashby, who is Chancellor of Queen's University, Belfast, Northern Ireland, is the author of an illuminating book on scientific education in Soviet Russia, published as a Pelican Book, Scientist in Russia.

The new editor is, of course, proceeding with care. A university quarterly is an institution and cannot therefore tolerate revolutionary activities within its editorial offices. It can, however, and must, permit evolutionary growth. This growth will be reflected in a rising circulation — Mr. Grant thinks that a readership of 3,000 would be respectable.

Growth will also be reflected in an expansion of the Quarterly's feature, Letters in Canada. The January, 1957 issue is already being planned and will include a Survey of the Arts in Canada. Let us hope that this forthcoming survey will add a little depth to the many other pronouncements on this subject.

Faculty Member Presents Concert At Conservatory

Last week the Royal Conservatory introduced the newest member of the piano faculty, Alexander Uninsky. Mr. Uninsky proved to be a pianist with good technique but lacking tonal sensitivity.

The Scarlatti sonatas and the Mozart variations suffered most from inadequate attention to tone. Pianissimos were beautifully controlled; but as the volume increased so did a hardness of tone which gave the melody lines a distressing angularity. Again in the Prokofiev sonata and the Chopin Etudes this unpleasant tone detracted from otherwise technically exciting performances.

Two Mazurkas by Chopin were the finest pieces of the evening. They had a refinement of tone and idea quite lacking in the other works on the programme.

Charon et la Comédie

A well-dressed group of Toronto theatre aficionados almost filled Hart House theatre late yesterday afternoon expecting to hear M. Jacques Charon of the Comedie Francaise speak on "The Connection between La Comedie Francaise and the Modern Theatre in France." M. Charon appeared as scheduled, charming his audience with his deliciously Gallic accent, but confined his observations to the subject of the past and present of the Comedie itself. This is not a cause for reproach — the kind of inside information about the "Maison de Moliere" that M. Charon was able to give was perhaps of greater interest to Toronto drama-lovers because of the background it provided to the imminent visit of the Comedie to this city on the 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22nd of this month.

This historic theatrical group is no museum or refuge for comedians. For centuries it has belonged to France as much as her mountains and rivers. The structure of Moliere's house was never weakened by wars or changing regimes. The state contribution to the Comedie is based on the quality and value of the work that makes up its repertoire. An enlightened French government (from which Canada in this instance could take a lesson) relies in part on the Comedie to develop French culture by keeping alive the great theatre of the past.

Budding thespians on this side of the ocean would probably lack the enthusiasm necessary to become a pensionnaire or societaire of the Comedie Francaise, because of the very severe discipline. Special authorization is needed for each radio or film appearance. One of the 75 pensionnaires whose yearly contract may be renewed each New Year's day, rehearses every afternoon, plays approximately 250 nights a year, and may be required to rehearse three different roles while appearing in a fourth. The pace is killing, but the resulting competence astounds any newcomer to the theatre.

Boulevard or popular actors work much less, since they may appear in one play for years and have their days completely free, receiving far heavier pay envelopes for this exertion. Charon revealed ruefully. The societaires, or permanent members, numbering between 20 and 30, must sign up for 20 years and cannot quit at the end of this term without their fellow-societaires' consent.

People may consider these and other old Comedie traditions cruel, but the traditions and ghosts lurking in every actor's dressing room inspire many a flawless performance. Traditions like that of lining up outside the playhouse in winter with folding chairs to buy cheap seats help to explain the Frenchman's love of theatre.

M. Charon, dark, poised and verree Latin, apologized quite unnecessarily for his English at the end of his speech and extended an invitation to all present to come and see him in Paris at the Maison de Moliere . . . Excuse me, I've got to go now and see about my passport . . .

adventure in film-making

Sweden has recently given us a Miss Universe. Now, with Arne Sucksdorff's film The Great Adventure, the Swedes have sent us another eye-catching package of a different sort.

The Great Adventure (at the Towne) is a true picture—true to the wild animal life with which most of it is concerned, true to the strong life-and-death rhythm of the seasons, and true to the turn-and-turnabout of animal and human experience.

The adventure takes place in central

Sweden. Here the farm fields are never very far from the wild and many-faced forest. Here there are fox, lynx, owl, otter, and fieldmice. Here the race for food and shelter is keen and always present. And to this setting Arne Sucksdorff has taken his patient camera, to shoot a story about the animals of this forest, and the secret of a hidden pet otter that two brothers keep from the world of grownups. That's all the story there is.

Disney, too, has made animal movies.

But he has chosen to present his animals as either very human, or very funny. Scorpions make love to the tune of a square-dance, cats butter each other, "dum dum dum dum dum music." And indeed the Disney films are shot through with a sentimentality that is as cloying as it is unrealistic.

The animals of The Great Adventure are animals, and we can respect them, as Sucksdorff apparently does, for being just that. They are not the animals of a school biology film, yet they are never "out of true." Most important of all, we are always just looking in on them. This is something altogether different to Disney's idea of transporting a troupe of animals to parade their quaint and cute ways expressly for us. Beautifully and painstakingly photographed, the animals of The Great Adventure always remain part of the total fabric of forest life. They eat and are eaten because that's the way it goes.

Woven into this story of the forest are two farm kids who live the great adventure. The older one, Anders, is entirely wrapped up with his otter. His Sancho Panza brother, Kjell, is swept along in the adventure without really knowing what it's all about. When finally the otter leaves to answer the call of spring, little Kjell has already let out the secret to the cruel and insensitive grownup world. Now Anders is alone, his otter gone, and his whole world shattered. But grief has to be short-lived with Kjell and Anders as with the animals of the forest, Kjell is forgiven with a spontaneity as sure as that of the southward flight of the cranes in autumn.

It's a beautiful picture throughout. There are sequences—the fox cubs fighting over the catch, spring bursting forth with unrestrained vitality, the fox dancing with a pair of nyons in the moonlight—that could never have been staged or rehearsed. Both the music background and narration are unpretentious and just right. The non-professional actors are fine, especially the two kids and Arne Sucksdorff as the father.

Altogether, it is a moving, vital, and simple statement on life. Sucksdorff has given us something rare and haunting, something we can remember for a long time.

Carolle Ann Craigie

Carolle Ann Craigie, eighteen-year-old pianist, will play at the first of the 1955-56 series of Wednesday five o'clock concerts in Hart House. These concerts will be held at 5 p.m. every second week, and at noon-hour on the alternate Wednesdays.

Miss Craigie is a scholarship student in the Artist Diploma course at the Royal Conservatory. In 1953 she had the highest marks in the A.R.C.T. in the Solo Performer course and won the Conservatory Norman Wilks scholarship and the Kiwanis Concerto scholarship.

Last year Miss Craigie was the winner of the first prize in the C.B.C. programme, "Opportunity Knocks."

Her programme today includes the Sonata (K. 576) of Mozart, two etudes of Chopin, Andante and Rondo Capriccioso of Mendelssohn and six Rumanian Folk Dances of Bartok. It closes with Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 6.

As has become customary, women of the University as well as members of Hart House are invited to attend.

Art Review

In Victoria College's Alumni Hall this week, there is an exhibit of drawings and paintings by Isabel McLaughlin of Oshawa. As a whole, her work does not show any great inspiration, but there are a few canvases that might be worth considering.

The artist is extremely interested in botanical forms: in her garden at home she used to observe the plants and insects very carefully, and this shows up in her work as a precision of expression when she deals with plant-forms.

Her Bermudiana is an instance of this; amid a riot of luxurious colour, the leaves of the various plants retain integrity and precision. In the sketch, Mahogany Seeds, Barbados, the artist departs from this strain, to reveal her wonder and reverence for the new life that, through the seed, comes into being.

The painting Provincetown Flats, reveals the versatility of Miss McLaughlin. Treating the rather conventional theme of a bleak fishing village, she succeeds in giving us the impression of the desolation and monotony of a fisherman's life.

The exhibit as a whole shows good use of colour and line to produce the desired effect. In spite of a rather monotonous predilection for flora and fauna, Miss McLaughlin's departures from these forms reveal a fine potentiality in other fields of painting.

What's news at Inco ?

16 hours saved in time between Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver on new C.P.R. Streamliner

"The Canadian" pleases passengers and railway alike. Inco nickel plays a large part in the construction.

The outer skin is nickel-containing stainless steel. Interior hardware is nickel silver or stainless steel.

NICKEL STAINLESS STEEL TRAINS LIKE NEW AFTER 20 YEARS!

Newest stainless streamliner is "The Canadian"

IN 1934 the first stainless steel train made its initial run from Denver to Chicago. After 20 years and 2,700,000 miles of service, this silvery streamliner still carries on, as gleaming-bright as when new.

Today, the records established by this and many other stainless steel trains, have brought about a fleet of 173 new C.P.R. cars.

Because of stainless steel's high strength and the knowledge that it will never be weakened by corrosion, structural sections can be made lighter, thus giving greater safety with less weight.

Weight saving and economy are also obtained by using stainless steel sheathing of a thinner gauge but designed with greater rigidity than previously.

With this stainless, corrosion resisting chromium nickel alloy, paint is not necessary.

"The Romance of Nickel", a 72-page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request. Bulk copies supplied Secondary School teachers.

Nickel Silver Hardware

Over 70 tons of nickel silver containing 18% of nickel were used in the door handles, ash trays and other hardware of 173 cars.

Chess Champ Plays Simul

The Chess Champion of Canada, Frank R. Anderson, III Math and Physics, will take on all comers simultaneously in a chess exhibition to be held in the Music Room of Hart House at 7.30 p.m. tonight.

In the 1954 Olympics, Anderson obtained second place rating, with only Grandmaster Keres of Russia leading.

At the 1953 Simul presented by the Hart House Chess Club Anderson played 24 simultaneous games. He won 21, tied 1, and lost the remaining two games.

In association with George Berner, II Meds, a Yugoslav master, Anderson is conducting a course in chess under the Department of University Extension. The two masters are, also, writing a series of chess columns for The Varsity.

All members of Hart House may enter the Simul, as it is not restricted to Chess Club members.

EAC Meet Tonight Report On NFCUS

All students will have an opportunity tonight to hear first hand reports on the recent NFCUS conference at Edmonton.

Michael Shoemaker and Diane Hrus, the Toronto delegates, will give their first report on the conference to an open meeting of the External Affairs Commission of the SAC, to be held at seven o'clock tonight in Falconer Hall.

Other topics up for discussion at the meeting are the forthcoming SHARE campaign, the WUS Treasure Van, due at the end of November, and the Student Discount Service, which will be in effect next week, according to the NFCUS co-chairman of the EAC.

A highlight of the meeting will be a fifteen-minute talk by Mihiko Shimizu, this year's exchange student from Japan. Mihiko, a graduate of a Tokyo university, is living at Whitney Hall and studying physical education.

The EAC is concerned primarily with this university in relation to the other universities of Canada, and on the international level with those abroad.

The position of Publicity Director of the EAC is open to any individual interested in seeing the activities of the EAC brought to the students' attention, said an EAC spokesman.

"This is an opportunity to work on the all-university level — no previous experience in the EAC is necessary," said an EAC official.

The External Affairs Commission is a part of the Students' Administrative Council.

Duckpond Marathon Swim

Marilyn Bell Wishes Best Of Luck For Entrants Of McGill Marathon

Montreal (CUP): Montreal's first Marathon Swim, sponsored by the McGill Daily, is going to take place — soon. Or it may have already taken place.

Nobody seems quite sure.

The Swim, promoted to reinstate Montreal into the position of a leading Canadian city, was announced for sometime before kick-off time at the Varsity-McGill game, last Saturday. However, nothing further has been heard on the subject from the McGill Daily, student newspaper at McGill.

Beaver Lake, the swim site, is an artificially created pond on Mount Royal, and has never been swum before, the Daily adds.

(Its depth is about two feet; its length less than a couple of hundred yards).

The Lake would present a formidable obstacle to any swimmer, the Daily adds.

Miss Marilyn Bell was contacted by the Daily, and she wished the best of luck to the entrants. She asked whether or not the swim was professional, but was assured by the Daily that by no means could the swim be considered professional.

Certain rules announced for the contest were:

- 1) The Lake must be swum from end to end in either direction.
- 2) Contestants may be any man, woman, or child, above the age of twelve.
- 3) No contestant may touch the bottom of the Lake during any portion of the swim from the push-off until he reaches the opposite bank.

4) Spectators will be requested to refrain from smoking as fumes annoy the swimmers. However, power boats accompanying contestants will be allowed.

5) Boats are not to contain more than seven persons; no more than two of whom are to be affianced to the swimmer.

6) The contestants may be fed from the boats, but under no circumstances may strong drink be given them.

RES NATURAE

Vita While

What is Life? This question is inevitably put before students taking primers in Biology, and doubtless occurs to every philosopher. Unlike such quandaries as "the essence of Time," "the true nature of Substance" or even the latest enigma in Vogue — "the Ultimate Reality," the living process is quite precisely definable.

The most spectacular attribute of life is growth. From the humble acorn, the mighty oak doth grow. Yet this is hardly an exclusive property of life. One has only to visit a cavern to see the impressively large but manifestly dead icicles of limestone. From the puny drip, the mighty cavern doth grow.

On a smaller scale the growth of crystals from a liquid is apparent in the leaf — like growth of frost on window panes. This type of crystal growth is of considerable significance to the Biologist. The by now notorious viruses — particles of proteins, 100,000 of which may be conveniently lined bumper to bumper across the head of a very small pin — may under special circumstances be crystallized. Here we have a crystal which appears non-living, yet will, if placed in a living milieu, behave as a living organism.

The virus is so choosy it must have a complex environment found, so far, only in the living cell. The use of the monkey kidney slice in the preparation of Salk vaccine is an application of this specificity. The virus often becomes fantastically aggressive within the cell, redirecting the cell's metabolism to the production of viral materials; so much so, in fact, that the unfortunate host is burst from within.

The virus here shows its living qualities; metabolism and reproduction. Metabolism and reproduction seem to find parallels only extremely rarely in inanimate material.

In their attempts to explain the origin of life from seemingly non-living (but thoroughly infected) material the ancient savants had some particularly quaint ideas.

Van Helmot in the 18th century made mice out of dirty underwear like this: "Squeeze dirty underwear into the mouth of a vessel containing grain. The wheat soon encrusts itself with its own skin and turns into mice, nor are they premature, for they jump out fully formed." And fully armed?

An intriguing but seemingly inept imitation of life has been created by the society of automatic machines which today constitute industry. Machines "eat" raw materials, refine them, then make and even repair more machines to do the first stage. Here we also have a special creation by man — man as God in his own living machine society.

But is such a special creation necessary in the formation of organic life? Traditionally, the mechanistic scientist says no. He favors the concept of the random interaction of complex molecules until a life-like structure is accidentally formed, a form akin, at least in size, to the virus.

Then since it lives, it will reproduce; since it must compete for available food stuffs it will modify and evolve. Just give Mother Nature — i.e. molecules — some time to work; it took some 2,500,000,000 years to evolve life to its present state!

These views, as well as others opposing them, will be dealt with in a symposium and discussion on the Origin of Life at an open meeting of the Biology Club tonight at 8:30 in the Victoria Student's Union Music Room. All interested persons are invited to attend the meeting.

Jack-of-All-Trades Civil Servants' Job

The International Relations Club played host last night to Mr. R. M. Macdonnell, Canadian Deputy-Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs at a meeting in Falconer Hall.

Speaking to those interested in writing the department exams on external affairs, Mr. Macdonnell gave an outline of the nature of the work entailed in Foreign Service. He said that the three most important things to be considered are the gathering and analysing of information, making constructive use of it, and carrying out the government's decisions on a course of action. He mentioned as an example Canada's role in the peace commissions after the Geneva conferences, and said that the duties of a civil servant include everything from meeting trains to cutting hair!

He went on to mention the variety of both problems and seems which one is likely to meet, as well as the disadvantage found in the lack of opportunity to specialize. He said the average Civil Servant is forced to become the "jack-of-all-trades and master of none."

The meeting then being open to discussion, Mr. Macdonnell explained the various divisions in the organization of the department, such as the geographical, consular and economic divisions, emphasizing the fact that economists and Slavic experts are among the few specialists in demand. He stated the present annual intake into the service is 23 out of approximately 400 applicants, and expected the number to go down to 12 within the next decade.

RED FEATHER'S BLUES

Staff Reporter Gets Interview Despite Bouncer

Two photographers and a reporter from The Varsity news office were refused admission to the Park Plaza last night for an interview and pictures of Cal Jackson.

Jackson and his band, now starting in the Park Plaza Room, are playing in a noon hour concert today for the Red Feather campaign in Convocation Hall.

The two photographers were "improperly dressed" in sports jacket and windbreaker, while the reporter in saddle shoes was classed as "under age." Peter, the head waiter, took one look at the unhappy trio and muttered something about barbarians.

Undaunted, the three stood patiently at the door while Cal Jackson and his band came down to the desk. The interview and pictures were taken there.

When asked to comment on tomorrow's performance, Jackson said that there was "no better organization that he could donate his services to."

Recently returned from Basin Street in New York, Jackson and his band are booked for three weeks starting Nov. 21 at "The Embers" in New York. At the moment Jackson is studying very hard for his solo with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra at a Pop concert December 30.

He will play the first and part of the last movements of Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 3, and will also conduct the orchestra in his own ballet, Marie Chapdelaine.

Cal Jackson and his trio, Howard Reay, Calvin's Drummer, and bass-player Johnny Wood, began at the Plaza in 1952 and played for 22 months. They became a quartette when joined by vibist Peter Appleyard in April 1954.

Jazzmen Interviewed

Here Varsity reporter Pat Moser interviews Cal Jackson (far right) and the other members of his band. Reporter Moser had great difficulty in gaining access to the Plaza Room to get her interview — the doorman refused to believe she was 22. Jackson's Jazz Feathers Fling Twelve Today

Cal Jackson and his "appreciation club" will headline the Red Feather Concert to be held at Convocation Hall at noon today.

The free presentation of jazz goes from 12:30 to 2 p.m. today, featuring Jackson and his well-known quartette, currently entertaining at the Plaza Room and recently returned from a stand at New York City.

Other groups conscripted from various faculties will add their contributions to the "jazz-lover's delight." An instrumental group from Trinity College, termed the "Cal Jackson Appreciation Group" leads off with modern jazz selections.

The concert is part of Red Feather's "Close-the-Gap" campaign, starting today on the campus.

"It is indicated student contributions are going to fall short of the $5,000 goal, unless we make a final effort to reach it," said Al Davidson, Publicity Chairman for the campaign.

"We had hoped to collect at least two-thirds of the sum by today but our records indicate that some faculties have not even been canvassed to date.

"For this reason the campaign will not officially close until Friday at 5 p.m."

Other talent at the concert includes a Victoria College group under the leadership of Terry Shields, with Dick Mastrodanto of St. Mike's leading his cohorts.

"Crackerbarrel humour" is provided by Al Neelons of Emmanuel College while Lorraine Shane and Hugh Tyndal of the Faculty of Music offer light opera selections.

"We deeply appreciate the efforts of Walter Murdoch and the Toronto Musician's Association in making this performance possible," said Davidson.

Proposed Discounts Criticized Shoemaker Lauds Conference

Students' Discount Service—the plan to provide students with reductions on prices of necessary articles—received sharp criticism at last night's meeting of the External Affairs Committee.

John Woods (II UC), co-chairman of the NFCUS-sponsored plan, started controversy with the presentation of the list of stores promising to join the plan. The list included jewellers, men's and women's clothing stores, shoe stores, restaurants and dry-cleaners', giving discounts ranging from five to 25 per cent.

Many members objected on the grounds that the stores were not well-known and some inconvenient for students.

Mike Shoemaker, President of the Students' Administrative Council, presented the report on the conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, held last week at Edmonton.

Dates were announced for the annual SHARE campaign, sponsored by World University Service, which runs from Nov. 7-18 this year, collecting funds for needy students in the far east. The money will go for student housing projects and TB sanatoria in Palestine, Israel, Japan and Indonesia.

Red Feather Pleads Student Assistance

By SANDY McPHERSON, Student Services Commissioner

This year—the Red Feather Committee has attempted to make its fellow students more conscious of their community responsibilities by presenting tangible evidence of the need for financial assistance in Community Chest activities.

An attempt to bring 100 underprivileged children from the University Settlement to the Varsity-Queen's Game failed dismally when the youngsters took off to a movie instead. Lack of co-ordination in Committee ranks was blamed for this mixup but the Officials felt that the idea was worthy of consideration again next year.

The "Red Feather Fair," held on the campus in front of Hart House in years gone by, was discontinued because former reports stressed that organizational problems far outweighed financial benefits.

The Committee felt that the Red Feather Concert which had been "dying slowly" during the past few years was worthy of being revitalized. Student organizations backed this plan with numerous instrumental and "dramatic" groups while the services of the Cal Jackson Quartet were procured through the kind efforts of the Toronto Musician's Association.

It is to be hoped that the Red Feather Campaign will be undertaken with renewed vigour in the years to come.

NFCUS Limited Now Responsible For Own Default

NFCUS is now a corporation. The National Federation of Canadian University Students was recently incorporated as a non-profit company, presumably to limit the liability of its officers and members as to NFCUS debts. Previous to the incorporation, if NFCUS had run up heavy debts, any member of NFCUS—i.e., any university student in Canada—might have been liable to its creditors.

He described the important legislation passed and commented: "I've never seen so many people work so hard for so long in all my life. I think that we can safely say that this conference made tremendous progress in ironing out the defects of NFCUS, and promises the accomplishment of many concrete projects in future."

Nikoho Shimizu, exchange scholarship student from Japan, described in a brief talk the difference between Canadian and Japanese Universities. She pointed out that more than four per cent of 500,000 Japanese students had tuberculosis, and that there is no means of treating them.

Miss Shimizu said that many students were completely poverty-stricken, working all day even while attending school, and generally finding jobs difficult to obtain when they did graduate.

New Petition Upholds Alliance Disapproves Of H. H. Orchestra

A "counter-petition" to express disapproval of Hart House Sunday night concerts is being circulated on the campus, it was learned yesterday.

Jim Wilks, IV Meds, said he was approached in the University library to sign a document expressing "disapproval" of the concerts formerly to be held by the Hart House Orchestra Associates.

He said there were only "about six" signatures on the petition.

Another petition is circulating the campus condemning the action of the Lord's Day Alliance which threatened to prosecute if the concerts are held.

This petition has so far received 392 signatures.

Students are reminded that they may sign the petition in the offices of The Varsity before the end of the week.

It may be presented to the Parliament buildings if sufficient names are obtained.

VARSITY RETAINS TRACK LAURELS

Money Awarded Phillips Trophy OAC Cops Intermediate Honors

London, Oct. 19 (Staff) — The University of Toronto's well-balanced track team pulled well in front of the other three Universities in late afternoon events here today, to win the forty-eighth running of the Intercollegiate senior track meet with a total of 66 points. McGill were second behind the Blues with 46, while Western and Queen's trailed with 39 and 13 respectively.

Ontario Agricultural College copped intermediate honors, displacing last year's champions McMaster, who ran second with 43 points to OAC's 62.

The feature event of the day was to have been the mile run, with Canada's top miler, Rich Ferguson, wearing Western colors, out to break the Intercollegiate record set in 1937. Ferguson recorded only a slow 4:44.0 on a wet track, a far cry from the 4:04.6 he did in Vancouver in 1954, the fastest mile ever run by a Canadian.

Ferguson had earlier been edged in the half-mile by McGill's Pete Reid, who turned in a time of 2:03.3. Lack of competition as well as bad weather was probably the cause of Ferguson's relatively poor performance.

Only one record fell during the meet, and that in the intermediate tournament, when Barry West of OAC leaped 6 1/2" in the high jump to better the old mark by a full two inches.

Toronto had been deadlocked with Western midway through the meet but pulled ahead in the late afternoon. Varsity managed only four firsts, but piled up a raft of points on eight seconds nine thirds, and four fourths to gain the margin of victory. Toronto's Ken Money won the Hec Phillips Trophy for an outstanding individual performance.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

There's a little man in the Athletic Office in Hart House with a sporting history as long as your left arm who runs the show on this campus, runs it so efficiently in fact that the casual passer-by is hardly aware of his existence. But the University of Toronto's Athletic Association has been acutely aware of his presence since the beginning of this term, and it's got so that even the casual passer-by begins to notice that something is missing. Varsity's versatile Director of Athletics, Warren Stevens, has almost completed a bout with infectious mononucleosis, and will be back on the job before too long.

Steve's football history goes back a long way, beginning in his college days where he starred at the gridiron sport for Syracuse University. But the greatest gift the little man gave to the Canadian game came in 1931, when he returned to his native Canada to play for the professional Montreal Winged Wheelers. It was in that year that Steve introduced the forward pass to Canadian football, heaving the Wheelers to an undefeated, untied season, and the Grey Cup championship, a record unparalleled in Canadian gridiron history. Until the Alouettes when the Dominion title in 1949, 1931 was the only time Montreal had held a championship since before the first World War.

Backed by this tremendous accomplishment, Steve was invited in 1932 to take over the post of Director of Athletics at the University of Toronto. From 1932 to 1940 he was head football and basketball coach and always turned out a well-drilled and crowd-pleasing team. As a football coach he has the longest period of service in Varsity history, although Bob Masterson needs but one more season to join him in this category. Steve had his teams in the Intercollegiate playoff seven out of the nine years, and won three titles, while in basketball his clubs never finished worse than second place, winning three championships.

When all intercollegiate athletic activities were cancelled in 1940 Steve's active coaching days came to an end, and with the vastly increased enrollment since the war he has devoted his full time to the administrative end of the University's athletic affairs.

This begins to sound like an obituary, but we understand that Steve is leaving the hospital this afternoon and will be back in his office after a brief rest at home. When he does get back to the job he may well wish himself back in the peace and quiet of his hospital bed with the Intercollegiate football Union giving all the earmarks of being more mixed up than ever. We can only wish him well.

Please Mr. Stevens, is Gus Braccia eligible?

Interfaculty Summary

The most important intramural action occurred on the soccer field yesterday as Emmanuel dumped Wycliffe 3-0. Emmanuel tallied all their goals in the first half. White, Kirkwood and Choopie scored. Forestry shut out Law 3-0 with Van Bess notching two and Stacey one.

Volleyballers had very little action with one game going on between SPS III and Vic III which SPS won 15-8 and 15-9.

In lacrosse Forestry nipped Pharmacy B 5-3. Naylor of Forestry was the individual standout of the day, scoring three goals and leading his team's attack all the way. Other scorers for Forestry were Scott and Johnston. Pharmacy played well but were not equal to the task, their scorers were Skroneby, Mosley and Chambers. Intramural schedules are printed in to-day's paper.

Irish Edge Skulemen In Tight Contest Snap Three Year Jinx With 11-5 Win

BY JOHN VOJTECH

There is great rejoicing on the St. Mike's campus, mighty Skule have fumbled out. Yesterday, St. Mike's broke a three year jinx as they defeated SPS 11-5 in a tightly played, well contested game. The match was evenly divided as both teams handled the ball for a like number of times.

The difference was that the Irish were able to come through in times of great duress.

In the early minutes of the game, Skule enjoyed a five point advantage as Ken Selby walked through the St. Mike's line on a twenty-five yard run. The convert was blocked by Ted Ingson.

The Irish wasted no time, they took the kickoff and roared back along the ground for sixty-five yards in ten plays to score as Ron Renzetti hurried the line for a major. The convert was no good.

Late in the third quarter, the Irish again were pressing hard, but the Skule line rose to the occasion and stopped them. A third down kick by Curt Russell into the coffin corner of the end zone was good for a point, and the Irish went ahead 6-5.

Skule took the ball but Jack Fenn intercepted a Wong pass. Again the Skule line did its job well. Russell's towering kick was fumbled by Al Wong in the end zone. Buddy Fletcher fell on the ball for the Irish score. The convert was no good.

Skule came to life in the last few minutes and led by Wong and Selby, who ran forty yards on one jaunt, wended their way to the Irish fifteen. On the first down Wong went back to pass. Bill Priestner broke through the line to nail him for a large loss. Wong fumbled the ball, and Russell covered up. That was it as far as the ball game went. St. Mike's ran out the clock and it was all over save for the shouting.

Skule edged St. Mike's out in the first downs gained as they went for 9 to the Irish 8.

Frank Kielly, Mike McDonald, Bob Doud, and Leo McGuigan also played well in the Irish backfield. Ken Stanton, a rookie, came up with some fine running performances. On the other side of the ledger, for Skule, Selby, Wong and Ashly starred on the offense as did Bob Leask and Gord Grandall.

Both teams tried five passes, but only St. Mike's was able to complete one. Both had one intercepted. There were four fumbles, three by Skule. The Irish recovered two Skule fumbles, one for a major, and one in the dying minutes of the game when Skule was pressing hard.

With basketball having started this week and all the other sports still going at a fast pace, things seem to be in the state of confusion and all the sporty types are beside themselves with the problem of whether they should start attending another activity or commence taking in a few lectures.

The aquatic gals are still practicing at the UTS pool on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday nights at 5:30, 6:30 and 7:30 in preparation for the Interfaculty Meet which is scheduled for Nov. 5 at the Hart House swimming hole and for those who cannot make it at those hours or who feel they want to have an hour or so of extra practice, we suggest that they hurry over to the small-sized foot bath, better known as the Lilian Massey pool. The practices at the Lilian Massey pool are extra practice hours for the synchronized gals. Tuesday at 6:30, Wednesday at 1:00 and Friday at 1:00 are the hours.

Although many of us are heading down Montreal way for the weekend and the football game is rumoured that a game is being planned for Saturday afternoon, there are some girls who have staying home for the Intercollegiate Tennis Tournament which starts Friday morning and continues until Saturday noon. Because of the foul weather this week, several of the final matches have not been played, consequently membership and final ceding will not be able to be settled until to-day. So far, it seems fairly safe to say that Mary Nunn, Mary Lynn Boys and Ann Kilgore are definitely members of the 1955 edition of the Women's Intercollegiate Team.

The remaining position on the team is a toss up between Ruth Marshall PHE and Prudence Smith Vic. Although you did not make the team, there are several ways in which you can help make this tournament a huge success. One is, by getting out and supporting the Toronto quartette. The matches are to be played at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club. Not only will this be an excellent opportunity to show your school spirit, but it will also a wonderful opportunity to see some outstanding tennis being played. Another way that you can aid the cause is by offering your services as umpires or linesmen for Friday morning. If you have had any experience in this type of officiating and would be willing to miss any Friday morning classes, please get in touch with Anne Kilgore, WA. 3-5513 before Friday. It would be greatly appreciated.

Remember that, if you think that you can dethrone any of the girls who have been named to the Intercollegiate team, you are entitled to challenge a member for a position on the team—just make sure you get your challenge in to Anne Kilgore immediately.

one year ago . . .

One year ago today, The Varsity carried on its front page in headlines 10 inches deep "SKULE SOCIETY OUSTED — FINED $4,000."

The story beneath the headlines told of the action of the University Caput in suspending the Engineering Society, and of fining that body $4,000. This action was in punishment of the "Engineering riot" a month earlier, when rampaging Skule freshmen smashed through several campus buildings, injuring a professor in their way.

With the justice of this particular sentence, we do not wish to quarrel.

It is also difficult to quarrel with the fact that the punishment was decided upon by the Caput — instead of by a student body. An idealist might complain that student responsibility will never be developed until students are given responsibility: that the only way students will ever acquire the maturity and wisdom to run their own affairs completely is to be given the power. An idealist might point out that students in other countries and in other universities in this country have been responsible for disciplining their own members, and that they have discharged this duty admirably well.

An idealist might point out all these things, but then idealism is now out of fashion.

One year after the event, we do not wish to reopen this question.

But we do still wish to register a vigorous protest against the fact that the Caput's action was taken without any consultation whatsoever with any responsible student opinion.

It would seem to be only fair and proper at an institution that concerns itself with justice that students should be consulted before students are punished. We do not question the fairness of the Caput members, or their wisdom; but it is a commonly accepted principle of justice that a man's peers should be at least consulted before judgment is passed on him.

This is evidently not the view of the University administration. President Smith said only a month ago to the freshmen, in reference to the Caput's disciplinary powers, "There is no consultation of public opinion."

The President justified his remark on the basis of differentiation of function. We trust that differentiation of function will never be carried to the point where it is the function of some to rule, and others to be ruled.

The Lord's Day Alliance was suggested recently as a topic for debate to a campus debating committee. The subject was rejected on the grounds that it was simply not debatable.

If We Think Ahead

The Future Is Canada's

By ROBERT BROWN

Is Canada an economic dependency of the United States? Is our culture derived from the U.S. jukebox and movie trade? And what is in store in the future for Canada? This article attempts to explore, but not to answer, these questions.

It has often been complained that Canada is becoming more and more of an economic dependency of the United States. There seems to be considerable ground for this contention, not merely because US corporations own such a significant share in Canadian business, and because such a large part (over 2/3rds) of our foreign trade is done with that country, but also because much of our "culture" is imported from the US.

This situation is indicative of a long term in Canadian History, beginning roughly before the twenties, when Canada began to experience the growth of a new industrialism based on hydro-electric power, oil, metals, and forest products.

Back in the early part of the present century and before, the Canadian economy was integrated by the wheat boom in the west, and all parts of the nation joined in supplying (Westerners called it "exploiting") the Western boom.

Out of this and other factors came the "National Policy," tariffs, and a measure of economic, cultural, and political unity. With the fading of the wheat boom by the twenties and especially in the thirties, and with the growth of a vast industrialism in the United States with an insatiable demand for raw materials, Canada turned naturally to trade with that country.

Earlier, during the nineteenth century, both Canada and the United States were essentially producers of raw materials, and hence trade opportunities between the two countries were limited, because their exportable commodities were so similar. But starting after the first World War, Canada has become more and more a producer of raw materials for the manufacturing giant to our south.

This trend has had vast significance for Canada economically and politically, for it has meant that trade has tended to flow in North-South, rather than on East-West lines as previously. Trade with Great Britain has suffered a large relative decline, which has coincided with the weakening of cultural and political ties with that country.

Internally, each province or region has tended to become more independent, supplying its own natural resources directly to the markets in the US, and receiving its imports from there in return instead of from the rest of Canada. Political disunity is thus engendered, and the universal trend to centralization has been slowed down somewhat in Canada.

Thus the powers of the federal government have not grown as rapidly as they might otherwise have done. This is part of the reason why this country lacks to a degree such things as a national health plan, national aid to university students, and other broad social measures.

Those economic factors have also been partly responsible for the fact that the Canadian Labor movement has been largely an outgrowth of the US movement, and Canadian culture has been imported in such copious quantities from Hollywood and New York.

The dismal showing of the CCF in Canada may also be attributed in part to the importation of anti-socialist sentiment from the world's bastion of free enterprise, the US.

It is difficult to speculate on how far these economic influences have affected Canadian life as a whole in the past, but certainly the results have been far from negligible. As for the future, it seems likely that Canada's growing internal development in manufacturing industries will mean a turn away from trade with the US, and towards more economic self-sufficiency and broader trade outlets.

It should be noted, however, that the most spectacular of recent Canadian achievements, such as Smooth Rock, Kitimat, and Ungava, have all been concerned with the development of natural resources for sale to the US.

This auction of our natural resources cannot continue indefinitely to be the chief prop of Canadian prosperity, for our reserves of ores and oil are limited but irreplaceable assets that once having been sold are gone forever. It is to be hoped that some plans will soon be made for placing the economic structure of Canada on a firmer and more permanent base than the sale of national assets in their raw form to another nation.

As a national economy emerges from the development of manufacturing and processing industries, many problems will arise. Some of these will be internal, for national economic integration will mean a trend to centralization in government, and this will cause particular difficulties with "provincial-righters," especially in Quebec.

Externally, our economic development will mean that we will become a competitor rather than a supplier of the United States, and this may mean severe political clashes. A recently released US Government Report on economic affairs seemed to regard Canada as a permanent reserve of raw material for US industry.

However, Canada has the potentialities to surmount these difficulties and fulfill her promise.

What is needed above all at present is a realization by the federal and provincial governments that our natural resources should be carefully conserved and developed, not rapidly and willy-nilly exploited for the greatest immediate profit of private firm or government. If this realization can be achieved, there may be some truth to Laurier's words, "The Twentieth Century is Canada's."

Skirts Down

The Editor,

The Varsity:

You say in your article on the Varsity-McGill game that the St. Mike's cheerleaders look "like strip-teasers in Victorian skirts." But have not the baser instincts of your reporter overpowered of the more delicate judgment of his esthetic sensibility? For if we are to judge cheerleaders as strip-teasers, then the others are poor cheerleaders indeed. Where is their art, their imagination? Is not the essence of that noble profession to intrigue rather than to overwhelm? Discretion is the greater part of valor.

Yet may we not question the validity of this criterion? For it would seem that the raison d'être of cheerleading is rather to inspire the soul than to please the eye, to inflame our spirit than to console our opponents in their hour of grief. We have no choice but to stand our ground. 'Tis nobler in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of your outrageous criticism than to take up skirts before the enemy.

ON WAX

BY ROGER FEATHER

From the New York recording studios there has developed, in the last six months, what could almost be called a new style in modern jazz. The style is dictated by the fact that a certain group of musicians, and more important, composers and arrangers reappear on record after record. This "East Coast Style" or better still, "The Guys From Charlie's Tavern" (a musician's gathering place) style was started by Creed Taylor, late of Bethlehem Records, and is being further developed by Jack Lewis at Victor Records.

Most of the musicians come from the bands of Count Basie and Woody Herman (possibly explaining the similarities of these bands, Basie's style being predominant). The leaders of the movement seem to be Al Cohn and Nat Pierce who do most of the writing.

Their latest release, and I think their best, is an album by trumpeter Joe Newman under the title of All I Wanna Do Is Swing included in the group are Cohn, Pierce, Milt Hinton and Freddie Greene, who play well. Shadow Wilson, a very underrated drummer who seldom gets a chance to play in such good company, is particularly good. But the star of this L.P., playing both open and muted horn, is Joe Newman, who has never sounded better on record. The writing, for the most part, is very loose and gives the fellows lots of room to "wail." And "wail" they do, particularly on Corner Pocket and Limehouse Blues. This L.P. is a wonderful example of the swing and vitality in jazz, which the "west coast" superficial style lacks for the most part.

We have a timely release from Angel in an L.P. by The Scots Guards who played a successful concert at Maple Leaf Gardens recently. This famous Pipe and Drum band (66 men strong) plays 21 selections in a variety of tempos, including marches, reels and patrols. The record is well programmed and well reproduced. A little bit of this goes a long way, but for that "little bit," this is the best recording I have heard.

For opera fans, London has brought out a recording of Benjamin Britten's The Turning Of The Screw. The English Opera Group conducted by the composer, features Jennifer Vyvyan, Joan Cross, and Peter Pears. A faithful, but not too exciting reading is given remembered as being particularly brilliant or important. Benjamin to the score of this classic mystery. I don't think this work will be Britten has done better work.

FINE FOLK IN A FRENZY

Fine Frenzy, a new review with music, opened Tuesday at the Avenue Theater. Bea Lillie, Anna Russell—and Spring Thaw—have shown that Canadians can be funny in reviews. Fine Frenzy has set out to remind us again of the fact.

Donald Harron's dialogue and lyrics take witty stabs at most of the fair game in Canadian institutions: radio, TV, the college Grad, advertising, young love, and middle-age. And when Harron feels he is losing his touch and his audience, he steps gracefully back into his version of Elizabethan England. The cast, under Robert Christie's direction, makes the backstage easily.

The cast is small, but that doesn't prove much of a hindrance. Jane Mallett, Araby Lockhart, Robert Christie, Eric House, Dave Broadfoot and Harron himself succeeded in creating each absurd character in turn so well, that, until the very last of the show, they didn't begin to lose the audience.

What are all the people up there in such a Fine Frenzy about? Jane Mallett, whose show it is for most of the three hours, has taken some home movies, of a very unusual Grand Tour. Araby Lockhart's parable of The Hair Ribbon touches on just the right aspects of the ages of thirteen, nineteen and forty-four.

Eric House is a new kind of Folk Singer, with a wonderful ballad which may well be the last word on Marilyn Bell. Robert Christie's Commander Blackhead proceeds to test Toronto's water, representing as he does that well known English firm.

Dave Broadfoot, as Nobody Special, reacts just as he should, when he meets the Prime Minister in the park. This song-skit, incidentally, was written by UC undergraduate Stan Daniels.

Besides all this, the company produces its own musical from Those Thirties. John Steinbeck might have written it, if he had been standing on his head at the time. And then it's back to Shakespeare. Lord (Hurly) Burghley and Sir Walter (Really!) Raleigh wither under Miss Mallett's schoolmistress of an Elizabeth. Poor Will, himself, is lost in the confusion of who "did write that blankety-blank verse."

Not satisfied, they rewrite Cours Elementaire, and manage to make a love story out of it. Basic French, as the company do it, should be required reading of every undergraduate French.

Fine Frenzy also knows when to stop talking. Then Barbara Franklin and Bill Cole, whose voices make the lyrics sound better than they are, start singing. Or Willy Block Hanson breaks into a dance. Miss Hanson's Frenzied Folk (Liberace, Marceau and Eartha Kitt) are almost as amusing as the originals.

Not all Fine Frenzy's skits, songs and dances are continuously entertaining. Sometimes there are a few outrageous puns to be sat through, or a joke wears a bit thin. But something funny or nostalgic or original is bound to turn up without too long a wait.

And there is the music, culled from hundreds of places, and ably played by a two-piano team under John Coveart. Rudi Dorn's setting is sensibly simple and very practical. Clarence Wilson's costumes shine little in their own right, but they do reinforce the production considerably.

Under Robert Christie's direction, the show flowed smoothly, unobstructed by set changes. Fine Frenzy deserves a longer run than it will probably get.

Henry Temianka In H. H. Concert

Henri Temianka, concert-violinist and leader of the world-famous Paganini String Quartet, will give the first of the Hart House Sunday Evening concerts this Sunday at nine o'clock.

Mr. Temianka has been a visiting artist teacher in different schools throughout the United States, and is now on the staff of the Royal Conservatory of Music.

The Paganini Quartet was organized in 1946 with Mr. Temianka as a founding member and he has been its leader ever since. Its name is derived from the fact that all four players play Stradivaris that belonged to the violinist of 100 years ago, Nicolo Paganini. Mr. Temianka's instrument is the famous 1727 Stradivari used by Paganini himself.

Mr. Temianka will play Variations on a Theme by Corelli of Tartini-Kreisler, Sonatina in G Minor of Schubert, Concerto in E Minor, Op. 64 of Mendelssohn, and Bartok-Szekely's Rumanian Dances.

There are eight Sunday Evening concerts held in the Great Hall; four in the first term and four in the second. The remaining fall concerts will have Patricia Snell, soloist; Mario Bernardi, pianist; and the Mary Magdelene Singers.

Tickets are available free of charge at the Porter's desk in Hart House to all members.

Folk In A Fever

BY TONY NOXON

Little work has been done in the field of certain dangerous diseases, and to remedy this, the Varsity's Fact Finding Committee in collaboration with the eminent medical authority Dr. Alphonsius G. Hoffenblatz herewith publishes a list of these diseases and their symptoms for the edification of the student body.

The first report is on a disease which is not too prevalent just now but which afflicts thousands of unfortunate students later on in the year. It is called:

1. Tedio Lectorum or

Why the Hell Did I Take Sanskrit?

The early stages of this disease are characterized by an extreme restlessness in the patient, and often an acute desire to communicate with those around him. These symptoms are soon replaced, however, by intense weariness, and a peculiar inability to keep the eyes from closing. The patient, knowing he is in the grip of this insidious disease, may make desperate attempts to keep the eyes open, thus running the risk of severe pop-eyeditis, but more usually, realizing that all struggle is useless, he succumbs, and with resignation passes into a state of complete oblivio, sometimes emitting loud sounds, (snorus), especially if the mouth remains open. Should the disease reach epidemic proportions in any one lecture room, as it sometimes does, the noise may be so great as to necessitate a cancellio lectorum.

There are several known remedies for this malady, also known as borus extremus and borus borus, among which the application of a good novelus de seno, or, in a pinch, even a current Varsitas is widely recommended. However, for prompt and complete relief, an immediate changeo professorus is required.

The next affliction is called:

2. Crusho Bibliarum or

Bookshop Bedlam

This is a painful and sometimes fatal disease which attacks most students at the beginning of each academic year. The patient has extreme difficulty in breathing and experiences a feeling of intense pressure on all sides. The pressure may soon become unbearable and asquishus asphyxio, the crushing and asphyxiation of the unfortunate victim is not entirely uncommon. Dr. H. has noted that if the patient can be supplied immediately with his libris de curso, the more acute stage of the disease may be avoided, and the patient may soon recover, having experienced only a mild exhaustio sardinis. However, no foolproof remedy has been devised as yet.

Perhaps the commonest of all student afflictions is:

3. Examinio Finalium or

Pass the Aspirin, Gaspin

The disease is accompanied by feelings of depression and acute melancholia. The patient becomes irritable, restless, and sleeps little. He is smitten with librarium frequentum, and exhibits an unnatural desire to decipher old notus lectorum, sometimes becoming dangerous if these are illegibilibs. The disease is very often fatal to a patient already weakened by tedio lectorum, or one who has not sufficiently recovered from a crusho bibliarum. Sufficient doses of old notus lectorum, and a couple of shots of textus prescriptus enable most students to survive with a passio although some may contract a nasty case of flunkum, for which modern science knows no remedy.

Dame Wheeler On Education

Adolescents Are Unstable Must Find Ethical World

The big question in modern education, according to a prominent British educator visiting Toronto, is the degree of emphasis being placed on esthetic subjects in school curricula.

In these days of change in academic studies, it is important that adolescents be shown evidence of the existence of an ethical world, Dame Olive Wheeler, Emeritus Professor of Education, University College, Cardiff, Wales, said yesterday.

She was speaking to a lunch-hour student assembly at the Ontario College of Education yesterday. Dame Wheeler is former dean of education faculties at Manchester and Cardiff.

The prominent writer and educator spoke on the subject "The Challenge of Youth." She said that, as most of her listeners would soon be out in schools as teachers, they should have an understanding of the adolescent, and the changes which take place during this age period.

The growing youth, she stated, matured not only in body, but also in intelligence. The maximum in intelligence is reached between the ages of 16 and 18, on the average. The human then continues in "top gear" for many years, gaining experience in various fields. But, Dame Wheeler, explained, in these growing years, there is a sudden surge in new intellectual interests.

A further fundamental and profound change occurs in an adolescent's emotions at this age. These tend to be characteristic, Professor Wheeler contended.

To support this, she quoted answers to a questionnaire given to university students. The quiz had attempted to elicit information concerning what they could remember from their adolescence.

Answers indicated there had been new ambitious feelings, vocational daydreams and compensatory dreams. Many children experience these daydreams, but, if they are not helpful in adjusting to life, then they are of no use.

Therein, claimed the speaker, lies another duty of secondary school teachers. It is for them to help young people find a niche in society so they will gain psychological and economic independence.

This, in turn, leads to another big problem at the growing period. There is a real need for independence. This produces opposition to established views and established authority.

A natural and awakened interest in the opposite sex is also a characteristic of adolescence, Dame Wheeler continued. She said remarks in the questionnaire indicated students had in fact fallen in and out of love "continuously during this period." One claimed he had lost count of episodes. Even those who claimed no over interest admitted to romantic daydreams.

This is apparently a prelude to marriage and the founding of a new home, and serves as an adjustment to this idea.

There are also formed at this time new social emotions, new friendships, hero worship and a gang spirit. It is up to teachers to see that many of these energies are channelled into the right directions. If we, as adults, do not, Dame Wheeler emphasized, many of these youths will form anti-social gangs.

Adolescents also have a new feeling, new esthetic emotions. They begin to see beauty in music, art, literature, poetry and nature. There is an awakening to spiritual values. The growing person is getting into relationship, not only with the material world, but with the world of ideals, perhaps for the first time.

The period, generally, is one of emotional instability, the Welsh professor concluded. Are teachers doing enough to help the adolescent in adjusting to a job, marriage, in the acceptance of social responsibility and the search for an ethical code and a philosophy of life?

This was what she wanted her listeners to think about while they were at college. Perhaps they could come up with some answers as they began to teach themselves. They could help as guidance officers, biologists and in showing the way to an interest in the ethical world.

Runneth-Over

Hamilton: Student waiters who have gone on strike at McMaster University are forcing students there to eat dinner cafeteria style. The waiters are striking for higher wages.

A leaflet issued by the administration declares that the wages cannot be boosted without a raise in residence fees. For the present, the leaflet concludes, all meals will be served cafeteria style; but male students are still expected to dress in suit coat and tie, "dressed for the company of the Dean of Women and other ladies."

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan: A giant red COMMERCE, painted across the Engineer's sidewalk, is causing some mystery out on the University of Saskatchewan campus. The Commerce students claim no knowledge of the incident.

The sidewalk, a brand-new one, just built by the engineers, had an unofficial opening, with members of the student council, kidnapped by hoodlums in Commerce jackets, being forced to cut ceremonial ribbons.

An editorial by the assistant editor of the Sheaf suggests that the incident is not altogether to be blamed. At least it shows the existence of some college spirit on the campus, the editorial remarks.

Minneapolis, Minnesota: Students and faculty are provided with parking lots at the University of Minnesota. Although car owners have to pay for parking privileges, they at least have adequate facilities. A change in policy there has resulted in a new plan, so that students pay as they leave, instead of causing a tie-up before classes in the morning. In this way, professors may be able to reach their classes on time.

Hamilton: Prime Minister St. Laurent will address the autumn convocation of McMaster University this week. He will also receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Adlai Stevenson addressed the Fall Convocation of Queen's University last weekend. He also received a Doctor of Laws degree. St. John's, Newfoundland: The Memorial University of Newfoundland is located in St. John's, Newfoundland, not in St. John, New Brunswick, as was incorrectly stated earlier in this column.

Student Rate For TSO

Season tickets for the Toronto Symphony Orchestra student-concerts are now available from Ken Thomson (Vic), president of the T.S.O. Student Council. The $2.00 tickets entitle holders to attend four Tuesday concerts on November 1st and 29th, January 24th, and March 6th. In addition, they grant admission to one of the four or five Friday-night "pop concerts," which will feature such artists as Calvin Jackson and Leroy Anderson.

"Musically speaking, 1955 is a gala year," says Mr. Thomson. "We herald Mozart's 200th anniversary, Jean Sibelius' 90th birthday, and the 25th anniversary of Sir Ernest MacMillan as T.S.O.

conductor, which is also, incidentally, his retirement year. This year the T.S.O. will again hold concerts especially for students, with the intention of familiarizing them with classical music."

The Bartered Book

By RALPH BERRIN

Have you decided to use textbooks yet? The place to buy or sell them is the Students' Administrative Council's Book Exchange at 119 St. George, side door. Every book for every course is on sale at bargain prices.

But you'd better hurry, for this is the final week of sales at the Book Exchange. And any eager-beaver money-grabbers take note: final settlement of accounts between 1:30 and 5:30, this Friday, October 21.

If you want the textbook of Entomology ($4) or Racine's Britannicus (5c.), the Book Exchange has it. There's Lilly De Rei Medica ($14) and World Resources and Industries ($5.50) if you want your books big, or Clark's Tables (20c.) or the New Testament (30c.) if you want something small.

MR. MANAGER

The Exchange is under the efficient direction of Manager Henri Le Sueur (IV C&F). With a hard-working staff of six students, he is capable of processing thousands of books a day. To handle all the books, Le Sueur has devised a new system of recording books with special tab receipts for the owner. This is one way in which he has speeded handling during his three years as Book Exchange Manager.

This year the stock has been inspected and all books on the shelves for more than three years have been removed. This innovation makes for easier selection of those books remaining, and old outmoded texts have been relegated to a back room.

Manager Le Sueur has another ingenious plan for the Exchange—a fire-sale at drastically reduced prices for some of the texts; but this will have to be formally sanctioned by the SAC.

HANDLING

Every book that is brought in is marked with a number identifying the seller. Later, when the book is sold, this number is again recorded along with the price paid, and the original owner can then collect his money, less 10% for handling expenses.

Multiply the work of recording and selling each book by 10,000 and you have an idea of the average day's work for the Exchange's student staff.

HOW TO SELL YOUR BOOKS:
In the early fall, the books are brought in to the bookstore by the student. Book Exchange policy does not allow the student to ask any price higher than 75% of the price the book last sold at, so after a few years of resales real bargains are available!

SPONSOR

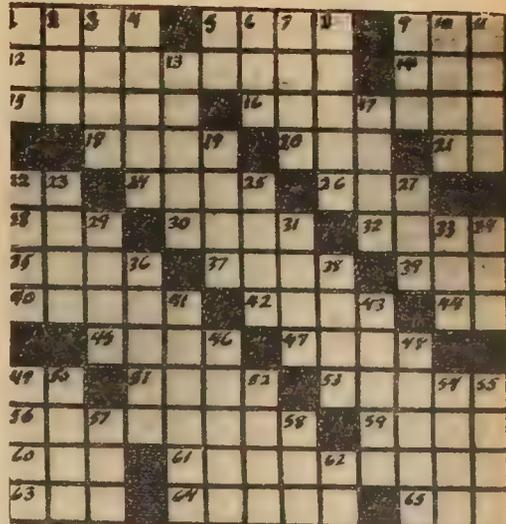

The Book Exchange is an SAC activity. All profits on the exchange—they are usually quite low—go to the SAC to help run student affairs.

And this SAC activity helps the student at his weakest spot—the money bag!

Western Nations Are Fools Russian Bear Not Pigeon

A St. Michael's College debater said last night western statesmen have been characterized by an attitude of gullibility and child-like faith.

Joe Valenti (I SMC) spoke in support of the resolution "The post-Geneva spirit is a delusion" in a St. Mike's-Trinity debate in Brennan Hall last night.

He said Russian overtures of friendship would only be considered civilized in another nation and the Russian capacity has never been greater since World War II.

He demonstrated that because of wars on many fronts, Russia's past policy of aggression made peace unlikely.

Middleton of Trinity countered that relaxation of tensions by the Kremlin was a realization of basic facts not an act of grace. He believed that two powers with opposite ideologies could exist together as Roman Catholics and Protestants had after the reformation.

He quoted insulting remarks of followers of William of Orange about the Pope, showing how fanatical the protestants were; but the two camps did not dare to clash because both were equally strong, he said.

Saint Michael's won 26-5 on merit of speakers, but the debate decision was awarded to Trinity.

Doug Stewart of Trinity said it was possible for conflicting ideologies to exist together and that Dulles' and MacCarthy's policy of mass retaliation was obsolete. He said the Russians are circulating in Western Countries, for example the farm delegation to the U.S. and they would take home a good outlook towards the U.S.

Russia's invitation to Canadian students to study in Russia was an indication of friendship, he added.

Jack Cudmore (I SMC) argued the West was not to be fooled by the Russian bear dressed up as a pigeon. Russia is only trying to get a breathing space to catch up on armaments, he said.

Students Hold Panel Tensions Are Topic

Four students who spent the summer of 1955 abroad have returned with new angles on the economic, social and political problems of the Far East, Scandinavia and Africa. They will discuss the problem of "Tensions in our Time" at a meeting of the Modern History Club today, October 20, at 8 p.m. in Falconer Hall.

Travelling under the auspices of the World University Service of Canada, Gay Sellars (IV Modern History) and Jim Carter (I Emmanuel) visited Japan, and Marty Friedland (I Law), visited Africa. Gord Sheppard (II General) went to Finland with the Hart House Exploration Society exchange. All attended summer seminars aimed at promoting international understanding.

These four students will form a discussion panel under the chairmanship of Professor H. Nelson, editor of the International Journal and History Department staff member.

Interested students are invited to attend and to join in the informal question period which will follow the panel, said a club spokesman.

University PHE Class Appearing On Video

A feature television program on the work of the School of Physical Health and Education at the U of T is scheduled for the end of the month.

The CBC Exploring Minds show for October 30 is aimed at clearing up any misconceptions that may exist in the public mind about the necessity of training young men and women to teach others the skills of sport and the benefits of recreation.

Doubts about the place of training in sport and recreation on a university curriculum will be investigated during the program, which will visit classes in progress at the School of Physical Health and Education and on the playing field. Interviews with students and staff will also find a place on the show.

Idea behind the Exploring Minds series is to give air time to the advanced thinking that is going on in Canadian Universities, said a CBC spokesman. Participating in the series (besides Toronto) will be the Universities of B.C., Manitoba, Ottawa and Montreal, Carleton College, McGill and possibly Queen's.

Other topics slated for discussion during the rest of the series include semantics, juvenile delinquency, ancient and modern concepts of the devil, esthetics, the meaning of perception and freedom of the press in Canada.

Two programs on the life of Sir John A. Macdonald have been written and will be narrated by Professor Creighton of the U of T department of history. Results of Professor Creighton's researches on Macdonald have already made their appearance on radio programs.

Campus Profile:

Doreen Fogarty

By TONY NOXON

How does someone become a drum majorette? Well, it takes looks, personality, skill and stamina, and Varsity's pretty, petite (5'14") Doreen Fogarty has all of these. Representing Physical and Occupational Therapy in the trials, she was chosen from about seven applicants for this important and glamorous position.

But of course, being a drum majorette is not all glamor... it takes work, and besides drum-majoretting at the games, Doreen tries to spend about an hour each evening in practicing and working up new routines. In fact, the new job will probably mean that she will not be able to play baseball and basketball as she did last year, although she would like to play hockey.

Coming from St. Joseph's College School where she was a prefect in her last year, Doreen is in second year P&OT and eventually hopes to become, of course, a physical or occupational therapist.

She likes University, takes her course seriously, and attends lectures regularly. She tries to confine her social life to weekends (except in the fall when it's practically impossible) so that it will not interfere with work.

Doreen has boyfriends, but as Varsity fans may be glad to hear, there is "no one in particular." She is interested in music and likes rhythm and the blues. She also plays the piano by ear.

Personality? Doreen is a sincere and friendly person who will ably represent Varsity in her position as drum majorette.

Plan Weekend Exchanges Cornell, U of M Participate

Student exchanges between Toronto and the University of Montreal, Cornell University and another American college, as yet undecided, will take place again this year.

President Sidney Smith has described these exchanges as "a priceless investment in understanding and good fellowship." The purpose of the Toronto-Montreal weekends is to promote a true picture of French and English-speaking relations. Carabin students will come to Toronto December 1-4; forty students from Varsity will go to Montreal February 3-6.

Cornell has invited Toronto to send six students to participate in a Canadian-Cornell weekend November 17-20. Several Canadian universities will take part.

Definite plans for the other American visit have not been made. It is expected about 20 students from the University of Toronto will take part in a reciprocal exchange. One weekend will be held this term, the other during the new year.

Policy Statement

The Hart House Orchestra Associates announces the resumption of its programme for the academic year 1955-1956. The constitution adopted by the organization on its inception last March states the purpose of the Hart House Orchestra Associates as follows: "To encourage an interest in music on the campus through the Hart House Orchestra." The constitution also provides that membership in the Associates "will entitle the holder to attend all concerts, lectures and rehearsals sponsored by the Hart House Orchestra Associates."

An advertisement which appeared in a downtown newspaper did not fully explain the purposes and total programme of the Associates. By various means, such as lectures by the conductor, the offering of concerts and attendance at rehearsals, the Associates seek to promote a greater interest in, and knowledge of, music as a contribution to the cultural life of the University.

The programme as at present planned for the next few months includes a series of five concerts by the Orchestra and two lectures by Dr. Boyd Neel. Members of the Associates are invited to attend rehearsals of the Orchestra which are held in Hart House prior to all its engagements. The dates now established for the concerts are: November 27, December 11, January 22, February 5 and March 11. The first lecture will be given on December 8.

Membership in the Hart House Orchestra Associates is open to University students, faculty, graduates and friends of the University who are interested in supporting the purposes of the organization.

HART HOUSE ORCHESTRA ASSOCIATES

Students Plan Weekday Talks For Ticket Holders; Members Must Be On Campus—McGrath

BY M. B. PENGELLEY

The Hart House Orchestra Associates are back in business. And five Sunday night concerts, cancelled last week when a Lord's Day Alliance official charged that they contravened Ontario's "Sunday Blue Laws," are going ahead. The first concert will be given in Hart House, Sunday, November 27.

Rev. A. S. McGrath, the Executive-Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance said over the telephone last night that he had no objection to the concerts providing membership was confined to people associated with the University.

But, referring to a statement issued yesterday by the 10 students comprising the Hart House Orchestra Associates, Mr. McGrath said:

"The part that bothers me is that which states that membership will be open to students, faculty, graduates, and friends . . . What is meant, here, by friends?"

A member of the Associates said later that "friends" could be defined as people closely allied with the university, although in no official capacity.

The single-page type-written statement issued yesterday by Henry Best, Vice-President of the Associates, emphasized for the first time that two week-day lectures are to be given by Dr. Boyd Neel, conductor of the Orchestra, and that all ticket-holding members were entitled to attend rehearsals.

"It is too soon yet, for me to make any definite statement," Mr. McGrath said, "but I will say that I hope the decision is not a subterfuge to get around the law, but a bona fide attempt to keep within the provisions of the Lord's Day Act.

Dr. Neel was delighted at the news, "I'm very glad indeed," he said, "I heard about it this afternoon. I'm glad that sanity has been restored and that the forces of evil have been dispersed."

Dr. Neel scorned attempts by some to "whitewash" the Lord's Day Alliance.

"It's no use blaming it all on the law," he said, "If the Lord's Day Alliance people had really wanted the concerts to go on, all they had to do was keep quiet."

Mr. McGrath said that the Lord's Day Alliance had no moral objections to hearing music on Sundays.

"We have no objection to you students getting together on Sunday to hear music," he said, "On the contrary, we'd say 'go ahead' . . . but when it becomes a matter whereby anyone can pay to get in, we object—we are just asking for others to come along and do the same."

University President Sidney Smith said last night that the "University" had endorsed the Hart House Orchestra Associates and would back them up.

Asked whether the Board of Governors would also stand behind the Associates in the event of legal conflict with the Lord's Day Alliance, Dr. Smith said, "I can't say that . . . that is up to the board."

The President made it clear, however, that in his position as academic head of the University, he was fully behind the associates.

The fuss over the Hart House Orchestra series burst about 10 days ago.

University lawyers then advised the Associates to pull in their horns. Next day the concerts were cancelled.

But such a stir was made throughout the city, that the Associates, taking heart again, began working behind the scenes.

Toronto newspapers played up the fact that "Blue Laws"—aided and abetted by Lord's Day Alliance, among them the Student day while prohibiting Beethoven.

On campus, over 800 University of Toronto students signed petitions attacking Lord's Day Alliance, among them, the Student Christian Movement, which called the Alliance action, "untoward."

Meanwhile, President Smith paid one or two calls off campus to see what could be done about patching things up with Lord's Day Alliance.

Late yesterday, the University officials gave the green light to go ahead, and the Associates issued their statement.

Chest X-ray Time Now Last Chance Next Week

Time is running out. There's only a few days left to have your free T.B. chest x-ray. So have it right now.

The survey started October 13 and will continue until October 7. The C.O.T.C. Drill Hall, 119 St. George Street, is the place to go.

A chest x-ray is compulsory to all new students and all final year students. It is also obligatory annually to all medsmen, nurses, and all students whose home is not in Canada. Dental students in their first and last two years are also required to submit to the examination.

Appointments are necessary for all those who are in the compulsory category. They can be made by all women and by Arts men at the Health Service, 43 St. George Street. Men in other faculties should get in touch with their Class President.

The survey is being conducted by the University Health Service in co-operation with the National Sanatorium Association (Gage Institute). It is brought here for the protection of the whole university.

Today is the day those without appointments may attend. Walk in at any time. All students and staff are urged to take advantage of this opportunity.

BLACK PANTHERS UPEND VIC 7-0

MacDonald Intercepts Vic Pass Goes 100 Yards For Touchdown

By JOHN BROOKS

Benny was right! Trinity did clean Vic's clock and they cleaned it good and well too, thanks to some good hard backfield running and a spectacular 100 yard jaunt by John MacDonald for a major score. But you can't take anything away from the boys in the red and gold jerseys. Faced by Norm Williams, they were in the thick of the fight all the way, and it was good, aggressive play on the Black Panthers' part which won the game, not a series of bad breaks for Vic.

Victoria threatened on the very first play of the game when Williams went 50 yds. down the sidelines, and the last two Trinity men between him and an open field came up with the tackle. The red and black tightened up, however, and picked up a Vic fumble on their own twenty to relieve the danger.

Towards the end of the first frame, Trinity blocked a punt and recovered the ball on the Vic fifteen. After a short gain and an incomplete pass, Dave Smith tried a field goal; the ball just missed the upright, but had enough momentum to go to the deadline and give the Panthers a 1-0 lead which they held throughout the remainder of the first half.

Trinity received the second half kickoff and got nowhere on two plays. Brook Ellis kicked to the Vic forty yard line. Williams went for two first downs in succession to put the Redmen in scoring position. White and Shoemaker came up with good tackles on the plays. Frank Ebenhardt went back to pass and Williams raced out into the right flat. He fell, got back up again, but the split second he was on the ground was all the time the Panthers' MacDonald needed to get into position. Ebenhardt let fly a beautiful pass, straight for his man, MacDonald cut in front, gathered the ball in, and raced down the sidelines. About the Vic forty he shook off one man, and kept going. Three red jerseys were right on his tail as he crossed the ten and they finally hit him at the goal line, but it was too late then.

The convert was equally spectacular. Jimmy Loucks was prepared to kick when the ball came high on the snap. Loucks bared around the right end, was tackled by one man but felled over the line with the ball to make the score 7-0.

That took care of the scoring for the game, and although it was actually the single point back in the second quarter which was the margin of victory, MacDonald was the hero of the game.

The last quarter was mainly exchanges of the ball on punts and fumbles. Trinity held the ball on the Vic twenty when the game ended.

The Panthers had the edge in play, although they only picked up four first downs to Vics' eight. Ebenhardt tried seven passes and completed one, while Smith completed one of three. Following the pattern of Group One contests this year, the game was closely played, and Trinity can attribute its win to four quarters of heads up ball.

Harrier Team Meets Niagara

With the track and field season successfully completed on Wednesday afternoon, the U. of T. distance runners are now ready to launch into the second part of their outdoor program. The cross-country season gets under way officially on Saturday afternoon when the Varsity exhibition harrier squad journeys to Niagara University for a dual meet.

This year's squad hopes to duplicate the feat of its track and field brethren, and bring back the harrier trophy to Toronto. The powerful Niagara quintet are expected to give the largely inexperienced Blue squad a thorough testing.

The following runners are asked to be at Hart House by 10:00 on Saturday morning: Bill Gelling, Bruce Hughes, Mal McLeod, Mike Berger, Don Myers, Tom Stroud and Doug McIntyre.

Blues Face Dick Carr's Passing

With the season half over and things in general looking pretty golden, Varsity's undefeated, league-leading Blues travel to old

Speaking OF SPORT

By MAX ROSENTHAL

We understand Harry Sonshine is sending four new students to Kingston as reinforcements for this Saturday's Gael-Mustang game. The four in question are Al Pfeifer, Corky Tharp, Bruno Banducci and Slug Witucki. We also understand they are eligible. "It doesn't matter if it's Queen's or Varsity or Western or Forest Hill Collegiate," said Sonshine, "We're always willing to help out that way. We told the intermediate and junior clubs around town that any time our players had time off, they'd be able to help out." Sonshine also said that Frank Tindall, coach of Queens, "asked us if we could send somebody down to give him a hand with his pass patterns (whose pass patterns—the Argos' or Queen's?)."

Of course, we realize the fact that Sonshine is a graduate of Queen's has nothing to do with his benevolent attitude towards Queen's. The fact that Tindall also has four assistant coaches, one a former Montreal Alouette, also has nothing to do with it. (Incidentally, we're surprised Sonshine didn't send Bill Swiacki to Kingston — permanently.)

The Gaels couldn't have found better men. Banducci was an All-Star guard in the National Football League for four seasons. Pfeifer is the Big Four's leading scorer and is second to Red O'Quinn in pass reception. Tharp, a recent cut of Cleveland Browns, has been a stalwart for the Argos, and is currently being sought by the San Francisco 49ers. It is said Witucki is vacillating, not knowing whether to play for Queen's or Varsity Blues.

Speaking of the Blues, we also understand Bob Masterson has sent Dalt White and Earl Ford up to Montreal to give the Alouettes a few pointers. On being queried White neither affirmed nor denied this. He simply shrugged his shoulders and smiled. Ford was unavailable for comment. The silence of the University of Toronto Athletic Directorate is almost a confirmation of their departure.

Meanwhile Back At The . . .

. . . Blue camp the Blues are prepping for their game with McGill to-morrow. Over in the Argo dressing room at Varsity Stadium Harry Sonshine is walking around probably repeating to himself, "We'll help anyone . . ." (What about Balmy Beach, Mr. Sonshine?)

Max's Muses . . . Blue soccer and rugger teams journey to Montreal this weekend . . . the soccer squad has won all of its four games this year, three on shutouts. They are playing the second game of their two game total point series to-morrow. The Blues won the first game 4-1 . . . The Intermediate football team plays in Guelph against OAC today . . . next Friday they play Western here . . . both the Baby Blues and Western are loaded . . . should be a good game to watch.

Sportswriters

If any more of you pure-bred oaves come down here looking for jobs on the Varsity there's going to be a killing of sorts. The Varsity doesn't need any more sportswriters at all, in fact we're continually falling over, getting in the way of etc. those that are here already. It's pretty crowded. Stay away!

Baby Blues Meet Aggies McIntyre, Rowney Playing

If scores are any indication, the Baby Blues are in for a rough time when they engage OAC under the lights tonight in Guelph. While the Blues beat Queen's 35-0, the Aggies own a 56-1 victory over the same Comets. Guelph also defeated McMaster Marauders 29-0.

The Intermediates will be without the services of Mike Syron, who was injured in the game with Ryerson, and Ted Lansky, whose academic obligations will force him to miss this game. Coach Kennedy will also miss top lineman Norm Levine who has been called up to the parent Blues for the game against McGill on Saturday. To replace Levine, Dave McIntyre and Jim Rowney will come down to play for the Intermediates tonight. McIntyre is a centre, and will share duties with Pete Polecron who has handled the last two games alone. Rowney plays guard, and it is possible that Kennedy may juggle his line to fit Jim into a steady spot tonight.

The Aggies have obviously become a much stronger ball club since the early-season 39-0 shellacking they took from the Blues. Kennedy feels that this is the hardest game of the season and told us also that his boys have their comparatively weak showing of Tuesday out of their system and are ready to go all out to trounce the OAC men. The coach added that the Aggies are boasting probably one of the strongest teams the Intermediate League has ever had, so it's obvious the Baby Blues will have to come up with their best showing of the season if they intend to stay above the .500 mark.

Women's Tennis Starting

To-day is the opener of the Intercollegiate Women's Tennis Tournament, with the University of Toronto playing host to Western, McMaster, Queen's, and McGill at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club, starting this morning at 9:30 and continuing on through the day until 4:30. The matches will get under way again on Saturday and the final matches will be decided by noon.

As the old saying goes, "no news is good news," and on this maxim, Toronto is hoping the opponents be not too strong, and we must admit that Varsity's chances are excellent. Although Liz Jennings, Mary Ann, and Barb Holmes, West-ern are back again this season for their first singles, I think that they will do along with one-eyed Benny and put my money on the old Blue and White quartette.

The Toronto foursome is composed of Mary Nunn, St. Hilda's II, Mary Lynn Boys, St. Hilda's III, Ann Kilgore, POT III, and Pru Smith, Vic I. Not only on the courts do these lovelies swing an excellent racket, but on paper, their records are outstanding.

Mary Nunn, who is playing first singles, is former Ontario Ladies' Junior Champion, as well as having captured the St. Hilda's crown this year along with the B.&R. Club's singles and doubles honours. Another Trinity gal, Mary Lynn Boys is also an Ontario Junior player, in addition to having been a member of the Intercollegiate team two years ago, when she batted the ball over the net with such finesse as to win the 1953 matches for Toronto.

The doubles matches are being played by Anne Kilgore and Pru Smith. Anne, not only as tennis curator has done an excellent job in arranging the tournament, but she is also quite a tennis star in her own right. As well as being Hamilton District Junior and Senior champ, she has also found time to have played on the Intercollegiate team for the last three years. A newcomer to the team and to this university is Pru Smith who eliminated Ruth Marshall for the other doubles position. Pru plays out of the Boulevard Club in Toronto, and from all reports she is also a top-notch badminton player.

The matches are open to the student body, so we highly recommend that you make your way down to the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club to see some of these Gussie Molans in action. Best of luck!

Montreal this afternoon for their second bout with Larry Sullivan's doormats.

"Things are going to be tough down there," observed Bob Masterson last night, although it's a little hard to believe "If a kid can go out there and throw thirty-five or forty passes a game, with a couple of good receivers, and maybe score two quick touchdowns, well you never know what might happen." The Varsity mentor explained, McGill's clever Dick Carr, ex-Columbia quarterback, could be the man who'll give the Blues a problem tomorrow afternoon when they tackle the Redmen in Montreal.

Carr threw 34 passes against the Blues last Saturday, but only completed thirteen, his favorite targets being Bob Holland and Bill Bennett. This week Sullivan will start Bob Perry, another passing threat, at one half, and hard-working Bob Hutcheson at the other. Versatile Rick Adrian goes at fullback, while newcomer Willie Picard, just up from the Indians, will draw the starting assignment at flying wing.

Along the line McGill will be stronger than ever, backed by Buster Brown despite an injured hand. Rae Brown will give the Blues trouble too, and tomorrow afternoon big 215-pound centre Vaughn McVey gets his start in Intercollegiate ball.

The Blues have been considerably weakened along the line by injuries, especially the torn rib cartilages of Al Watt. Earl Ford will miss this one too with cracked ribs. Masterson has a bed and Norm Levine up the Intermediates to take the place of John Casey who has been moved over to Watt's spot for the game with McGill. Tackles Walt Radzick and George Eakin are doubtful starters too, both on the limp with bad knees.

End Don Smith still has a bad ankle but should be ready for next week's crucial contest with the Golden Gaels in Kingston. Halfback Al Riva may miss this one too, Riva has a cyst on his knee and had a little trouble running last night. Other news that the Blue will be a full strength for the Redmen.

Phil Muntz and Jack Rogers can be counted on for a potent ground attack, but Masterson hopes to throw his best pass offense against the Redmen. A good day in Montreal could mean an aerial duel between Carr and Wilson and Skrzypek.

hurrah?

So the Hart House Orchestra Associates are holding the concerts after all. We want to cry "Hurrah," but somehow it doesn't come out on the same cheery note that we intended.

Presumably, the Lord's Day Alliance has perceived that this case was not a popular one and would not help their general endeavour.

The administration, after a few hesitations, is now prepared to adopt the popular infant left on its doorstep.

This is really very nice, there is no denying it. And we are happy for the Orchestra which will now receive support, and for the students who will now have an opportunity of enjoying good music on their campus.

But the Lord's Day Alliance still exists ready to pounce on any other less fortunate organization without the funds or backing to contest a legal case. The alliance has temporarily abandoned the case before the greater opposition of public opinion, but it still waits and watches, conscious of its power to interfere with similar ventures so long as the Lord's Day Act continues to exist in its present form.

Now there is no martyr. But let us not lose the fish through our preoccupation with the worm.

sounding brass

We think it's about time that the blatant beast was banished from the Arbor Room.

Too long have we sat with our coffee practically springing from our cups in disgust at the noise proceeding from that painted hussy, the nickelodeon.

Too long have we tried to talk to friends, to make some fine philosophic point, to discuss the football match, or even just to say hello, through the frenzied fracas of the newest hit tunes, or the oldest in modern dress.

Too long have we tried to sleep, to dream quietly in a corner, just watching the social flora and fauna, only to be prodded into a restless mental dance to the rhythm of a never ending Bolero.

Too long has that eyesore squatted triumphantly against the wall waiting to swallow the poor student's much-prized moneys and spewing up in return the latest canned goods.

We have come to a poor pass if we can take so little delight in human company that we have to lard it over with a dollop of sentimental music (or musack). And we have come to a poor pass if we can arouse no romantic sentiments in the member of the opposite sex without "the potency of cheap music."

Let us take our conversation straight, rather than diluting it with weak stop-gaps, or if we must have music with our coffee, let us make it ourselves.

A Civil War?

Confederacy Wanted

By C. CLYDE BATTEN

Canada's national student federation has been the centre of controversy since it was formed nearly 30 years ago by a group of prominent students representing several universities.

It has grown from a loose-knit agency aiming at unifying Canadian students to a formalized organization, complete with permanent national office and legal incorporation.

Throughout its history it has been plagued by two major difficulties; inadequate financing and confusion over its nature and purpose.

Twice since the war the federation has increased its fees: from six cents to 20 cents (when the national office was established); and from 20 cents to 50 cents (when the full-time national presidency was established).

Both of these steps were designed to take care of the second problem by increasing a national sense of student unity and by promoting, more effectively, student welfare.

On examining the program of the national federation; scholarship campaign, student discount service, culture competitions and travel department it appears that only one of these—travel—requires a central office for its operation.

The other projects could be as adequately handled on a local level.

The scholarship campaign is certainly more effective on the individual campus level. Student discount service can only be operated locally, chiefly because many universities feel local merchants subsidize student activities heavily through contributions to student publications and other projects.

In the final analysis it appears that even the cultural competitions—art, photography, and short story contests—are in reality the work of one local federation committee.

For the Travel department a central office is definitely needed, yet this one aspect of the federation's activity is above all others most capable of being maintained on a self-supporting basis.

What functions then could a national office serve?

It can stand as the embodiment of the unity among students to be found in the federation.

Most students are agreed that a national federation of some sort is needed. Many will not feel that the present constitution is the most effective. The national office, stands, however, as the tangible evidence of the unity among students the organization was formed to promote.

Secondly, the national office can serve as a focus for lobbying by national federation.

The organization should serve to pressure government and business groups into supporting many phases of student activity both on the national and international level.

The national office as presently organized cannot adequately fulfill these functions because:

1. There is a fundamental disagreement within the ranks of the national federation whether it should justify itself in terms of projects and programs or concentrate on being a lobbying force.

2. Someone, somewhere, sometime started "selling" the national federation on a money-saved, projects offered basis.

3. This error was compounded by national executives who expended their energies in unfruitful activity and tried to justify the federation in terms of "projects" and gimmicks which the average student greeted with profound indifference.

4. The organization is a federation of students and not a confederation of student councils. This constitutional fact makes it extremely difficult to communicate the value of the organization to student councils and individual students. The national federation now is, in effect a federation of local committees, many of whom have only the most tenuous of relations with their student councils.

Another difficulty facing the federation is the fact that representatives of universities with enrollments numbering in the hundreds have equal voting rights with those whose enrollments stand at 6,000 or more.

There seems to be at least one way out of a large part of the dilemma facing the national federation.

1. Reconstitute the federation as a confederation of student councils on the basis that it will operate in those spheres where an individual council's resources prove inadequate or its scope of operation limited.

2. Establish a system of membership and levy by representation. For every bloc of students (2,000, for example, but any other arbitrary figure will do) one vote and a flat membership fee will be prescribed.

3. This levy would be kept at a minimum. The cost of sending delegates to conferences will be borne by the member councils and any member council interested in obtaining some mandate (running the art competition, for example) will also agree to underwrite whatever costs are incurred. (These two items alone now constitute nearly 25 per cent of the federation budget.)

These suggestions could help to create a national federation which could be operated more effectively and more economically; even out the basis of representation and voting powers and would make the federation truly national (extra-local) in scope.

Disappointed

The Editor:
The Varsity:

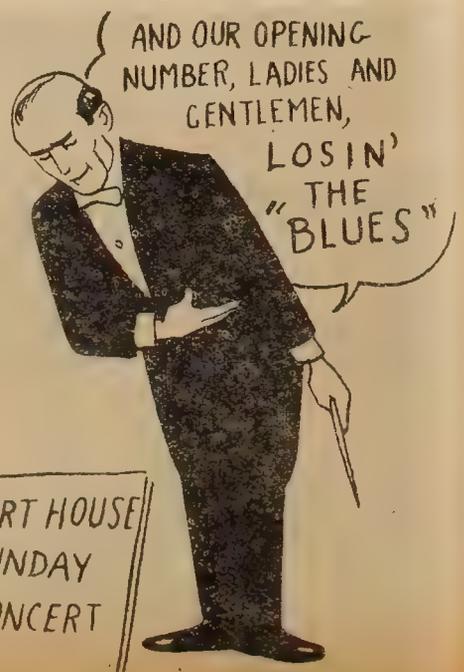

Swarms of enterprising medical students, dressed in an adolescent manner, fighting like roving juveniles, reeking of formaldehyde, a distink group, themselves, swept down on an unsuspecting Engineering float and proceeded to lay waste to all they could lay their hands on. Under the pretence of looking for the Skule Cannon, these gutless rowdies further advertised their barbaric manners by man-handling and mistreating the innocent Skule cheer-leaders, and utterly demolishing the unprotected Skule float. Only a magnificent struggle by the members of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band saved these four beauties from a degrading experience.

Surely Medsmen are more noble than this — or have they sunk to the level of teen-age hoodlums? Climb out of the gutter, medsmen! Climb up here with you trembly-toed engineers, lest you too be censored by our grand and glorious leaders.

Remember, Mr. Hill, only after you graduate will your mistakes be interred with the bones. Frankly, Medsmen, we are very disappointed in you.

VIVE LA COMÉDIE

When the familiar old Royal Alexandra curtain rose Wednesday night on the brilliantly executed set of Suzanne Laigue, the excitement beyond and behind the footlights was running high. For certain members of the fashionable first-night audience at Moliere's Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, this represented the culmination of weeks and months of frantic scurrying to ensure the financial success of the Comedie's stay in this city. For the actors, this was the dreaded Toronto audience, reputedly very cold and very hard to please anyway, and this time more difficult because of the language barrier. To add to their hardships, it was later revealed to this reviewer, they did not receive the case containing all the company make-up until twenty minutes before the show, and so had been forced to do some scurrying in the drugstores around the theatre to find whatever was available on such short notice.

For both actors and audience, the result was well worth the struggle. No critic, professional or amateur, could find very much to reproach in this production, remarkably polished, and yet giving the impression that each actor was enjoying himself in his role and in the play.

Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme is perhaps not one of Moliere's greatest plays, since at the time it was written, the court was much more interested in the dancing and musical interludes than in the comedy-satire, and so Lulli, the composer of the music, was given at least equal credit with Moliere for its first success. The Comedie did full justice to every aspect of the production, so rich that it merits and can stand more than one viewing.

The satire about Monsieur Jourdain's pathetic mania to have himself considered as one of the nobility is a good example of Moliere's amusing but nevertheless biting criticism of the customs of his time. But his genius can still be appreciated today, for the desire to climb up the social ladder is a basically human weakness, and is almost too easy to translate into the modern idiom — replacing "gentilhomme" by "high society."

Louis Seigner as M. Jourdain is physically perfect for the role, his egg-shaped face cracking so hilariously into broad grins when he discovers, for instance, that he has been speaking prose all his life without knowing it!

Jacques Charon, dancing the minuet, is a delightful bit of mimed satire, but Seigner burlesquing the satire practically causes the audience to explode. Michel Galabru's maitre d'armes with his rapid-fire fencing instructions and uproarious pronunciation of "Hup, deux," is another highlight of the scenes in which Jourdain is making his ludicrous attempts to fit himself for the life of "les gens de qualite."

The direction of Jean Meyer approaches genius on many occasions. The job of a Comedie Francaise director is impossibly hard to fill with credit, because the usual audiences know the text almost by heart, and really go to the productions to see how ingenious a director can be in bringing the printed word to life. M. Meyer, who also filled the role of Covielle with distinction, and with high comedy in the scenes of the Turkish ceremony, has ferreted out every humorous connotation in the play, and ensured its physical manifestation so cleverly that even the members of the audience who spoke no French at all could leave the hall in a more than satisfied frame of mind.

Going even farther beyond the line of duty, he has invented several bits of business that are not even suggested in the text, which triple the comedy content of the play. The only criticism possible, is of the dancers, who were certainly colourful enough, but not always in perfect agreement.

Now that Toronto has had a taste, for perhaps the first time in its history, of what real theatre is, the people responsible, in government and in show-business, may get busy and do something to raise our theatrical standards. And perhaps the next time the Comedie comes to this city, audiences will go more for its intrinsic value than for its snob appeal.

substantiated

Wednesday's opening performance of Moliere's Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme at the Royal Alex, as staged by the long-awaited Comedie Francaise, more than bore out the praise of the playwright given by Dr. F. C. A. Jeanneret, principal of University College. "In the realm of comedy, Moliere is supreme."

Dr. Jeanneret spoke on the French playwright in a lecture at the Ontario College of Education, one of a series arranged by the University of Toronto Extension Department in anticipation of the Comedie's visit.

Of Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme in particular, he said, "It is an equal perfection of acting technique, in diction, interpretation, grace of movement and decor, appealing at once to mind, ear and eye, through complete harmony of speech, music, dance, and gesture."

bob-bob-bobbin' along

By BRUCE STEWART

One of the campus' most glorious traditions reaches its eighty-third year of presentation on the last day of this month. The Vic Bob Revue has attempted in these years not only to encourage individual effort through the show, but to be an amusing expose of college life. The present spectacular, now known as the Bob, is a far cry however, from its humble ancestor.

Back in 1872 Robert Beare, janitor of Victoria College on the Strand at Cobourg, assembled a group of theologs and arts-men for an evening of light and spontaneous entertainment. The nature of the group was that of a stag where discussion, laughter and music predominated. The students thought the affair a marvellous success and resolved to meet again next year.

These informal meetings became an annual habit and developed over a period of years into a more formal show of skits and songs. By the time Victoria College moved to Toronto the tradition and format of the show were well established.

In principle the show remained the same until 1951, when the all-male Bob Revue amalgamated with the Scarlet and Gold Revue (girls). Since this happy union the Bob has become a book show with a definite story, aided by song and dance.

This year's show, mysteriously named AAAAAARGH (don't say it, scream it; don't scream it, see it), takes place in a haunted castle in Wales. And although this seems un-Victorian, two U of T students wander into the situation and infuse the castle setting with campus humour.

The development of the show from a nineteenth-century classroom to Hart House Theatre has not lost the magic and purpose of the first Bob Revue and its founder, dramatizing in an informal way the spirit and life of the campus.

Hart House Recital

Carole-Anne Craigie, who opened this year's Wednesday afternoon Hart House concert series, deserves a good deal of credit for presenting a pleasant and varied hour of piano music with only a week's notice, the scheduled performer having been unable to appear.

What particularly impressed in Miss Craigie's performance was a well-developed technique, used, not for its own sake, but to convey the musical qualities of the individual works.

The pianist began with the Sonata K. 76 of Mozart, followed by two contrasting Chopin études—nos. 3 and 4 from Opus 10. Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso is perhaps performed too often, however this interpretation uncovered in the piece new beauties that I had not heard before.

The Six Rumanian Folk Dances of Bartok seemed to be handled by Miss Craigie in too ladylike and gentle a manner. These dances must be approached without any inhibitions to bring out their robust and peasant-like characteristics.

The quiet atmosphere of Griffé's short tone-picture, The Lake At Evening, was admirably conveyed. The finale of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody with its difficult octave passages reached a brilliant climax to end the programmed selections. As an encore, Miss Craigie played a charming gavotte by Sapellnikoff.

One thing I would like to add — it was unfortunate for the artist that throughout her performance she had to contend with a piano inadequate for her talent, as well as with voracious cheers and yells from a nearby football field. Such distractions are disturbing for a performer, especially when one considers the concentration demanded in a public appearance.

An Eye For The Future

BY DIANA LANE

Professor A. Douglas Tushingham, a youthful, pipe-smoking archaeologist and Biblical scholar, and new Head of the Royal Ontario Museum's Division of Art and Archaeology, is a man with plans for the future.

Dr. Tushingham wants to see his division actively sponsoring field work in India, Pakistan, Central America and the Far East, as well as in his own special area, the Near East. No Canadian museum has ever undertaken such work.

According to Dr. Tushingham there are broad unknown expanses in the history of man which archaeology has yet to explore. The work he plans will continue the Museum's traditional policies of documenting the history of civilization and of collecting objects for their artistic value.

The work will have world-wide and national publicity value. "The Museum needs to be better known to the Canadian people, and it needs to be known outside the country too, to help prove Canada's interest in the world is not purely materialistic," Dr. Tushingham said.

Despite its rich collections, the Museum has obvious gaps which Dr. Tushingham would like to be filled either by loan, direct purchase or by exchange of duplicate objects with other museums. "A major problem facing the new Head is the Museum's collections are on display at a time when the museum should be like an iceberg," he said, "with only the tip showing and seven-eighths below."

He voiced the need for separate study collections where students can get to know the objects in all possible ways — "by handling, smelling and even chewing if they want."

Dr. Tushingham is looking forward to the time when he can fill his duties as Associate Professor of Oriental Languages in University College. He says that he enjoys teaching, especially large classes like Religious Knowledge or Oriental Literature, but at present the Museum and the problems of moving wife, two small children, plumbing and leaded-pane windows into a new house keep him busy.

This is the first time that he has worked with a museum the size and scope of the Royal Ontario Museum, but Professor Tushingham anticipates no difficulties; he has under him departmental curators who are all specialists in their own fields and behind him a great deal of experience in this type of work. Since his graduation from University College in 1936 Dr. Tushingham has been, among other things, a trustee of the Palestine Archaeological Museum and director of the American School of Oriental Research at Jerusalem.

At Queen's University where he taught before accepting his present post last April Dr. Tushingham built a museum of Near Eastern Archaeology from the ground up, collecting and preparing the exhibits and even writing the brochure himself.

Listening to Dr. Tushingham suggests that his guiding principle is to establish good relations with the Canadian public.

Dr. Tushingham's message to University students was: "We welcome everyone to come and browse in our galleries, and we are willing to answer any questions they have. We definitely want to be of service to the University."

Employment Not So Hot Next March

"This coming winter, I hazard the guess, the peak of unemployment next March will be higher than in any year since the war, with the exception of last year and the year before, and possibly March 1950," said Dr. Eugene Forsey, Research Director of the Canadian Congress of Labor. Dr. Forsey was speaking at a luncheon of the University of Toronto Commerce Club yesterday.

"The economic situation now is better than it was two years ago, the previous high mark, but employment, while at a new high has not kept pace with the rise in population," he said.

Dr. Forsey outlined the major problems as being variations in seasonal employment, and regional unemployment which was aggravated by distance, psychological and linguistic differences.

"Automation has not been much of a problem to date, but may lead to many dislocations in the future," he said. "In the long run, doubtless, it will lead to higher productivity and standards of living."

In answer to the problems of technological innovation and automation we might have "the guaranteed annual wage," Dr. Forsey suggested. The other answer, he said, is the shorter work week.

Dr. Forsey said, "If automation proceeds at any appreciable rate there will be an increase in productivity and workers will take it out in a shorter work week. How short I shan't attempt to say."

Dr. Forsey will take up the post of Research Director of the Canadian Labor Congress as soon as the amalgamation of the Canadian Congress of Labor and the Trades and Labor Congress is completed.

Anderson Wins Simul

Fifty-one chess enthusiasts matched skills against the Dominion co-champion yesterday, in a simultaneous tournament, Frank Anderson (II UC) won 45 games, drew 4 and lost only two.

Anderson, the central figure in yesterday's "simul" was a member of the Canadian team which placed fifth in the world chess olympics held in Amsterdam last year.

Yesterday's winners in the simultaneous match were C. G. Helwig and T. J. Kagetsu, J. F. Scott-Thomas, G. Davidson, H. H. Steun, and R. Warren reached draws with the Canadian co-champion.

Jane Weber, I UC, is showing what the UC men can expect when they meet a female team on the front campus Monday, at 1:15 p.m.

As the challenged party, the men are drawing up rules. Nevertheless, the fair sex predicts a smashing victory.

Cheerleaders will be in attendance and, incidentally, there will be a Red Feather collection.

Anthrop Dig

Hot Dogs and Long Houses

Some 250 University of Toronto students will travel north next weekend in search of long-buried Indian relics.

Led by Dr. J. N. Emerson of the Anthropology Department, they will dig for remains of pottery and long houses where a Huron village once stood.

Preliminary work has already been started on the site near Coboconk.

The digging crew will leave Toronto at 3:30 p.m., Oct. 28, return Sunday afternoon.

Labor will take up most of the delight hours, Wiener roasts and dances, however, are planned for Friday and Saturday nights.

There are still openings for interested students, Dr. Emerson said yesterday. He asked anyone planning to go to register with him this afternoon or Monday morning.

Total cost of the weekend, he estimated, would be $10.00.

Transportation would be provided, "but if you have a car we'll be glad to use it," he added.

Cal Jackson's Jazz Red Feather Feature

Convocation Hall rocked yesterday to the rhythms and modern jazz renditions of the Cal Jackson quartette.

The quartette, featuring Peter Appleyard on vibes, played tunes like "Old Devil Moon" and "Swonderful."

Jackson's was the last of a series of acts put on by people from various faculties.

The Saint Mike's College Quartette, featuring Dick Mastrodanto, cavorted through a step which may well lead to a new dance craze.

The quartette did "Too Pooped to Pop" and "I Can't Get Started." Another St. Mike's contribution, lovely Mary Littlepage, sang "Bill," imitating the styles of several popular vocalists.

The Lady Godiva Memorial Band was there with an assortment of washboards, whistles and other instruments. Marching in from the campus and around the Hall, they drew with them a large crowd of admirers who helped to bring the attendance to 1,500.

A "Sam Levenson" type of humour was exhibited by Al Neilson (Emmanuel), billed as a "Cracker Barrel Philosopher."

Other acts included a preview of the Vic Bob Review, a fine instrumental group from Trinity, and a recorder band from U.C. Hugh Tyndall, tenor, sang "Long Ago and Far Away," and Lorraine Shane, an excellent soprano sang "In Love with Vienna."

An appeal on behalf of the Red Feather was given by Ted Schaeffer, M.C. of radio's "On Campus" program, who conducted an interview with a Red Feather Social worker.

After the show Al Davidson, Publicity director of the Red Feather campaign on the campus, beamed happily. An audience of 1,500 had contributed $290, about three times the amount collected at any previous such concert.

Careers

Careers in the oil industry will be outlined and explained for interested students in engineering, geology, physics and mathematics by recruiting teams from the Shell Oil Company this Fall.

Films from Shell's library will be presented November 2nd by Mr. W. J. Speetra, public relations rep. for Shell.

Students are invited to contact the University Placement Officer for details as to meeting place and time.

ernment in West Africa has been to prepare the people for self government in the shortest time possible, said Friedland. The Gold Coast will be presented with the option of accepting complete self government in 1956, he said.

Gord Sheppard, who visited Finland last summer, said that tensions in that country arose from the problems of exports, race, and Russia.

A third member of the panel, Marty Friedland (I Law), spent the summer in Africa—the Nigeria and Gold Coast area.

"The Gold Coast, Nigeria, and the Belgian Congo are the most peaceful places in a turbulent, tension-ridden Africa," said Friedland. One reason for this is that there are almost no white settlers in British West Africa, he added.

Carr Passes For 3 Touchdowns As McGill Scores 16-9 Victory

By MOISHE REITER

Into the record book of Intercollegiate Football went Varsity Blues as, last Saturday at McGill, they put ends to the consecutive game strings of two teams. By losing 16-9 to McGill's impudent Redmen, the Blues closed up an eight-game stand of victories and varied the McGill monotony of nine straight losses. The achievement required a Varsity squad at its poorest and a McGill team at its impossible best, conditions amply satisfied as both clubs wandered far out of character and came back with the upset of the College season.

Not only an era was ended Saturday, but with it withered Varsity pretensions to a clean sweep for the Yates Cup and the background was set for a Cup playoff on November 12.

McGill, reigning softies of Intercollegiate Football, so dazed their followers by winning that many were heard, as they left the park, mumbling incoherently about a sweep of the remaining Redmen games and a final victory in the playoff.

Though well-prepared for the passing skill of McGill's Dickie Carr, having spent all week in drills for defence against the sole offense McGill can offer, Varsity could find no way to stop the Redmen's "guided missile" attack. Twice Carr put the McGills ahead, the last time for keeps, on long passes. Swiftly John Bennett simply outran the Blue defences, got behind them, took Carr's passes over his shoulder like so much floating manna crossing the line, all in three moves that looked ridiculously easy.

Still, giving Carr and his receivers their due, the game wasn't so much won by their passing as it was lost by the Blues and their bobbles. Right to the final minutes they came within spitting distance of the McGill goal only to fade, fumble or fub possession back into the hands of Carr and Cohorts.

The pattern was set in the game's first play, the kickoff going to the Varsity 40, bouncing wildly to the 35 as the Blues, seemingly intent in study of the effect on the ball of wind-currents in Molson Stadium, watched while the Red and White gang hustled in to garb it and possession at the Varsity 31. From there the Blues surged 95 yards in a single, sustained drive from their own 11 yard line to the McGill four, only to fumble the ball and their scoring chance back to McGill.

PM St. Laurent Sees Faults Of Gov't. Aid

Hamilton: (CUP)—Prime Minister St. Laurent said the Federal Government realized that the present system of federal grants to universities leave unsolved many of the difficulties confronting those institutions.

The Prime Minister, speaking Friday night at a McMaster University Convocation after being honored with a doctorate of laws, said that the government "is constantly examining—and I am sure the provincial and municipal governments are too—in what manner assistance can best be provided to our universities."

Mr. St. Laurent said, however, that such assistance would have to be provided within "our constitutional powers and our desire not to interfere in any way with (the universities') freedom."

"My colleagues and I at Ottawa realize the system of federal grants to universities established a few years ago, helpful as we hope they are, leaves unsolved many of the difficulties confronting those institutions today," Mr. St. Laurent said.

"I can assure you," he added, "that we are watching this situation diligently and sympathetically."

(The present system of federal grants to universities costs about $7,000,000 annually. Toronto receives over $1,000,000 a year from them — about $100 a student. The grant is not received by Quebec universities, because Premier Duplessis objects to this federal "encroachment" on a provincial field — education.)

The Prime Minister said that it was the business of all three levels of government to see to it that the universities continued to play their essential function in society.

Mr. St. Laurent also discussed the curriculum in universities. He stressed the value of a liberal education and said that the arts and humanities occupied an essential part of it. (Continued on Page 7)

U of T Petition Asks Revision Of Out-dated Lord's Day Act

A grass-roots movement to get the Lord's Day (Ontario) Act revised is gaining strength on Campus.

It was started by the threatened cancellation of a series of five concerts.

The Students' Administrative Council boosted it by passing a motion calling upon Premier Leslie Frost to have such concerts exempted from the provisions of the Act.

A petition circulated when the Lord's Day Alliance first announced it would start legal action unless the concerts were called off, now has 1500 signatures.

Some of those signing the petition have refused to subscribe to the section which criticizes the Lord's Day Alliance but have supported the section which asks for a revision of the Lord's Day Act. Meanwhile one of the downtown dailies says editorially:

"This affair has served a useful purpose in pointing up the fact the Lord's Day Act of 1906 may be out of date and badly in need of revision."

In another Toronto newspaper a letter appears on the editorial page over the signature of the leader of the Hart House Orchestra, Boyd Neel.

Mr. Neel, also Dean of the Faculty of Music, says:

"Surely the issue is clear. Either the LDA desired the concerts to take place or did not so desire."

"If they had desired the concerts all they had to do was to ignore the whole thing. If they did not desire them, they could, of course, invoke the law, which they threatened to do."

He continues, "... The most vehement antagonists would appear to be the clergy themselves."

I have had offers of churches in which to hold the concerts.

Apparently in a church you can charge as much as you like for seats and the Lord's Day Alliance says nothing. Can hypocrisy and humbug go any further?"

The student executive of the Hart House Orchestra Associates whose plans for the five-concert series touched off the incident emphasized last night it is the Act, and not the Alliance they quarrel with.

Rev. A. S. McGrath, secretary for the Lord's Day Alliance, said the Alliance "has no power to prevent the concerts or things of that kind, any more than has any other individual."

He said the students "might be within their legal rights" if no admission was charged for the Sunday entertainment and if attendance was limited to members of the Association.

Associates' executives announced last week they will open the series with a concert Nov. 27. A lecture by Boyd Neel has been scheduled for December 8 and another concert for December 11. Three more concerts are tentatively scheduled for the spring term.

Ceremony

A flag-raising ceremony — without official sanction — was held on campus early Saturday morning.

Three students were seen surreptitiously hoisting a dead raccoon to the top of the main campus flag-pole with the assistance of a Royal Mail letter box.

This box was the only evidence of official support.

UN Honoured Today - 12:45

Michael Gelber, executive member of the Canadian United Nations Association, will speak today at U of T ceremonies, starting at 12:45, honoring United Nations day.

Prominent members of the University will be in attendance at the raising of the UN flag behind the Students' Administrative Council office. The Blue and White band will provide march music at the ceremony.

Mr. Gelber, who speaks of the flag-raising, has had extensive experience in international work. He has done relief work in Displaced Persons camps in Europe.

He has been on a speaking tour of Canada and the United States since 1947, when he returned from the continent. Mr. Gelber once attended Upper Canada College, and graduated from Columbia University.

Officials said a flag-lined path may be prepared from Hart House to the platform.

Croquet Today

In what promises to be a gory battle, members of the University College Lit and Women's Union take the field at 1:15 today for a "grudge match" of croquet.

Denying reports that croquet is UC's sole sporting activity, Lit president Peter Larmour said: "We feel that this game will spearhead a modern revival."

"We're stacked with professionals," he added, "The WUA hasn't a chance."

The match will be played on front campus, complete with Victorian and other costumes and the UC cheerleaders. WUA president Gay Sellars promised that the girls would turn up in "the only fitting costume—knickers and middies."

When told that the Lit had not yet decided on their costumes, she said (icily): "Such disorganization is typical of the Lit."

Miss Sellars claimed that all her players were "pros," and promised a snappy secret play, not to be revealed until game time. She said it would counteract any Lit plan to use a "hitting the ladies' ankle" play.

Both teams promised at least ten players would report for the contest. The hat will be passed for donations to the Red Feather campaign, spokesmen said.

CUP

Runneth-Over

Montreal: Although the Montreal police were called, fifty male invaders of the women's residence at McGill escaped unmolested. Most of the invaders came from a pep rally crowd which had earlier gone down to greet a train load of visitors.

The men caused great consternation in several rooms on the upper floors, and brought an abrupt end to a jam session held in one of them.

Ann Arbor, Michigan: Rushing for fraternities may be postponed till the second semester for freshmen at the University of Michigan.

Deferred rushing has been tried once before on the Michigan campus, unsuccessfully, in the thirties. However, the lack of success has been partially attributed to the financial hardships of the depression.

Ottawa: Action on student drinking is being taken by the students' council at Carleton College. Last week the Council issued a statement that "any member of the Students' Association found drinking alcoholic beverages in the Students' Union or on college property will be charged by Council before the Judicial Committee. This decision will be strictly enforced."

Minneapolis, Minnesota: New dorms are going up all over on college camp, and the University of Minnesota is keeping up with the trend. New dormitories will be built on the Minneapolis campus "just as soon as the University can get the money," the Vice President has announced.

Over 1,000 students who applied for rooms in the residence this year were turned away. The University hopes to build the new dormitories in time to meet an expected sharp increase in enrollment during the next fifteen years.

Vancouver: Four new dormitories are planned for the University of British Columbia, to be ready next fall. Each dormitory will house 100 students. As soon as the Board of Governors passes its approval, construction will begin.

Vancouver: The University of British Columbia is going to get its float parade after all. For a long time it seemed very doubtful whether the parade would be allowed. After traffic tie-ups caused last year, the City Council had forbidden further parades.

However Council was finally won over and the parade was agreed to. The floats must stay on the right side of the street, they must all be mobile, and there can be no marching bands. "If there is any repetition of last year's tie-ups," City Council warned, "this will be the last Homecoming Parade ever."

Ottawa: The Carleton, commenting on the Journalism lectures being given by The Varsity, suggested that instead Toronto students should come to Carleton for journalistic advice.

The next story in the paper reported that Kingston freshmen of Queen's University serenaded Billy Graham outside his headquarters. The journalistic school of Carleton failed to notice that it was Toronto students, of University College, who were responsible for the incident.

Seconds Tie OAC 11-11

Guelph, Oct. 22—Ontario Agricultural College Aggies rallied for two touchdowns in the second half here Friday night to tie the University of Toronto's football seconds 11-11.

The Baby Blues led the Aggies 11-0 at half-time after quarterback Larry Joynt had scored a touchdown and added the convert in the opening quarter, and tackle Bill Hunter had recovered a loose ball in the Aggie end zone.

Weber tied it up moments later, capping a determined Aggie drive by plunging five yards for the major. Varsity end Larry Stacey blocked Billen's attempted convert to preserve the tie.

Blue Soccerites Smother McGill

Montreal, Oct. 23 (CUP)—Varsity's senior soccer team won the championship of the Intercollegiate eastern division here yesterday morning, swamping the McGill Redmen 7-2, to take the two game series 11-3.

Hard running by freshmen halfbacks Tim Reid and Bobby Dann, coupled with the fine tackling of wingback Rusty Gee, sparked the Varsity Seconds in their bid to retain the Shaw trophy.

The running of Reid and Dann featured the Varsity attack, while three blocked kicks kept the Aggies from threatening in the late minutes of the second half. OAC chalked up 17 first downs to Toronto's 12, while Joynt completed three of 14 passes, Weber completed three out of nine.

Aggie quarterback Bill Weber passed twice to Bill Sproule in the opening minutes of the second half to cover 73 yards in two plays and cut the Varsity margin to 11-6 after Bob Billen converted.

The Baby Blues meet Western Colts here Friday afternoon in a return game for the title.

Varsity Gals Win Tennis

The Intercollegiate Women's Tennis Championships wound up on Saturday morning at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club with the Varsity foursome in top place with 10 points, Queen's occupying the second spot with 8 points.

The cold weather did not dampen the tremendous spirit of the tournament said to be the friendliest and the best organized in many years, although officials were forced to change the rules to shorten the playing time.

The doubles ended in an unusual three-way tie when Queen's beat McGill, Toronto eliminated Queen's, and then found herself eliminated by McGill. Toronto's Mary Nunns won the first singles championship by defeating Barb Mair of McGill, and Barb Holmes of Western, both scores 9-7. Mary Lyn Boys of Toronto scored a close singles victory over Lorraine Brender of McGill. Mary Fardell of Queen's outclassed all other contenders in the second singles division.

Anne Kilgore, Toronto's tennis curator, and Jack Little, the official referee, were assisted by Sheila Brimer, Marilyn Charters, Jean Simpson, and Georgie Brock, who refereed the various matches in spite of our sub-arctic climate.

HH Exploration Club Sees Finland Films

Russia is an ever present threat to the security of Finland, situated in the cradle of communist dominated Europe, said students at the Friday night meeting of the Hart House Exploration Society.

The Nazis completely devastated all traces of civilization in Lapland (northern Finland) until not a single yard of road or a single bridge remained," said one of the speakers.

Color slides were accompanied by talks on Finland by Bosko Loncarevic, Karl Sarlin, Don Sutherland, and John Becker. These students, who participated in this summer's student exchange with Finland, related their experiences and feelings on the country. The economy and industry of Finland were discussed along with Finnish nationalism.

"My experience in Finland opened new realms of thought for me and will enable me to make more mature decisions in the future," said John Becker.

Cornell Prof. On Trial For Communist Actions

Ithaca, New York (Exchange): On trial for contempt of congress this month will be Dr. Marcus Singer, professor of zoology at Cornell University. He was cited for contempt after he had refused to name his associates to the Un-American Activities Commission.

Dr. Singer testified freely about his own activities before the commission. He said that he had been a member of a Marxist study group in the 1940's, and contributed freely to the Communist party, although he had never held a membership card. He stated that he had broken with the party and "left wing" activities in 1945.

He refused to name his associates on the grounds that it would be a violation of "honour and conscience."

After Dr. Singer was cited for contempt of congress, the Student Council of Cornell passed a resolution supporting the "honour and conscience" stand he had taken. The University faculty, expressing their faith in Dr. Singer's loyalty and moral integrity, placed him on salaried leave. The Students' Council has set up a fund for Dr. Singer's defence.

RUGGER BLUES BEATEN AT MCGILL

Redmen Retain Title Scoring 8-0 Victory

Montreal, Oct. 23 (Staff)—Varsity Rugger Blues were unable to retain the lead they held over McGill which they had captured on the back campus at Toronto the previous week when they defeated McGill 6 to 0. McGill defeated Toronto on the lower campus at Montreal yesterday morning by 8 points to nothing.

Captain Andy Baines won the toss for Toronto and elected to play with the sun behind him and into a stiff breeze. The Toronto forwards set off at a cracking pace and harried their opponents from the start. The play throughout the first half was very even and the marking was close and the tackling hard and accurate.

Varsity were a trifle slow to settle down but this week McGill were unable to dominate the line-outs as they had done the week before. In the set scrums Toronto were the superior team losing the ball only four times in the whole game. The pack will however have to practice hard in combating forward rushes if they are to capture the Toronto league championship.

Varsity are developing steadily and their most significant improvement is the co-ordination which is being effected between the scrum half and the stand-off.

This is no doubt due to intensive coaching by South African Charlie Pein who has been putting in some hard work on the back division. His labours were particularly evident in the speed with which the ball came out from the set scrums, and the Toronto backs saw more than their fair share of the ball.

At half time there was still no score and the game was still unpredictable. When the match was resumed the slight edge which the McGill backs have in weight and experience began to tell but the first score came as a result of a penalty awarded to the Redmen after there had been an infringement in the loose scrum by a Toronto forward.

Very shortly afterwards McGill broke through near the middle of the Toronto line for a try leaving an easy conversion for the further two points putting McGill 8 points up and as the championship is fought on an aggregate point basis McGill retained the intercollegiate title.

The narrow margin of their win reflects the keenness with which the match was fought.

Perhaps fought is rather an appropriate word as towards the end of the second half there were a couple of near brawls between the forwards, Toronto taking the initiative as usual. McGill deserved to win but if Varsity can develop as rapidly next season as they have done in the past few weeks the championship may well find a new home.

Bodies fly in all directions as Varsity's Jack Rogers is upended in the third quarter of Saturday's intercollegiate football game at McGill. Although outclassed in almost every department by the hitherto undefeated Blues, the Redmen pulled an unexpected 16-9 upset behind the passing arm of Columbia's Dick Carr, setting the stage for a possible playoff November 12.

Redmen Humble

McGills down to the Varsity 31 in 7 plays then threw to Bennett for 5 points.

The Blues led the McGills in every department, doubling them in yardage on the ground, 196-95, in first downs on the ground, 10-5, but falling miserably behind in passing and all things allied, particularly defence.

A puzzle was the Varsity line—on offence opening great holes for the ball-carriers, on defence smothering the Redmen ground forays, while on pass plays working in complete reverse. Neither Harry Wilson nor Ed Skrzypek ever had really adequate protection on passes, though Carr had time enough to have been able to conduct a poll of receivers on the advisability of throwing to them. And, yet, the big Blue line outplayed McGill by decisive margins.

A brilliant two-way performance was turned in for Varsity by Gerry Lansky, scorer of the single Blue major, who broke through consistently to make tackles that stopped McGill's ground game before it could do any harm. It was a pass from Harry Wilson at the McGill 49 to Lansky at the 15 that gave Varsity and Lansky their only major of the day.

Other Varsity scores came from the toes of Peter Maik on a 25 yard placement for a field goal and a single from Ed Skrzypek. For McGill the Carr to Bennett combination counted two majors, the final coming on a two yard line-smash by Rick Adrian and a single convert by Bob Holland to make the upset complete.

Small stuff: The way Carr was working with Bennett and Sam Yuska as receivers, while Buster Brown and Ron Murphy held the weak Redmen line together, it could be possible for Queen's and or Western to be very surprised little boys in their next matches. . . . Sportsmanship questionable on both sides Saturday. And Varsity firsts swinging with unusual abandon as unthinkable possibility of defeat loomed ever more likely. . . . McGill hospitality clouded by Red and White Engineers blasting off their little top cannon persistently while Varsity colling signals—presumably in attempting to hamper Blue organization. Watch for ricochet against Gaels next week.

Stewart Leads Gaels In London

London, Oct. 23 (CUP)—Half-back Ron Stewart scored three touchdowns here yesterday afternoon to spearhead the Queen's University Golden Gaels' attack as the Tricolor defeated Western for the second time this season 25-17 before a homecoming crowd of 12,000.

The Mustangs made a desperate bid for their first victory in the fourth quarter, moving within a point of the Gaels, but tackle Jim Hughes intercepted a last second Girvin pass for a touchdown to drive Western even deeper into the intercollegiate cellar.

The win, coupled with the University of Toronto's loss to McGill in Montreal, moved the Gaels into a tie for first place with Varsity, and a chance at sole possession of the top spot when they meet the Blues in Kingston next Saturday.

Jocko Thomson booted a single in the fourth quarter and converted Stewart's three touchdowns while import quarterback Gus Braccia ran for the convert in the fourth frame to make the Gaels' total. Hard-driving Western fullback Ralph Simmois picked up two touchdowns, and fleet Neil Desborough another. End Bob Labett converted two of them for the Mustangs.

An alert pass defence contributed decisively to the Queen's victory. Stewart intercepted one of Girvin's passes and galloped 65 yards for his second major in the second period. Hughes quelled the Mustang drive with a last-second interception that became a touchdown. Braccia's defensive play rushed the Gaels 236 yards to 107 on the ground. But they were outshone a sterling offensive game as Queen's strengthened their bid for their first intercollegiate title since 1937.

The Mustangs had fifteen first downs to Queen's nine, and out-unable to stem the vicious aerial offensive as the Gaels made 184 yards passing to an insignificant Western 61.

Western are now mathematically out of the picture but the Gaels can force a playoff by defeating Varsity this Saturday in Kingston.

Skule Tramples Woodsmen Pastushak Scores 3 TD's

By HOWIE MANDELL

With Izzy Pastushak running wild, the Junior Engineers trampled over Forestry by a 30-6 score on Friday afternoon. Pastushak accounted for three of his team's touchdowns.

At the beginning of the first quarter the Skulemen marched down the field. Pastushak carried for ten yards right up centre on the first play. After an incomplete forward pass, he took a pitchout and broke away for forty yards to the Forester's two yard line. Here the Forestry line held.

The blue and gold squad hit paydirt early in the second quarter. After receiving a Forestry kick, a pitchout to Pastushak went for 25 yards. Successive handoffs to Don Cornish, Joe Whitmore, and Pastushak again brought the ball to the Forestry two yard line. This time the Skulemen didn't fail as quarterback Sam Clements plunged over. Whitmore's convert was good.

SPS made it 12-0 early in the second half. Sticking to the ground they tore holes through the Forestry line as Pastushak and Whitmore together ran for 36 yards on four plays to the Forester's 5 where Cornish took a pitchout for the score. Again Whitmore's convert was good.

Skule made it 18-0 when Pastushak tiptoed along the sideline for 70 yards after taking a pitchout from Clements on their own 30. On the next play he went straight up the middle for the TD.

Forestry quarterback Bob Armstrong then found his passing range connecting for three in a row for a total of 60 yards, bringing the ball to the Skule 1 yard line from where he plunged over for the five points. He converted his own TD.

Pastushak's remaining two touchdowns were scored in the final period after some beautiful broken field running in each case by Roger Smith and Whitmore.

Notes . . . Skule established themselves as the team to beat in Group Two . . . Whitmore picked up five points by converting every Skule touchdown . . .

Next to Pastushak and Whitmore, former Baby Blues, Forestry's Bob Armstrong shone. He completed eight out of twelve passes and handled the ball beautifully . . . Pastushak averaged 20 yards a carry.

Harrier Team Beaten

The powerful University of Niagara harrier squad scored a convincing 38 to 19 win over the visiting Varsity team at Niagara on Saturday afternoon.

The U. of T. team, with only one member of last year's senior team making the trip, were surprisingly impressive in their first outing, but lacked the condition and experience of their rivals.

Jumping into the lead at the start of the relatively muddy course, Niagara runners held the lead and captured the first four places. De Luis, Cavelli, Ellewood, and Truzcott crossed the finish line together, finishing the 4.2 mile grid in the good time of 21 minutes, 49 seconds.

Bruce Hughes turned in Toronto's best effort, finishing fifth. Fifteen seconds behind the leaders, Following closely behind were Varsity's Ron Toop, Bill Gelling and Mike Berger, who placed sixth, seventh and eighth respectively. Tom Stroud took twelfth spot, while Doug McEntee and John Hetherington placed fourteenth and sixteenth.

Coach Fred Foote expressed approval of his team's first showing, especially the good performances of freshmen Toop and Berger. With the team back at full strength, an improved score is expected when the Blue squad clashes with Wayne University this Saturday afternoon at High Park.

The intramural run will be held on the back campus tomorrow afternoon at 4:30. All undergraduates who have not competed in intercollegiate senior harrier are eligible.

Miniature FORUM Considers UN Progress, Red China Entry

By MICHAEL CASSIDY

Varsity students have lost the spirit of controversy. As well, they have no desire to be informed. Our guide is the thoroughly unrepresentative group of students asked, at random, last week:

1. How satisfactorily has the UN progressed toward fulfilling its purposes?
 2. Can we achieve the ideal of a world community of nations living together in tolerance and brotherhood through the United Nations?

3. Should Red China be admitted to the UN?
 Many of the students either did not know or did not care about the United Nations. Only three opposed Red China's admission to the United Nations—these did not wish to be quoted.

Those who did comment felt the most important work the UN is doing towards international understanding is in the line of technical assistance.

Universal Taste

1. An international beer-drinking contest would do more good at promoting international understanding — because people don't understand each other—whereas they can all drink beer.

Hugh Hansen, III Vic

Concord ... in Christ

2. The machinery (of the UN) is adequate, because in any human institution, the men who have to make it work are more important than the framework in which they move. We are dealing with conflicting human interests, and our problem is to change human nature. This can only be done by Jesus Christ. Man has tried education, higher economic standards, innumerable organizations designed to produce human co-operation, but they all fail because man remains an egotist.

Brightener

3. Red China should be admitted to the UN because it needs a little colour.

Not A Club

1. There has been a great amount of achievement in social and economic fields. Until we have unanimity amongst the great powers, its political achievements will not be as great as they could be. Even if the political ends have not been achieved, social and economic advancements justify the UN. Technical Assistance, the specialized agencies (World Bank, WHO, UNESCO, etc.), International Court of Justice, Trusteeship Council, are organizations that are much more efficiently run by a world organization. It is through these organizations that we can tend to break down the mistrust and xenophobic feelings among nations which make political achievements difficult.

2. I don't like the word "tolerance," it has the connotation of condescension. Mutual understanding coming from outside the UN can bring peace through the UN.

3. Definitely. Not only should Red China be admitted but any country that desires admittance should be free to enter. The UN is not a private club that can exclude countries with different ideologies.

Marty Friedland, I Law and a Black Mark

The fact that representatives can meet and talk is definitely a factor in warding off total war. As long as this "town-hall" spirit exists in the community of nations, then peace and security will prevail. The black mark against the UN which must be erased and yet appears to be forgotten is the insult to human decency that exists in Africa.

3. There is no question of whether or not Red China should be admitted to the UN. She is obviously a further necessary factor to continue the reduction of world tension. To recognize nationalist Formosa will within a short time be an historical anachronism symbolizing Western pride.

Dave Powell, III UC

a hope

On campus today there will take place a ceremony marking the tenth anniversary of the United Nations.

At this point, it would be well to review the position of the organization, praising its points of strength and recognizing its weaknesses.

The UN has a very worthwhile record of accomplishments in technical fields, such as international drug control, information exchange, and other like activities.

In the realm of relief assistance, and technical aid to underdeveloped countries, the UN has accomplished a great deal with the very limited funds at its disposal.

However, in its main purpose of promoting world peace and understanding, the UN's results have been far from spectacular. So far it has succeeded in covering up local outbursts of unpleasantness — such as Kashmir, Korea, and Israel — although in none of these cases has the situation been finally settled.

But it has singularly failed to solve the great cleavage between East and West — the one great problem in international politics today.

Yet is it fair to criticize the organization for this? The UN as it is now constituted is completely incapable of ever solving — or even of greatly diminishing — the titanic conflict that threatens today to rip the world asunder.

While the great force of Nationalism divides the world into many conflicting blocks, and while the struggle between ideologies sweeps all else aside, the UN can do little better than it has done in the past to ensure world peace.

What is needed now is a broader understanding between the peoples of the world, and a sense of tolerance.

The achievement of this spirit of good-will, together with some equitable solution to the problems posed by the Cold War, stands as humanity's hope for the future.

And the United Nations is the greatest instrument on this world today working towards this hope.

Only Way To Harmony

1. The UN has done a great deal to maintain peace and security through the logical discussion of common problems, but through its agreements to satisfy the body as a whole, it has attenuated to some extent the relationships of individual countries. Whether or not its indoctrination of social, cultural and humanitarian problems and their solutions has been successful is a very debatable point. But on the periphery it is the only possible way, through its varied organizations, by which the nations involved can achieve to any extent some basis for an harmonious exterior.

2. It can work towards the attainment of these ends, but the solution to the problems of tolerance and living together rests with the countries themselves and their cooperation in world affairs.

3. Yes. Red China represents the majority of the Chinese people, and at the risk of taking a 'pink' attitude it is only fair to say that the Red Chinese Regime is the most feasible and promising way of life for the Chinese people at the present time.

Celebrates Ten Years Of Progress

10 Years Of UN Achievements

By JANE WEBER and CAROL MAHOOD

Ten years ago today forty-eight nations of the world signed the Charter of the United Nations. Here was an organization dedicated to building and preserving international peace and security by the peaceful means of discussion and negotiation.

Has international co-operation achieved this goal? To a certain extent it has. Along with some delays and disappointments experienced over the last ten years the United Nations has many accomplishments to its credit.

● In the political field we can see evidence of co-operation in Korea, where they halted the aggression of North Korea. After conciliatory methods had failed, the United Nation's Security Council voted for the use of force. For the first time in history, action recommended by an international organization was upheld, providing the first example of collective security in action under one banner. Now, by peaceful means, they are seeking unification of that peninsula.

● Wars were averted by peaceful settlement of disputes and fighting in other countries too. The disagreement between Indonesia and the Netherlands was resolved by the decision for the independence of the former, and friendly relations are still in force between these two nations. Other countries, through the Trusteeship Council, will be gaining their independence in the future.

● In Palestine, an explosive situation was prevented from erupting when Israel became an independent state. Now the Armistice Commission there, under the chairmanship of General Burns of Canada, is attempting to settle permanently their disputes with the Arab states. With assistance from the United States, peace was restored in Kashmir and Northern Greece. Thus we can see that in every part of the world, political tensions have been lessened by the continuous work of the UN.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL

The fields of disarmament and atomic energy control have been intensively studied, but substantial progress prevented by Great Power differences. However, by the end of 1954 the member-nations had agreed on renewed five-power negotiations on disarmament, and supported the establishment of an international Atomic Energy Agency to explore ways of developing peaceful uses of atomic power.

Work in these areas will also continue to play a very important part in the lessening of world tension and the averting of future wars.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PLAN

Not only has the United Nations helped to preserve peace throughout the world, it has assisted many poverty-stricken countries in raising their standard of living. Through the Technical Assistance Plan teams of experts are sent to these underdeveloped countries at their request for aid; students are sent to more advanced countries, like Canada, to study in such fields as the development of natural resources; equipment is sent to countries in order to increase their production. Egypt, Haiti, Burma, and Peru are but a few of the many countries who have benefitted from assistance in such fields as banking policy, housing, telecommunications and economic planning.

For those who lack the basic elements of a decent standard of living, direct technical aid has been given to their governments. Health, nutrition, and education have all benefitted as have their working conditions from this type of assistance.

PROTECTION

The United Nations extends international protection to two million refugees who have fled their homelands by working with the governments of the free nations of the world. Special help was given to those in Korea and the Arab states.

Although we have only mentioned some of the work of this organization, it can easily be seen that much has been accomplished in the economic and social betterment of the less fortunate countries in the world.

This work alone shows that the United Nations' first ten years have been worthwhile. Without economic stability, we cannot have world peace.

This organization has enabled people to work together in promoting and encouraging respect for the fundamental freedoms of the individual. In this forum, where nations large or small can meet and discuss on an equal basis their problems, their opinions, and above all their desire for peace, true international co-operation can be realized.

On Bottom Floor

Cluttered UN Club

On the bottom floor of 113 St. George Street, in two medium-sized rooms, is crammed one of the busiest and least-known organizations in Toronto, the United Nations Association of Canada, Toronto Branch.

From this office comes a steady stream of literature bearing on every possible facet of United Nations work.

The UNA runs an impossibly varied selection of programs, for every taste and age. From an annual Model General Assembly for the Toronto high schools (at least 34 schools will be at this year's, to be held at the Provincial Parliament Buildings) to lectures at a crammed Massey Hall by Eleanor Roosevelt, to trips to the United Nations building in New York for almost any group that wants one (the Canadian delegation to the UN gives its assistance in arranging an itinerary for these groups), to fund-raising drives for a new Women's group in Burma, to children's groups campaigning on Halloween for UNICEF (United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund)—the UNA has them all.

During a typical half-hour in the office of the over-worked secretary, Miss D E Lane, calls came in from members wanting tickets to an event which was already sold out, a school phoned wondering what hymns to sing at a special United Nations service, members of the U of T UN Club came in looking for information on the doings of the club, and various wanderers came in from off the street looking for a quiet conversation (they were disappointed).

And to supply them, and keep its members informed on them, it has paper — ream after ream of it, filling every nook and cranny of the office.

There are UN pamphlets, mimeographed sheets of information, pile after pile of folders from the National Office about various functions, filing cabinets filled with information on everything from Afghanistan to Yugoslavia, and boxes full of more papers waiting to be picked up by others. Anybody who ever got up the energy to read all these papers would know more about the UN than does Dag Hammarskjöld.

With meetings of one group or another almost every night, thousands of active members, and a myriad of activities (only a few of which have been mentioned above), the UNA can truly be considered one of Toronto's most interesting groups.

University students can join for only $1.00, and for this sum they also receive a membership in the campus UN club, which has almost as many more activities of its own, ranging from a Caledon Hills week-end to today's flag-raising ceremony

Williams à la Hart House

EXPERIMENT IN THEATRE

Like some of the frantic people living in the limbo of the Camino Real, the reviewer of Gill's opening production at Hart House this week would grab the nearest straw in the wind offered as a point of departure for an appraisal and interpretation of this contrapuntal pastiche in 16 blocks. The playwright's own conception, though not necessarily the most reliable, is that Camino Real is "a construction of another world, a separate existence . . . Of course it is nothing more nor less than my conception of the time and world that I live in . . . its people are mostly archetypes of certain basic attitudes and qualities with those mutations that would occur if they had continued along the road to this hypothetical terminal point in it."

The limited but eminently sensible Sancho Panza will not enter this hypothetical terminal point with Don Quixote, and Cervantes' famous pilgrim into the world of the imagination must stop at the Camino Real, and after observing as in a dream the mutations that occur there, recruit himself a new companion.

In the succeeding panorama of the theatre meant for seeing and feeling, Director Robert Gill with a cast of forty has succeeded in integrating emotion, color and variety in a play which is exceedingly difficult to stage. In Camino Real the leading roles are all subject to the mixed responses of the mob in the background and to the secondary characters, demanding a sustained balance and interaction between the two. The audience must be gently drawn back and forth from the one to the many. Nor has Williams been content to keep a respectful distance from his audience; death and despair do not stop at the footlights but are paraded up and down the aisles of the theatre.

Central to the integration of such an eventful drama is the role of the narrator, Mr. Gutman, the one man on the Camino Real whose heart has adjustably and conveniently curdled to sour cream and who now lives off the misfortunes of the Camino's transient guests. Played by Stanley Daniels with what seemed to me to be just the right amount of obsequiousness, intelligence, and restraint, Gutman's personality cut spasmodically across his audience with the trenchant bite of a well-mixed whisky sour.

Counterbalancing Daniels' Gutman, Wally Russell's Kilroy was appropriately naive, self-conscious and charged with emotional power. Fortunately well cast as these two actors were, they carried a great deal of the weight of the play throughout. John Douglas Casanova was not quite as satisfying, this role demanding more definiteness of interpretation, whether it be Casanova's pride or his lasciviousness that needs emphasis. I liked Dan Durnick's Baron de Charlus very much, although his voice was difficult to catch at times. The role of Lord Byron, although not easily introduced and certainly demanding a difficult exit was sensitively handled by James Mainprize.

With such a large cast to contend with, it is not possible to go right down the line in a review this size, but a word for the women: Alene Kamins gave a graceful performance as Marguerite Gauthier, and Annette Oelbaum's Gypsy was contrastingly full-bodied and raucous. Her voice came through very well, and although Jeniva Borger's role as Esmeralda is not a correspondingly strong one, I think she could bring a better voice and more emotion to it.

The sets, by Les Laurence and Leon Major, were very impressive, but not lighted to their best advantage.

In view of the many events that transpire on the Camino, it is easy to lose sight of the dramatic resolution towards which the play is proceeding. What in the long run is Williams attempting to bring to his audience—and is it digestible? Utilizing the light and the dark symbolically in a manner that reminds us of Hawthorne, he has dramatically depicted some of the limitations of living by the heart alone, just as Hawthorne was pre-occupied with the limitations of the head. The colorful intellectual heart of Ethan Brand which would succumb to the regenerative flames of a lime-kiln finds its counterpart in the transmuted gold heart of Kilroy, "as big as the head of a baby."

The Don's choice of Kilroy as his companion in the final block, the violet-tender feelings that grow despite rocky obstacles between Casanova and Gauthier and the sudden flow of water from the previously dried-up fountain in the square are just a few of the symbolic trappings (plus a dash of alchemy thrown in for good measure) in Camino Real which we have learned to expect from symbolically alert modern writers. Whether these will, in Camino Real, compensate the more fastidious theatregoer for the burlesque, farce and language of obscenity which Williams has always exploited is another question.

The preceding unwarranted digression into the nature of Williams' contribution only serves as a reminder, in the final summing up, of Robert Gill's perennial courage and delight in giving Hart House actors and audience provocative theatre-fare. On this, his tenth season with Hart House, we congratulate him and wish him every success in the future.

Pianist Lateiner

Pianist Jacob Lateiner, who Thursday night initiated this season's Women's Musical Club concert series, left by his performance more questions than answers in the reviewer's mind.

Mr. Lateiner is a gifted artist with a fair variety of musical tempers. Unfortunately, these seem to have the habit of wandering into the wrong context. Submerging himself in detail, he often lost sight of the structural beauties of the work as a whole.

Besides this, an emotional uncertainty was apparent in his sudden leaping from one mood to another.

In the first movement of Beethoven's Sonata Op. 31 No. 2 Mr. Lateiner became somewhat too contemplative for the composers' almost violently unsettled temper. The Adagio, though at times most sensitively phrased, lacked in continuity. The third movement was a musical miniature instead of a canvas of broad forceful strokes. In the Brahms-Paganini Variations Mr. Lateiner seemed to follow a microscopic technique of unearthing every

Polish Music

The Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Henryk Rzepus gave a performance of classical Polish music last Friday. It was interesting to note the variety of composers featured during the evening, among whom Moniuszko surprised mostly by his flexibility of expression. His Overture "Fairy Tale" reminded me of the vitality of Tchaikowski as well as of the pathetic romanticism of J. Brahms; a strong symphonic line was recognizable throughout the piece.

Miss G. Jakubczak's recital of an aria from the opera "Halca" not only showed the composer's love for dramatic music, but also presented a mature, voluble soprano whose qualities were clever interpretation and control of feeling in a field where the danger of sentimentality seemed only too obvious.

Also featured were compositions by two modern composers, K. Szymanowski and L. Rozycki, sparking with Slavic temper and vitality. Noskowski's symphonic poem, "Steppe," was based on themes from popular Polish folk-dances.

The major work of the evening, Chopin's Piano Concerto in F-minor, was well played by Walter Buczynski, well-known Toronto pianist and composer. Though a young artist, he has already developed a definite style of his own, marked by a fluent technique, sensitive touch, and skill in contrast. Buczynski succeeded in bringing out the poetical beauty, the elegant smoothness for which Chopin's music is so well noted. It was a pity that he frequently used his foot-pedal heavily, so that the crispness and clearness of each successive tone was gone at such important instances as solo flights, and instead there was only a mess of tones.

The conductor showed a strong tendency to overdo with "forte" what could have been done with "piano." He stressed the "powerful noise" of trumpets and cornets, and undermined the effectiveness of such tender instruments as flutes by failing to provide a less powerful contrast in volume.

Good Fun, Serious Action Confused Says School Alumnus In Toike Oike

The Oct. 21 issue of Toike Oike, the engineering newspaper, gave considerable space to discussion of the Skulemen's spirit.

In the same edition, an advertisement stated that engineering jackets, banned after last year's freshman riot, were once again on sale at a downtown clothiers.

A letter to the editor signed "Interested Alumnus" expressed concern over the too boisterous spirit of engineering undergraduates. He said it seemed to be their common failing to be unable to distinguish between good fun and serious actions.

He added that he was disturbed most of all by a lack of thoughtfulness and consideration.

"Post Mortem," an article in the same issue, showed similar concern about the spirit of U of T engineers. It related the story of Varsity's steel goal posts, torn down by Queen's students after the game two weeks ago.

The article said the demonstration of such spirit in several American colleges has led to their non-participation in intercollegiate sports. It warned the engineers that such a thing could happen here.

An appeal was made to all Skulemen to show their spirit at Queen's next weekend in order to gain envy for good fun rather than contempt for malicious damage.

cial place in the university. He said:

"In a vast new country such as ours, with such great natural wealth, we are apt to be overwhelmed by the size and diversity of our material growth, and be inclined to measure our progress in terms of material output . . .

"Fortunately, there are recent numerous indications that this strictly utilitarian concept of education is going out of fashion and that the value of a broad general education is again becoming recognized . . .

"The object of higher education, and especially education in the arts and humanities, is to teach us to think clearly. At no time in history has it been so important to think clearly, when man's ability to destroy himself seems at times to have outstripped his ability to solve the problems which arise between him and his fellow men."

possible nuance, thus isolating the individual variations from the whole.

It was fascinating to experience how Mr. Lateiner's apparently displaced temper started to take on more sensitive and sensible patterns during the second half of the recital. The two Schubert Impromptus (No. 2 in D flat Major and No. 3 in G flat Major) were done in a much more settled mood than the first two works on the programme.

Then towards the end of his recital Mr. Lateiner hurled his fingers like ten steel hammers into the keyboard to create a dynamic series of incisively percussive tonal effects with Prokofiev's Toccata Opus 11.

Through this fascinatingly barbarous work the artist succeeded in transmitting all his skill and sensitivity which seemed to have remained blocked by some mysterious factors during the greater part of the evening.

Bombs Could Now End World Dr. Solandt Tells Skulemen

This is the age of annihilation, said Dr. O. M. Solandt, Chairman of Canada's Defence Research Board, at the annual School Dinner last Thursday night.

Dr. Solandt declared "We scientists can now destroy most of mankind, and with a few years of research, we can remove the 'most.'" Dr. Solandt, a graduate in both Arts and Medicine from the U of T, and the organizer of the Defence Research Board, was addressing 350 engineers at their annual banquet in Hart House.

Dr. Solandt added that if humanity could avoid blowing itself up in the next few years, it might be able to solve the problems of peace.

Dr. Solandt, Canada's observer to the Australian atomic bomb tests, said that the chief effects of atomic energy in the future would likely be the continuation of the colossal use of increasing amounts of power, and the availability of power wherever it was needed.

These two factors would mean, he said, that civilization would not be limited by a shortage of power.

Without atomic energy, the Defence Research Board Chief said, the growth of our whole civilization might well have come to an end by the close of the present century.

Dr. Solandt also classed as revolutionary the changes which atomic power would make on economic geography. Manufacturing plants would no longer have to be located near sources of natural power, as atomic power plants could be built close to the plants' location.

However, Dr. Solandt emphasized that atomic power would not be quite as revolutionary in its effects as some laymen expected.

Dr. Solandt drew attention to Canada's lack of qualified engineers, which, he said, was a great problem.

"From the defence point of view," he said, "the present world stability exists because of the approximate balance between the technicians in the two camps (Russia and the free world).

"This is due to the great efforts of the free world scientists. Yet Russia is spending more effort than we are to develop new engineers."

Dr. Solandt said that Russia had geared her whole school system to the production of engineers and technicians, and stated that Russia will soon have more and equally good engineers than the rest of the world. This, he felt, might upset the balance of world power.

Dr. Solandt, who graduated from Medicine at the U of T with "the highest marks ever known," is one of Canada's most famous scientists. He is now the scientific member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and has pioneered work in Canada in guided missiles, arctic logistics, and germ warfare.

During the war, Dr. Solandt worked in Britain on radar development and on fire controls for tanks. He also was part of a research team to visit Hiroshima and Nagasaki after the war. Next March Dr. Solandt moves from his government position to become Assistant Vice-President in Charge of Research and Development with the government-owned Canadian National Railways.

Dr. Solandt said in his speech that we are now entering the age of space travel, thinking machines, and automation.

He described a complicated radar warning system, which, he said, could automatically seek out any plane in the sky near its station; find its speed, location, and course; check airline schedules and flight plans to see if the plane was likely a friendly one; meditate on the existing state of international tensions to see if the incident was worth checking into further; alert a near-by air base; choose the plane and the pilot to check into the incident on the basis of repair reports and "who had been out late the night before"; fly the plane to meet the intruder; fire its guns; and return the plane to its base.

All these ideas, he said, have been demonstrated as practicable, although they are not all yet working.

Dr. Solandt described the broadening of the engineers' niche in scientific circles. Engineers, he said, are spreading out into the fields of research and practical use of commodities from the narrow range of technical duties. However, he said, not enough engineers enter research.

Dr. Solandt said there is no better time than now to be an engineer—"There is a challenging future for engineering."

Reviving Bygone HH Glories Silver Buck Masquerade Bait

Out of the "roaring twenties" will come the Hart House Masquerade this Friday evening. One of the best known masquerades in Canada between 1919 and 1937, the dance was later run through the war years, until this year, as a fall prom, much like a football dance.

University enrollment during the twenties was 3,000, but the 700 tickets which were put on sale went like the proverbial hotcakes. Tickets finally were allotted by faculty and school registration, the faculty representatives being responsible for distribution.

Some rush tickets went on sale the day before in the Hart House Rotunda and the line-up would form the night before. Men would bring blankets and food in order to be near the head of the line. Rivalry and feeling ran high with many minor skirmishes and break-ins, so a regular check of the House by a police force was necessary.

Late evening suppers were in vogue then and three suppers were provided during the evening. The orchestras had their programs synchronized and buglers were stationed at strategic points in the House to announce each dance. Foxtrots, an occasional waltz, and the Charleston filled the dance floor.

Costumes were fantastic, elaborate, hilarious, and always original. The winning costumes of 1923 were a couple from the French court of Louis XIV and runners-up were costumed as a telephone and an operator. Clowns, ghosts, devils, geisha girls, all cavorted amid showers of confetti, streamers and balloons. Rental costumes were simply out of the question, since it was considered poor taste not to create your own special style.

The Camera Club co-operated with the planning committee and costumed couples could have their photographs taken during the evening. A rush service was provided by ten or fifteen couriers, who dashed from photographer to darkroom and back.

The offer of silver dollars to the first two hundred couples appearing in costume this Friday should revive this swirl of color on the campus.

Minister Says

Segregation Is Not Yet Dead College Bans Negro Students

Segregation, officially banned in United States schools by the Supreme Court, apparently is still powerful in some U.S. universities.

Several weeks ago, the Duke University dramatic society voted to invite students from North Carolina College, a Negro school, to take part in their twenty-fifth season.

The University administration, however, opposed the plan, because "we cannot invite anyone to come to our shows and performances without providing adequate facilities (rest-room and seating) for them."

Having the audience segregated was suggested as a solution, but was promptly shelved.

When the students replied they wouldn't mind being integrated with other students and faculty members, the reply was that it would "cut attendance" and "perhaps cause nation-wide comment."

Duke Chronicle reporters interviewed several faculty members, and their answers were largely in favor of the visit.

Said one professor: "It is unfortunate that in an academic community of human understanding, that students of different color cannot sit down together to enjoy cultural pursuits."

In another sector of the Deep South, desegregation suffered a defeat. The Florida Supreme Court gave a decision delaying integration of Negroes and Whites in the University of Florida.

With this decision came the statement that segregation would continue until it is shown that Negroes can be admitted without creating "public mischief."

There is, however, another side to the story. The Columbia Daily Spectator, in an education supplement, reports that only one-half of one per cent of Columbia's student body is Negro. Yet Columbia and other eastern colleges willingly accept them, the paper said.

The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, an organization formed to encourage Negroes to enter college, said they could place many more students if only they could find ones to meet the college requirements.

Another cause of low Negro enrollment, the Spectator reports, is an extremely poor system of Scholarship Aid Is Needed Coldwell Informs Xavier "U"

Antigonish, Nova Scotia (CUP): The need for a national scholarship program was stressed recently by CCF leader Coldwell. He was addressing students at Saint Francis Xavier University.

"Canada should not have to depend on what amounts the charity fund organizations in the United States," he said referring to the limited funds which are available from private foundations "Human intelligence must not go underdeveloped," he said. "Potential talents... must be discovered and developed in the service of a better Canada." He said that the Massey report recommendations of five million dollars a year for scholarships should be instituted immediately, but that such a program would only be a good start.

HH Storm a Bogey No Blue Law Here

A prominent Toronto minister, who is an executive of the Lord's Day Alliance, says the recent controversy over a proposed series of five Sunday evening concerts was just a "bogey" whipped up by "lurid headlines and editorials that had no relation to the facts."

Speaking to the morning service of Bloor Street United Church held in the university's Convocation Hall, Dr. E. M. Howse said the Lord's Day Alliance never had any desire to cancel the series.

Blackburn Says Smoking Room Open To Eleven

Robt. H. Blackburn, the University's Chief Librarian, last night announced a revision in the Main Library hours.

Effective Nov. 14, the Smoking Room will remain open until 11 p.m. to provide a supervised study area for students. The remainder of the library will close at the usual time—10 p.m.

Mr. Blackburn made it clear that the continuance of this policy will depend solely upon the reception it receives from the student body.

This is an attempt to satisfy student demands for longer library hours, said Mr. Blackburn.

"The whole thing is a fascinating study in public hysteria," he said.

"The Alliance never asked for the cancellation. It urged that the concerts be held within the law. And the university, in the end, is doing just that. The final outcome, far from being the over-coming of the Alliance, was a coming over to the Alliance."

Dr. Howse went on to say there is no such thing as a Blue Law in Canada. He said Blue Laws control the behaviour of individuals, but Canada's laws are aimed at preventing certain things from becoming businesses.

"The Lord's Day Act was the first legislation giving workers relief from the seven-day week. It is the only legislation that still gives many people a six-day week. Far from being a relic of the 19th century, it was passed by the Laurier government in the second decade of the 20th century."

"The whole storm was a bogey but the students just didn't know it. If the suggestions of the Alliance secretary had been acted on in the first place instead of later on there would have been no storm and no hysteria."

Dr. Howse said the laws prohibit no one from playing sports, staging music or theatrical events or holding meetings but when these things became a business and involved the employment of labor that they came under the act.

It boiled down to whether "people who like Tchaikowski should be above the Canadian law whereas people who like a torch song should be under it."

SMC Rapped By Editorial In NS Paper

Antigonish, Nova Scotia (CUP): An attack on St. Michael's College Council, and particularly its president, Phil Wood was delivered recently in the editorial columns of the Xaverian Weekly. The attack came as a result of St. Michael's withdrawal from the Canadian Federation of Catholic College Students.

"The Xaverian puts Phil and the Council on their back for their enthusiasm," says the editorial. It refers to a statement made by Wood that the Council "wholeheartedly" believed in the theory of CFCCS. The editorial quotes Wood as saying "We unfortunately found the present arrangement unsatisfactory."

"The last statement is strangely profound" remarks the editorial. "The writer says that according to Mr. Wood, the discovery was made "after two weeks of conscientious study."

"Admirable!" says the editorial. "But did it really take that much time of conscientious study to find out that CFCCS is wanting?"

The editorial offers some advice to the delegates to the CFCCS conference, held at the same time on the campus of St. Francis Xavier University. Suffocate even the slightest germ of a trend in the direction of the action of St. Michael's Council, it warns.

Red Feather Asked $5,000 But UofT Donates $2,000 Outstanding: $3,000

U of T students have donated almost $2,000 to the current Red Feather campaign out of an objective of $5,000.

A meeting of the faculty reps. was held last night to determine the contributions of each faculty and final results will be released Wednesday.

Highlight of the campaign was a croquet match played between the "men of government" of UC, and the women. A collection taken up resulted in at least eight more dollars towards the campaign.

In addition to the UC cheerleaders, a crowd of 150 spectators, turned out to watch the tournament.

Wend costumes added color to the match. One male player was debonair as a Frenchman, complete with beret and brown corduroy jacket. Another was garbed as a professor, while a third represented a private eye in trenchcoat and bowler hat.

Although the ladies were reputed to be wearing middies and smart skirts, a far more interesting array of costumes was displayed. A grass skirt caused the sensation of the afternoon. Another girl shaved up as Miss 1890 in a striped skirt middy shirt and parasol.

Although both sides claimed victory, the invincible women won. The men finally admitted that they were "too hooped to hop."

Sandy Macpherson, Student Service Commissioner of SAC said last night that he was very disappointed in the returns.

Macpherson said: "We had expected at least fifty cents a student."

Trade Unions Big For Boots Millard Enlarges Shoe's Size

A prominent union executive is expected to defend labour groups against the resumption of the second Hart House debate Wednesday: "Trade unions are too big for their boots."

C. H. Millard, Canadian director of the United Steelworkers of America, will speak on the motion as Honorary Visitor. He has had wide experience with trade unions since the 1930's and twice represented the CCF party in the Ontario Legislature.

Peet Messer, U. of T. student, supporting the affirmative said, "Around the core of the good principles of trade unionism and of equally fair methods of making these principles come alive, such malignant growths of monopoly, power-grasping and irresponsibility have grown that to-day's trade unions must be purified and reeducated."

One of his opponents, Bob Borovoy, III Law, said that the growing size of unions has enabled the little man of the economy to get behind the curtain and to withstand the crushing heel of big business."

Another supporter of the affirmative, Clyde Batten, III U.C., said, "Trade unions were formed to fight the robber barons of big business now find themselves attacked by the robber barons of the little man."

Harry Arthur, I Law, commented on the debate. Our opponents would have been at home in the 19th century but in the 20th century they will be put to defend themselves."

The debate will be followed by an informal discussion. All persons who speak from the floor will be invited to attend the full session.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Morality Needed In UN

The Editor, The Varsity:

UN Day, or rather UN propaganda day, has again given the signal for the effusive volleys of approbation which that organization seems to command.

The tenor is always the same: there is a list of negligible accomplishments, apologies for the faults, andreams about hope for the future. But amidst all the adulation, everyone seems to miss what seems to be the salient feature of the organization: that in its present form the UN is an utter contradiction, and as such, can never be an effective instrument for world peace.

Russia is implacably dedicated to the destruction of the governments of the free world; the UN is dedicated to world peace. There is then an inherent contradiction in the structure of the UN which cannot be obscured by any amount of blind hope and nebulous talk of peace. The quixotic view that the UN provides a valuable world forum where East and West will eventually thrash things out and emerge arm in arm is completely untenable. Violent revolution and aggrandizement are part and parcel of communist philosophy and political practice.

Anyone who thinks the communists exorable, or capable of turning over a new leaf, just does not understand the nature of the communist movement. If the UN is to make any headway toward peace, Russia must logically be expelled.

The Charter of the UN states that only "peace-loving states" may be members. It would not be difficult to prove Russia otherwise; at one time or another Russia has violated most articles in the Charter, most notably perhaps, Art. 2, which provides that members shall "refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the UN is taking preventative or enforcement action." Art. 6 provides that any member "which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council."

Being a party to the dispute, Russia would have no right to exercise her veto, (Art. 27). The Russian seat, which the Soviets have forfeited by aiding Red China and North Korea in the Korean War could be declared vacant by a formal resolution.

This is the direction in which the UN should be heading, back toward moral principle.

Unfortunately it chooses to lean the other way towards appeasement of the aggressor. Instead of considering the expulsion of Russia, the UN prefers to consider the admission of Red China, an act which would extinguish any scintilla of hope remaining for the organization.

The futility of the UN today is proof that in the quest for peace, money and good will will not suffice without morality and common sense.

Garbellation

The Editor, The Varsity:

From out the Tiny Group Miserable standing about the white flag-pole of nations of a wet yesterday afternoon, I looked upon the compass of nature and the works of men. All about me herds of empty faces drained to the room of the Tree to fill same, and I could not but help recalling the words of an old teacher, which I now, with apologies and garbellation, tender:

'Under the maple let me lie,

And watch the snails go whizzing by;
O clear the spot when I am dead,
And place a Rose upon my head.

But this is getting much too ludicrous to be even a little funny.

a beginning

Among the besetting sins of the Twentieth Century, prudery ranks as a very minor threat. Children absorb the facts of life years before confronting their first bee. Book covers, almost unanimously, stress one prominent feature of the feminine form. Oh, two then. More and more rough, all-purpose adjectives are finding their way out of the barrack room, and into the best seller.

Mrs. Grundy, Goddess of Prudery, has been forced to shelter, like so many other relics of the past, within the University. There, among academic gowns, Romanesque architecture, archaic teaching methods, and the last of the Victorians, she waits for an auspicious season to fare again into the world.

Meanwhile, she keeps her hand in. She drapes Mother Hubbards over our lovely cheer leaders, leaving our football outings occasions of the grimmest propriety. She reduces "Daffydil" and "Skulenite" to shadows of former glory. She keeps student publications as devoid of anything worth looking at as they are of anything worth reading.

But we wouldn't lose you for the world Mrs. Grundy. You help make this place a living storehouse of History.

Black Panthers Upset Irish Ashton And Ellis Score

By JOHN VOJTECH

Two weeks ago, Trinity and St. Mike's played each other, with the Irish coming out on top 6-0. Due to an ISC ruling the teams were forced to replay that game. Net result: the Black Panthers pulled an upset by winning by the same score of 6-0 in the game that was played yesterday. This time the game will count.

The game was a hard played bruising battle, much like the first encounter. The first score came midway through the third quarter. St. Mike's had the ball on their forty-five yard line. There was a fumble in the backfield and Trinity's Sam Ashton swooped down on the ball and raced forty yards for the major. The Irish were stunned by the turn of events. They did, however block the convert through the efforts of Bill Priestner. Late in the fourth quarter with Trinity pressing, Brook Ellis kicked a single.

The line play of both teams was very good. For the Black Panthers, Duart Farquharson, White, Ashton, and Shoemaker played a bang-up game. The backs seemed more sure of themselves as they ran with authority and little hesitancy. Brook Ellis played a good game while Dave Smith literally ran his team out of danger and into Irish territory. He received good runs from John Cumberland and Jerry Aziz.

For the Irish and in a losing cause, Bill O'Rourke played a good offensive game at center. Russell, Huschilt, Ingson and McKinnon were the Irish line standouts. Bill Priestner, aside from playing offensive end well, starred on defence as he blocked a Trinity kick early in the second quarter. Leo Mcguigan played a good game for the Irish as did plunging back Ron Renzetti, Jack Fenn, Mike McDonald and Ken Stanton came up with several long runs. Frank Kiefty in at the quarter slot came up with some fine passes but his ends just couldn't hang onto them.

Meds Hold Dents 6-5

By JOHN BROOKS

Meds held off a last quarter rally to gain a rather uninteresting 6-5 win over Dentistry yesterday afternoon. The game was mostly a continuous exchange of kicks, as cold weather slowed down both teams, and neither was able to get a good ground attack organized. Meds held a slight edge in play.

Two bad snaps in the first quarter paved the way for all the Meds scoring. Dents received the opening kickoff and were unable to advance. The third down snap was high, and Meds recovered on the fifteen. They too were unable to get an offence rolling, and John Fowler kicked to the deadline for a single point, which eventually turned out to be the margin of victory.

Another bad snap set the doctors up in scoring position again and this time they made no mistakes, with a long pass resulting in the major score, to give Meds a 6-0 lead. The convert attempt was blocked.

The Meds threatened again just at the close of the half when John Hamilton took a pass from Druckman for a long gain, but on the next play, the dentists broke through to hand Meds a twenty yard loss on another pass try.

In the second half, a fifty yard sleeper play set up the lone Dentistry score. Laine took a pass and galloped to the Meds thirty, from where Bill Smith hit Don O'Conner at the five. O'Conner shook off one man and crossed standing up for the major, which was unconverted.

In the final frame, Dents came close to forging into the lead when a forty yard field goal try fell short by about a yard. Fowler and Druckman were the big offensive guns for the Meds, while Baird, Dan Standret and McIntosh came up with good defensive plays. O'Conner and Laine paced Dents, with Gajda and Freedman good on defense.

Meds had five first downs to Dentistry's four, with each team completing two-thirds of the few passes thrown. There were only three fumbles in the game, contrary to the fact that cold weather usually makes the pigskin pretty difficult to handle.

Medsmen Lose Lacrosse Tilts

Meds teams lost double encounters to the Engineers in yesterday's lacrosse action in Hart House. SPS II walloped Meds II 6-1, while the Meds VI's absorbed a merciless 10-2 drubbing from the Skule V's.

Polecron and Caswell scored two each for the Engineers in the first game while Lansky and Rosebrugh added singles. Perkin scored for Meds. In the second game Moore and Thompson scored four apiece for Skule with Clarke and James adding one each. Taylor and Wright scored for the Doctors.

SPS II topped Pre-Meds II 15-13, 14-16, 16-14 in volleyball action while UC Firsts and Skule Seniors drew 0-0 in soccer.

Alumni Loan Fund Rich Dollars Going Begging Donations Break Record

This university's Alumni Association has money begging to be borrowed.

C. G. M. Grier, executive secretary of the Association said last night the organization has nearly $3,000 to be loaned to undergraduates.

This loan program is in addition to a $30,000 bursary program carried on by the Alumni last year — a record.

Any student, except freshmen, is eligible for the loans. They are awarded on the basis of merit, character and need. Mr. Grier said.

Amounts up to $400 may be borrowed by students, depending on their year and course.

An extensive bursary campaign is being organized and administered by the Association. More than 40,000 graduates of the university were asked for donations.

The Association also administers the War Memorial Fund which last year totalled $4,050.

Mr. Grier said the Association hopes to build its bursary program to the place where a minimum of $50,000 is being dispersed through college and faculty alumni clubs in other cities in North America.

Applications for Alumni bursaries may be made through college and faculty registrars while loan applications should be directed to the Alumni office, 45 St. George St., Mr. Grier said.

Spadina Is P.C. After 25 Years As Rea Elected

Spadina riding went Progressive Conservative last night for the first time in 25 years.

Charles E. Rea, PC, won the by-election held to fill a vacancy left by the elevation of David Croll to the Senate, Samuel Godfrey, who was seeking to keep Spadina for the Liberals, trailed Mr. Rea by several hundred votes.

Election figures for all the candidates were not available at press time but Rea was credited with 6,708 votes while Godfrey ran second with 6,108 votes. There were no available figures for the CCF candidate, Harry Waisglass, and Joseph E. Salsberg, Labor-Progressive.

The campaign saw lively campaigning, with stickers, posters and sound-trucks paying visits to George Street fraternities, U of T is just outside the riding boundary.

Queen's Journal Disagrees:

Stevenson Praises Canada

Kingston, (CUP)—Adlai Stevenson, former Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States, told a Queen's University Convocation that the Canadian people have achievements to their credit of "incalculable importance."

Mr. Stevenson, a former Governor of Illinois and prospective candidate for the Presidency in 1956, was present at the convocation to receive an honorary doctorate of laws.

Mr. Stevenson said:

"It is no coincidence, I am sure, that your government has earned in the councils of the British Commonwealth, of NATO, and of the United Nations, a weight and influence which numbers alone could never give.

Mr. Stevenson said that the riddle of peaceful co-existence achieved between the United States and Canada—even more than the riddle of Communism—may when solved give a clue to "the international good life."

"We have the ultimate hope that in the relations between Canada and the US some clue can be found to the international good life in the atomic age."

Two articles appearing in the next day's issue of the Queen's Journal seriously questioned the basis of Mr. Stevenson's flattery of Canada.

And an editorial in the Journal commented that Stevenson's description of Canadians as having "patient and level-headed passion in a world of convulsion" was quite accurate.

The editorial said that the "poise" was more due to mass indifference than to enlightened public opinion.

Tony King, a former Journal Editor, comments in the same issue that Canadians have perhaps been living up to their international obligations. He cites Canada's contributions to the Colombo plan—one-thousandth of our national income—and the lack of military conscription.

Queen's Is Sold Out Short End Varsity's

It's just about impossible to get tickets to this Saturday's crucial Varsity-Queen's football classic in Kingston.

All tickets have been sold except for about 100 still available in the Student's Administrative Council office. But in order to get these, you have to buy a ticket on the Football Special. Total return price: $7.65.

An official at Queen's University said late yesterday that Richardson Stadium, the Golden Gaels' home field, was definitely "sold out."

A win for Varsity this weekend would virtually mean a second straight intercollegiate football championship for Toronto. A win for Queen's will assure a sudden-death meeting between the Blues and Gaels.

The stadium at Queen's — seating some 9,200 spectators — will be hopping with the biggest Toronto demonstration in years. An official in the Athletic office at Hart House said about 600 U. of T. students were making the 150-mile jaunt to the Penitentiary town.

Tickets, which went on sale in the Hart House ticket office at 9 a.m. yesterday, were picked up like wildfire. By 1 p.m., some 450 had been sold and Godfrey of the Athletic office said he had to phone Queen's to ask for an increase in Toronto's ticket allotment.

"They gave us 75 more," Mr. F. S. Gregory said, "I know that isn't very much but they said they were already sold out and couldn't let us have any more."

Students applying at the ticket office later in the day had to be (Continued on Page 8)

Debate To Hear Tramp Or Patter Of Union Boots

C. H. Millard, twice a CCF member of the provincial legislature and the present Canadian Director of the United Steelworkers of America, will be the Honorary Visitor tonight at the Hart House debate. He will speak on the motion "Trade Unions are too big for their boots."

"Like the old woman, trade unions now are feeding their members pretty thin gruel and, for all I know, might even be beating them," said Clyde Batten, III UC, speaking for the resolution.

Harry Arthurs, I Law, speaking for the noes, said, "Apparently the ayes when they think of unions expect to hear the pitter patter of little feet and not the tramp, tramp, tramp of marching pickets. They are living in a fairy tale."

The other speaker for the ayes, Peter Marsh, II Trinity, said, "We completely realize that the trade union movement is one of the great sources of any social justice we have in Canada today, but our eyes are wide open to the threat to economic and political freedom of irresponsible and muscular trade unions."

Alan Borovoy, III Law, said for the noes, "It would be an abomination if the house considered the unions' feet too big for their boots. The ayes resolution would take the very arch out of our economy."

Speaker of the House, Ron Price, I Law, will call the session to order at 8:00 p.m. Last year Price was speaker of the Victoria Debating Parliament.

Canadians Use Science And Sex To Counter Red Literary Flood

By MOISHE REITER

Russian publications, 1500 of them, were unloaded on the University of Toronto Library last year. The publications were sent by the Academie Nauk of Moscow, a central cultural exchange bureau for all Soviet scientific books and pamphlets.

Described by the Russians as "scientific literature" the publications include such matter as Izvestia, Pravda, and several picture magazines depicting Soviet life. Other publications come to the library from Czechoslovakia, Poland and Jugoslavia, countries all or partly behind the Iron Curtain. Most of these are technical, dealing with mathematics and medicine. The Czechs contribute a literary periodical as well.

The Russian section in the University Library dates back some fifty years to the old Imperial Academy of czarist days. This Academy was replaced by the Academy Nauk which continued the previous practice of sending literature abroad.

Most of the material received at the Library now is periodical publications such as VOKS, which is published by the USSR Society for Cultural Relations With Other Countries and appears on the library shelves in English. Other magazines on the theatre are in Russian.

Periodicals Librarian Mrs. Park-Taylor reports that there is much interest in these publications, particularly among students in the Slavic Studies courses. For others the most popular periodical on Russia is one that comes from the USA. The American Slavic and East European Review, put out by the Columbia University Press, sits on a shelf just to the right of Mrs. Park-Taylor's desk and is often referred to by students seeking material for essays, background on their courses or just general knowledge about Soviet Russia.

When ready the periodicals are bound and sent to the stacks, available for reference by students and faculty.

In return the University of Toronto confines itself to sending publications on biology and literature from the Royal Canadian Institute scientific series. "Really," says Librarian Miss Todd, "we get more than we give."

The Russians are trying to change this by asking for exchange of the Canadian Historical Review, Canadian Journal of Economy and Political Science, Journal of Psychology, The Law Quarterly, as well as the more technical Journal of Applied Science and Engineering.

English Teacher Stabbed In Bed Handyman Held

Morgantown, West Virginia (Exchange): An English instructor at the University of West Virginia was found brutally murdered in her bed last week.

Mrs. Susan Holden was found, stabbed and slashed about the body and face, apparently with a small-bladed knife. The 52-year-old victim had been alone in the house.

The murderer apparently entered through a kitchen window and left through the front door. Bloodstains were found on a drapery and the window sill.

A handyman who worked at the house has been held and questioned in connection with the slaying.

Varsity's Travelling Goalposts

Here Again, Gone Again, Na Branrighinn

Varsity's now-famous steel goalposts, a trifle travelworn, may soon be returning home.

In fact, it is expected that they will be presented to University of Toronto officials at half-time of the next Varsity-Western game.

The "indestructible" steel goalposts were originally removed from Varsity stadium by Queen's students nearly three weeks ago, after the Queen's-Varsity game. They were ripped out of their concrete moorings by the concerted efforts of a band of Queen's engineers, armed with a rope.

Stadium officials later estimated the cost of the damage at about $500. They announced that wooden posts would probably be used for the rest of the year.

The posts were marched along Bloor Street by Queen's supporters and were later shipped to Kingston via the Canadian National Express. The student who signed the shipping papers has not yet been located.

From Sunday till the following Tuesday the posts sat in the Kingston station depot, while CNR express officials tried to find someone to pay the $4.50 for the 300-pound moving job. They're still trying, but the posts have disappeared.

Certain Queen's students managed to "remove" the posts from the platform, and displayed them in front of Queen's gymnasium. But came the Western weekend, and the goal posts went.

Western fans were foiled in their efforts to acquire Queen's own goal posts, in Richardson stadium after the football game. In revenge, they located the hastily-hidden Varsity posts and removed them from under the noses of celebrating Queen's students.

The posts, shipped this time to London, have been hidden on a remote part of the Western campus, the Western Gazette has announced, Varsity observers, down at Western for the Queen's-Western game, reported that they were unable to locate the posts. They said that they suspect they are hidden on some farm, about twenty miles away from the campus.

The extra precautions taken by Western to conceal the posts were partly in anticipation of Queen's visit for the last weekend. It was predicted that an attack would be made on West-

OUR READERS WRITE:

An Answer To Morality

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I should like to take exception to Mr. John Leo's narrow-minded view in Tuesday's Varsity. He states that Russia, and that must mean all Communist countries, must be excluded from the United Nations. His letter would suggest then, that we should instead continue as blood brothers with such "peace-loving" allies as Chiang Kai Shek who is willing, if he could get support, to take his hundred thousand followers and exterminate the millions on the mainland. (Even Audie Murphy would never have won the war with odds like that!).

It would also suggest that a world organization would continue to exist with more than one quarter of the world's population absent. If after all the peace talks at Geneva and elsewhere Mr. Leo is still convinced that Russia wants, and would benefit by a war that would destroy mankind, then why does he suggest that we expel the Communists instead of keeping them where we can have an eye on them, and angering them still more by expulsion?

If Mr. Leo all his life wants to be a member of a society in which everyone believes as he does, I suggest he found a colony on some unexplored South Seas island where he could keep out all those who do not agree with his way of life.

If we in the West, instead of worrying about the Russians, would try to clean up some of our own dirty washing (such as segregation and unemployment) then we would have everyone in the world clamouring for our way of life and a true, co-operating United Nations could be established.

Blues In Toughest Game

BY JOHN WILSON

Still rocking on their heels from the 16-9 setback handed them by the McGill Redmen last Saturday in Moisson Stadium, the Varsity Blues are undergoing a quick change before facing their toughest game of the season this Saturday against the Golden Gaels in Kingston.

The pass defence, which allowed McGill's Dick Carr to hit John Bennett for two disastrous touchdowns in Saturday's game, is in for a bit of a revision to make it as least as airtight as it was when the Blues last met the Gaels.

On that occasion Varsity recorded a slim 11-6 victory, largely through the efforts of Muntz, Skrzypek and Co. who allowed Gus Braccia to complete only eight of twenty-four strikes, one for a major.

In Braccia the Blue defensive backs will face every bit as dangerous a passer as Carr, with an even more dangerous receiver in Stewart. The mighty mite picked up three touchdowns against the Mustangs last week, two on passes from the ex-Temple University star. In the last encounter with the Gaels, Stewart was Phil Muntz' personal responsibility, and the Cruncher watched him like a hawk. Only once was Stewart in the clear, with Muntz still hot on his trail, but the intended pass struck the goal-post as the Gael threat died in the fourth quarter.

"We did a good job last time," mused Bob Masterson last night, "but it's hard to hold a kid like Stewart down for the whole game." Masterson will have a slightly new defence to throw in the Gaels' path this Saturday, one that should cut short their bid for the title.

The injuries that left the Blues weak for the McGill game will not be around to bother Masterson this week, except for big Al Watt, who is out for the season with torn cartilages. End Don Smith will be back in action, and guard Earl Ford's knee seems to be responding to treatment. Halfback Rich Bethune, who is badly missed on defence, will be losing his cast on Friday and may be ready for the game with Western November 5. Bethune cracked a vertebra against OAC before the season opened.

Unlimited possibilities are available now that the Blues have lost to McGill. If Varsity should lose their remaining two games, and McGill win both theirs, the playoff will see McGill against Queen's. If McGill can only win one, the Blues will meet Queen's in post-season action. The Blues can pretty well settle the whole matter by winning both games. If this happens there will be no playoff, and Varsity will automatically retain the title, unless McGill also win two, in which case the Redmen would meet the Blues November 12. On the other hand, should the Blues tie Queen's Saturday, and McGill win both their games, we would have another three-way tie for first place, provided the Blues lost to Western.

Only two things are sure in this light. Western are out of the picture for the first time since before the war, and the Blues must win at least one of their remaining games to be sure of a playoff berth. It would be best to make it this Saturday.

Baby Blues Face Colts

Kennedy Deciding Which Men Play Against Western Colts On Saturday

The Baby Blues came out of their Friday night game with OAC practically injury free and Coach Jack Kennedy is prepping his boys for the season's big game here against Western on Friday afternoon of this week.

Glenn MacLean picked up an ankle injury against the Aggies and he may possibly sit out the game against the powerful Colts. Kennedy won't know until after the Rinkies scrimmage with the Blues tonight whether or not he will have Norm Levine back in the lineup, or whether Dave McIntyre and Jim Rowney will still be wearing Intermediate sweaters come Friday.

A victory on Friday assures the Baby Blues of at least a tie for the championship. That is, of course, provided they beat Queen's and Ryerson in the final two games of the regular season, and with twin 35-0 and 29-0 victories to date, there is not much danger of an upset by either of these teams.

Kennedy was quite pleased with his team's performance on Friday in holding the power-packed Aggies to an 11-11 draw. The Baby Blues had one touchdown called back, and on the basis of that and a good ground offense, Toronto actually outplayed the Aggies and a victory would have been well-deserved.

The Intermediates now have the advantage of playing the remaining three games on home grounds and they are, of course, all afternoon games. The pass attack against the Aggies seemed to be weakened by the fact that the game was played under lights. Larry Joynt was only able to complete five out of fourteen passes thrown, although a solid ground offense compensated for the aerial deficiency.

The Baby Blues have been concentrating particularly on pass defence this week as they prepare to make amends for the 7-5 defeat suffered in London some two weeks ago.

Irish Gals Lace St. Hilda's 40-4

St. Mike's women played grand-slam basketball last night defeating Trinity 40-4. The Saints displayed a calm, cool and collected attitude, managing to keep the ball in their own end of the court throughout the game. The fast and accurate passwork allowed their forwards to drive in and rack up points. St. Mike's guards showed themselves to be equally as strong defensively holding down all the way.

Barbara Kincaid chalked up a two pointer for Trinity while Miller and Young each netted a foul shot bringing the total up to 4 points. Co-operative teamwork paved the way for St. Mike's high scorers, Peggy Cain and Joanne Lappette who each chalked up eleven points with Norma Walsh trailing behind with six.

Both teams displayed good spirit though St. Mike's may be looking to the future with more than hopeful anticipation.

Saturday — Varsity at Queen's McGill at Western

Interfaculty Summary

Shutouts were in order yesterday afternoon in Interfaculty soccer action on the front and back campuses. Junior SPS insured their bid towards the Arts Faculty Cup by walloping Dents 4-0, while Pre-Meds edged Trinity B's 1-0. Emmanuel overcame Forestry 2-0 in a second division game.

Kyarkov notched two in the first game for the Engineers, with Pahapill and Uruing adding singles. In the second game, Friberg scored the lone goal for the Doctors. Kirkwood and Chapple tallied in the third game to lead the unbeaten Theologs to victory over the Woodsmen.

A lone lacrosse game saw Meds IV slip by Skule III 3-2. Grant Farrow, Don Ranney, and Doug scored for the Doctors, while Rose and Lucas counted the Engineers' points.

SOCCER

The Intermediate soccer game with Ryerson, to be played this afternoon on the back campus, is scheduled for 2:30, not 3:30. All team members are respectfully requested to be on time for the match with the Lambs from Gould Street.

Old man weather is playing havoc with the outdoor sports with tennis and baseball games having to be cancelled right along the line this week. Although there is some talk to the effect that the Interfaculty Tennis Tournament should be played to the bitter end, I somehow agree with the net players that things should be forgotten for this season at least and if there are any eager believers who feel that this position is not justified, the tournament could always be run off come next May when people have nothing better to do than study.

For these pro-tennis enthusiasts, who want the tournament, I recommend taking a jaunt over to the Devonshire courts and looking the terrain over. There, they will find nice deep water pools which are much bigger than the pool at Lilian Massey (which is not saying much) and which would be lovely to bounce tennis balls in. Actually, the rain is not the only detriment for the cold weather is running a close second. Anyone out playing in these sub-zero days in a pair of flimsy white shorts is bound to land up in bed with their death of pneumonia. Why ruin your health gains for the sake of some illogical souls who wish to see the Interfaculty Tournament decided by a series of unwanted matches.

Furthermore, it follows that St Hilda's will once again walk with the crown. It seems highly improbable that any Interfaculty aspirant will defeat either Mary Nunn or Mary Lynn Boys (both Trinity gals) who captured the first and second singles respectively in the Intercollegiate Tournament held last week end. There is no member of a college squad who even comes close to the ability of either of these ladies, so I go along with the experts and award the Interfaculty Tennis Championship to the downed college on Devonshire Place.

Speaking of SPORT

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

Toronto fans were all saying the improbable couldn't happen, but it did. The McGill Redmen broke their nine game winless streak by beating the Blues, and, in so doing, broke a Blue streak in the opposite direction — eleven games without a defeat. In discrediting the Redmen, Blue supporters might attribute McGill's victory to Lady Luck or Dame Good Fortune. But such is not the case.

Several fans have said the Blues lost because of certain psychological factors. First, the Blues were given a scare by Dick Carr, the ex-Columbia sharp-shooter, in the previous game's last half. Then many expressed the viewpoint that several of the Blue linemen were playing with gimpy legs. Another psychological barrier was the mere presence of Buster Brown and Ron Murphy on the McGill line.

Various factors were involved in the Blue defeat, partly psychological but mainly physical. The Blues didn't lose because of a bad pass attack for they enjoyed their usual advantage in yards rushing with 196 yards as opposed to the Redmen's 95. They lost because they could not hang on to the ball during crucial moments. Either cold weather or rugged tackling by McGill forced the Blues to fumble five times. They recovered only twice. The Redmen were not exempt from fumbles with six, but their fumbles were not half as serious as the Blues'.

Carr's passing was another factor keeping the Redmen in pay dirt. His main target was John Bennett who was converted from halfback to end two weeks earlier. The ironic part of the whole situation was that the passing play in which Carr threw to Bennett for two touchdowns was thoroughly known to Bob Masterson. In fact, Bob had worked out the way he would defend the pass play during the week. Unfortunately Bennett was a little swifter, and Carr threw a little farther than the Blue defenders thought they could.

The unexpected McGill victory was good for the Blues, say some, for it will rid the Blues of any over-confidence they have had because of winning three consecutive. Others have said they were glad it was McGill that beat Varsity and not Queen's or the Mustangs. The reasons are obvious. Others have claimed the loss means nothing since the Redmen are virtually out of the playoff race anyway. We would disagree with this last statement as anything can happen in a College football league. There are many possibilities of wins and losses and ties that could push McGill, Toronto and Queen's into a three way tie for first place. This can not happen, of course, if the Blues whip Queen's this Saturday.

UC Captures Harrier

A powerful UC-PHE distance squad captured top team honours in yesterday's intramural Harrier race. Led by PHE freshman Bill Varey, the UC-PHE boys obtained thirteen points, amazingly low for a championship Harrier team.

Varey, winner of last week's Intercollegiate three mile stint, pulled away from his opposition in the last lap of the two mile course to win in the good time of ten minutes flat. Lindsay Drummond of Skule edged Bruce Hughes of UC in a back stretch duel for second place. Ron Troop, Tom Stroud and Mike Berger, all of UC, placed fourth, fifth, and sixth respectively.

SPS placed second in the team championship with seven, second, fourth, tenth and eleventh positions for a score of 30. Wycliffe tallied 58 points while Forestry scooped fourth place with 78.

A total of 56 competitors lined out for the annual affair which is gradually becoming a campus attraction. A surprisingly high number of 46 of the entrants finished. The first ten positions were as follows: 1. B. Varey (PHE), 2. L. Drummond (SPS), 3. B. Hughes (UC), 4. Troop (UC), 5. Stroud (UC), 6. Berger (UC), 7. Niblock (Wycliffe), 8. Wilson (St. Mike's), 9. Stewart (SPS), 10. Heatherington (SPS).

Yesterday's performances gave a good indication of what to expect in next Tuesday's U of T championship race at High Park when the Intercollegiate teams will be entered.

Through Katchachurian To Kidneys

By ANNE FRANKS

You might think that the University Library building was quite big enough for the needs of one campus. We did, but we were very wrong. There are approximately forty-five libraries on the University campus and thirty-four of these are departments of the main library.

As you may see from the map, libraries crop up wherever there are University buildings and have addresses ranging from the mundane 50 St. George St., (School of Nursing) to Baldwin House, (Law); and range in accessibility from the central Civil Engineering Libraries in the Skule House to the Education Library up at the Ontario College of Education on Bloor St. at Spadina.

One of the more interesting is the Pathology Library in the Banting Institute on College St. Not only books but also life-like exhibits and even carefully preserved, actual specimens of various human organs in sundry stages of disease make this a fascinating place to spend a few hours contemplating what those cigarettes are doing to your lungs and that last trip to the KCR to your liver—if your stomach can take it.

Or perhaps you favour the visual arts. The Fine Art Library is hard to get at—it's located, appropriately, in a tower, at the top of that steep spiral staircase in the south east corner of University College. Here you'll find books learned and illustrated or just plain pictures on art and archaeology from the earliest Greek huts and statuary to modern neo-Gothic and Picasso.

The Chinese Studies Library in the Royal Ontario Museum is well worth a visit. Our Museum is world known for its fine collection of Chinese artifacts, and while you're there you could drop in at the Palaeontology Library and look up fossils or stop by at the Museum's Zoology Library.

The Main University Library is in charge of these departmental libraries but it also exchanges books with other independent libraries on the campus. One with which it does a great deal of work is the Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies. This Library has many photostats which it lends to the main library and which the main library will borrow for you if you happen to be unable to complete your university education without a certain rare and beautiful manuscript.

Each college has its own library and reading room. Of particular interest is the new Trinity reading room built under the new Trinity Chapel. The books on the shelves are, as in all college libraries, those most in demand, but the spaciousness and comfort is just a little better than in most college libraries. We were just a little startled to find that aids to comfort included an air dryer, but apparently Trinity, in the old English tradition, is bothered by fog.

BORROW BOOKS

How To

By RALPH BERRIN

The key to any library book is its shelf mark. That, the book's title and author, and your own signature and ATL card are all you need to get a book from any of the campus libraries.

Of course, the main library on the front campus is the one that does the most business, and that's the one we are going to talk about.

The shelf-mark is in the upper left hand corner of the catalogue card. Its cryptic notation of capital letters above capital and lower case letters indicates to the knowing eye of the librarian, the subject and author's initials. With this information, generally contained in three letters, every one of the libraries 771,721 books can be located.

THE CATALOGUES

The main catalogue lists every book available at the University and is rightly termed "the key to the library." In its 12 units of trays, you can find the book you want listed by author, by subject and sometimes by title. All these various entries are combined in one great alphabetical listing with headings arranged letter by letter, not by word.

Smaller catalogues in the various rooms of the Library duplicate the cards in the main catalogue. There are catalogues in the Wallace, Reference, Government Documents, Periodicals and Science Periodicals Rooms listing the books of their respective locations (naturally). Medical books are also listed in a separate catalogue beside the Science and Medicine Desk. For Science books you're referred to the main catalogue.

Now from the catalogue card of the book you want, copy the complete shelf-mark, author, title and volume number onto the appropriate loan slip. If you see red, it may be only the subject heading typed in red at the top of the card. However, if the mark in red is under the shelf-mark, the book is in a departmental library—far, far away.

A little blue card immediately before the index card you're looking at means that the book in question has been transferred to the Wallace Room.

Books in great demand are usually transferred to the Wallace Room—which is the room to the left inside the main Library door.

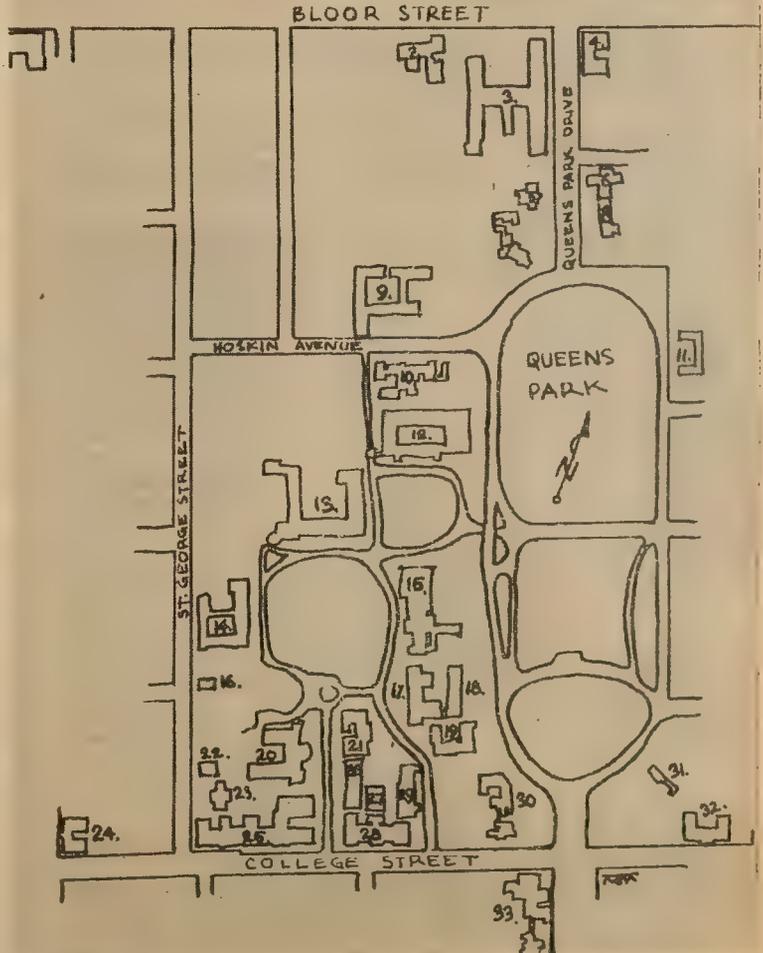

REGULATIONS AND SERVICES

Books may be borrowed for use in the reading rooms, study overnight, reference for one week, or left lying about for two weeks. Overnight books are obtainable at 3 p.m. and must be in by 10 a.m. next day or you forfeit fifty cents a day.

The Library offers services of amazing variety. The Medical desk takes reserves for overnight books, the only place to do so in the Library.

The books are dust free as the air is washed in the new library. Service might be delayed in the Science Division as the elevator is out of order and its a long, long way down 5 floors of narrow iron, steps and lengthy aisles for those science—technology books and then back up again!

Beyond the science section comes an alcove, filled with English Language and Literature (the Americans fit in here too).

On the south side of the Reference Room come History, Bibliography, and a whole alcove of genealogy. There are encyclopedias in English, French, Spanish, German, and several other foreign languages here.

The three reference librarians also manage the Inter-Library loan service, exchanging books in Canada, the US, and sometimes England, Germany and Sweden.

Violinists, Violinists, Violinists, Violinists, Temianka Groob

The two-hundred and sixty-fifth Hart House Sunday Evening Concert opened the 1955-56 season the night before last, with a programme by Mr. Henri Temianka, violinist, accompanied by Mr. Mario Bernardi. The principal characteristic of Mr. Temianka's genius shows itself in his supreme ability to draw from his violin a warm, full, solid tone; a lyric or mezzo rather than a coloratura or dramatic soprano.

This quality of tone was used to best effect in the Sonata in G minor (Op. 137 No. 3) by Schubert, the first movement of which contains passages where the melody in the violin part is doubled by the piano, either at the upper or lower octave. These passages, reminiscent of so much of Schubert's song-writing, came off particularly well in the precision and warmth of their execution. Again, the second movement of the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in E minor (Op. 64), corresponds nearly in style with many of the 'Lieder ohne Worte', and showed Mr. Temianka at his best indeed.

In the Tartini (arranged Kreisler) Variations on a Theme by Corelli, however, with which he opened the programme, I felt this very quality a little out of place. The variations were played rather fast, rather heavily, without too much distinction of piano from forte, and with almost none of that somewhat self-conscious brilliance and virtuosity which the piece must have if it is to rise above its rather mediocre music. It may be an inherent feeling for ensemble that will not permit Mr. Temianka to indulge in the extravagances required for this piece, but he would be wiser, I think, to avoid the Tartini-Paganini-Kreisler type of composition which, though not necessarily outside his high technical scope, nevertheless makes certain, emotional demands which he is, perhaps, unwilling to fulfill.

The third movement of the Mendelssohn Concerto also found Mr. Temianka hesitating to indulge in pure display, and his figuration here could in no wise be compared with the lyric qualities shown in the preceding movement. Mr. Temianka and Mr. Bernardi closed their programme with a suite of Rumanian Dances, collected by Bartok, and in a most attractive arrangement by Szekely. These made a pleasant, but rather brief, end to the evening, and their modest shapeliness gave Mr. Temianka a final opportunity to exercise his best talent, that rich, singing tone.

Michael Oliver

The general impression given by Jack Groob's recital in the Art Gallery on Sunday was one of well developed musicianship. Mr. Groob is a violinist well-known in Toronto through his work in the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, the CBC Symphony and his own Radio and Television series.

In the opening work, a Corelli-Kreisler Sarabande, Andante Con Moto, the artist produced the requisite pensive and somber mood. By way of contrast an Allegro by Pjococo was next played. This was characterized by a strong rhythmic stability which was effectively done and well received.

Sonata No. 8 in C Major by Mozart was the third number on the programme. In the first movement, Allegro Vivace, the interplay of themes between violin and piano was well integrated. The single lyricism of the second, Andante Sostenuto, was deeply felt and brought forth with sincerity. It was further enhanced by great flexibility of line. The work concludes with a Rondo, whose incisive rhythm and playfulness were revealed by the performer. He maintained here as in the other movements a truly Mozartian spirit in his conception of the work.

Mr. Groob concluded his recital with a Sonata by Dr. Healey Willan in E minor. It was handled with assurance and made a good impression on this listener as on the rest of the audience. Good contrast of tonal colour and strong emphasis on the dramatic element were apparent in the opening Lento quasi Recitativo; Allegro moderato and in the Adagio, a sustained lyrical mood. The final Allegro Molto is an exacting movement, and was handled with an equal degree of assurance.

Leo Barkin assisted very ably at the piano.

Ukrainian Students Benefit From New $10,000 Gift

More than $10,000 has been contributed by the Ukrainian Canadian committee to establish scholarships for students of Ukrainian origin.

The scholarships will enable such students to work in the Department of Slavic Studies which now teaches primarily Russian.

Prof. L. I. Strakhovsky, Associate Professor of Slavic Studies, said last night:

"We do not as yet offer regular undergraduate courses in Ukrainian Language and Literature. We do offer one graduate course in Literature and a fourth year honor course in Literature.

"Our department is only seven years old and while we hope to eventually offer work in Yugoslavian, Czechoslovakian and Polish, we now must concentrate on Russian."

Describing the department itself, Prof. Strakhovsky said:

"This year we have 78 undergraduates studying Russian in some form or another. They come to the university with no previous knowledge of the language and by the fourth year of the honor course at least one subject, Russian poetry, is given in the Russian language."

Socialists Open Lecture Series

"A Socialist takes Stock," the first in the Fall lecture series—New Thoughts On Socialism—organized by the Ontario Woodsworth Memorial Foundation, will be held Wednesday, October 26 at 8 p.m. at Woodsworth House, 565 Jarvis St.

David Lewis, guest speaker, will discuss a nationalization program.

Women's "Own" Debated By Loretto, Skule

The right of women to their "own" will be debated today by teams representing Loretto College and Skule.

Sponsored by the Engineering Debates Club, the debate resolution will be:

"Resolved that woman has come into her own and does not deserve it."

Supporting the affirmative side of the question will be John Foulds and Al Walden while Mary Ann Flaherty and Betty Lounsbury will be their opponents.

The debate kicks off today at 1 p.m. in room 1033 of the Wallberg Building.

Engineering Debates Club president Jim Vasoff, said last night:

"There will be a discussion after the debate and we're sure the women will have a tough time defending their 'own' against the forensic onslaughts of these Skulemen."

Vasoff went on to say: "Women may not be allowed in Hart House debates, but we are glad to see them anytime, and particularly at debating time."

lost, stolen, or strayed

This engineering freshman is contemplating using the indestructible nylon-padded, concrete-embedded steel goalpost as a spring board for one of the celebrated Skule swan dives. The goal posts have since been abducted by Queens' fans, and replaced by wooden ones, which offer less of a challenge.

Travelling Goal Posts

Actually some attempt was made on the Western posts, the Toronto "spies" reported.

However Western took their posts inside the night before the game, and foiled an attack after the game by greasing the posts. Queen's students were equally unsuccessful in their efforts to locate the Varsity posts.

A Western Gazette editorial, entitled "Hold those posts" announced Western's intention to "fulfill our obligation to the battle-scarred posts and protect them from all barbarous invasions."

"It is to be hoped that no Western student will shirk his responsibility in this matter. Spiritless traitors are worse than thieves," the editorial concluded.

Western students have suggested that they may produce the goal posts at the Varsity-Western game, November 5, and present them to University of Toronto officials.

Toronto students are rumoured to be planning a counter-attack in an attempt to steal the posts before Western can parade them. However nothing definite has been heard as yet on this score.

No comment has been made yet by Toronto officials on the possibility of regaining their prized steel posts.

Kingston: The special train from Kingston to Toronto (for the Queen's-Varsity football weekend) may be cancelled next year, the Queen's Athletic Board has announced. Each year, fewer and fewer people are buying tickets for the train.

If the special train does make the trip, it will probably come up to Toronto in the morning and return late the same day.

Board officials speculated that perhaps more people are taking cars to Toronto, and for that reason fewer people are buying tickets on the special train.

Montreal: The dental faculty of McGill celebrates its fiftieth anniversary of teaching this year. A special convocation is being held to commemorate the occasion.

Vancouver: A five dollar per student levy may be continued for the next seven years at the University of British Columbia. A motion to that effect is being considered by the Alma Mater Society there. At present the levy money is being used to pay off the Memorial Gymnasium debt.

If the levy is passed, the money will be used to extend the Students' Union building by adding one or perhaps two new wings to it. Approximately $250,000 will be provided by the extension of the levy.

"The Student Union building should be the living room of the campus and open from early morning till ten or so at night," said the chairman of the extension committee.

Minneapolis, Minnesota: Married students at the University of Michigan are to be provided with a new, one million dollar housing project, the Minnesota Daily has announced.

Three billion dollars for new student housing facilities throughout the States will soon be needed, the Daily reported. They quoted the report of an official of the Federal Housing and Finance agency in New York.

Hamilton: Treasure Van arrives this week at McMaster University on its cross-country tour. It is expected to visit Toronto on a later stage of its journey.

Skule Grads Give Most Dough To Aid Us Starving Students As Alumni Fund Appeal Rises

A new appeal to the 62,000 graduates of this university has resulted in greatly increased loan and bursary funds for students, reported Col. Grier, Secretary of the University Alumni Association.

And from the figures he quoted, Engineers appear to be the most generous of all grads.

Col. Grier last year initiated a new appeal to the university's graduates in order to help fill the need on this campus for funds for student aid.

Col. Grier said "The Board of the Association became convinced of the reasonableness and expediency—and indeed of the human appeal—of seeking student aid from former students."

So the Association mailed out letters to an estimated 52,000 of the university's 62,000 living graduates.

When the returns came in the engineering grads had come through with over $13,000 of the total contributions of $22,000. Sixteen per cent of the SPS grads answered the appeal, the highest response of any faculty and college. They gave an average of $8.45 each.

The Medsman came through with a mere $1,500 — only 2% of the grads answering the appeal.

Agriculture and Veterinary grads had the poorest response of all—less than one per cent of the grads answered the request for student aid funds.

Lawyers appeared to be the most generous individually, for those Law grads who replied gave an average of $11.45 each to the fund—the highest average contribution.

From the Arts Colleges, the response of the UC grads was the best. Nearly 4% of them replied to the Alumni letter, giving an average contribution of $11.15. St. Mikes grads donated an average of $7.00; Vic $8.45, and Trinity $11.00.

Col. Grier stated that the funds received from each college or faculty graduates are separately recorded. Seventy per cent of each faculty or college's contribution goes to provide scholarships or bursaries in that particular faculty.

The other 30% is put into a special fund to be distributed among students of those faculties whose grads aren't so generous.

Thus SPS undergrads get as bursaries only $8,400 of the grads' contribution of $13,300. The rest went to beef up student aid funds at such places as Social Work, Education, and Household Science.

Help Alcoholics Regain Confidence Important Fact In "Disease" Cure

"The only requirement for membership in the Alcoholics Anonymous is the desire to stop drinking."

This statement was made by Mr. Ken Brooks last night to a group of students interested in social work. Mr. Brooks introduced himself as a former alcoholic who had been "on the wagon" for the eight years since he joined the Alcoholics Anonymous.

He began his talk with a description of alcoholism as he sees it—as a progressive disease which strikes people of all types. He said that just as men drink to gain poise and assurance, so continued drinking deprives them of these very things and leaves them with the choice of death or stopping entirely.

Mr. Brooks stated that the "A.A." doesn't set out to cure but to control, and attempts to teach its members to live one day at a time.

He said that a man who thinks won't drink, and that once he understands his disease he can have hope. From here the society help him to "take an inventory of himself" and to find a place for himself in the world.

At the present time the Alcoholics Anonymous has branches in almost every town or city on the continent, and within Toronto itself there are forty-five active groups.

Queen's Sold Out

"It's the Queen's Homecoming weekend," Mr. Gregory explained, "We just hadn't any idea there'd be such a demand."

Demand for tickets to football games in Kingston was never great, Mr. Gregory said, until last year. "We had about 400 students go down there last year," he said, "and that was a bit of a record—at least in the last few years."

Gregory said that Western and McGill seemed to be more popular as week-end spots for Toronto students than Kingston. He said that U. of T. fan support to the two cities often numbers up to 1,000 or over.

International Problems Arise From Legalism

Professor McWhinney of the School of Law said yesterday that the UN should accept the present bi-polar division of world power and work within this framework.

He was speaking to the International Relations Club on the topic "International Law and the Dilemma of Power."

The acceptance of this division as a fact would, he felt, end some of the problems of the UN today, including a membership which has not changed with changing world conditions (India is not represented on the Security Council, Germany and Japan are not represented at all).

Prof. McWhinney pointed out that on non-political problems the UN has accomplished a good deal: the international postal system, regulation of navigation and aviation and a general advance towards ensuring the rights of man.

To explain many of the differences in view-points between international lawyers of East and West, Professor McWhinney said that the earliest international agreements were made between the West European countries, and based on legal philosophies not entirely in sympathy with those of the Asiatic countries which have since come under their jurisdiction.

Similar differences can arise even between western countries. Prof. McWhinney cited the opposing views of Britain and the United States in the recognition of Red China.

The British have always felt duty-bound to recognize any formally established revolutionary government; whereas the United States has followed the policy of refusing to recognize any power gained by immoral means.

Prof. McWhinney studied at Harvard, Yale and the Hague; he has taught in the United States and in France, and is at present legal consultant to the Secretary General of the UN.

Engineers Abduct, Entertain Dents Cheerleaders For 9 Hours

After eight hours of "brain-washing" in the Skule Stores, two subdued Dents cheerleaders were returned last night to safety.

The girls, Barb Scott and Donna Cranswick, were kidnapped from a convertible at noon yesterday when taking part in a campaign for the forthcoming "Dentantics."

Their captors, some third year Engineers, interrupted their cries of "Yea Dents, Yea Antics" and swept them away in a Hillman, despite their "agonized looks" described by a spectator.

According to latest report received at 9.30 last night, the cheerleaders are in good shape despite various tortures (of which the Skule song played a prominent part), and there are no hard feelings on either side.

Offer Six Toronto Students Cornell Weekend Exchange

On the week-end of November 17-19 a group of six or more Toronto students will have an opportunity to participate in the annual exchange week-end with Cornell University in Ithaca, New York.

Cornell has invited groups of students from several Canadian universities to take part in panel discussions, lectures, a banquet and parties. The guests will be able to tour the campus and to attend regular classes there.

Said Doug Hubley, Publicity Director of the EAC Week-end Committee, "This is, in essence, a three-day course in American University Life."

Transportation, by car, will be subsidized by the EAC.

All students are eligible for the week-end. Application forms must be filled out at the SAC office by 5 p.m. Oct. 28.

SAC RAPS GAME CONDUCT

And The Goalposts Stood

Some of the fair young lads and lassies of the Queen's Pipe Band are seen in our own Varsity Stadium. Page 6 of this issue features a letter from the Athletic Association of the U. of T. regarding certain incidents occurring at recent Varsity games. —VSP By Stan Klosevych

Goalposts, Beerdrinking Current Council Topics

Student vandalism — including the goalpost affair — came under fire last night at the Students' Administrative Council meeting.

Matters moved onto an official plane as letters from President Sydney Smith and Athletic Association Secretary J. P. Loosemore were discussed.

The intriguing story of Varsity's goalposts started two nights before the Varsity-Queen's football game, when Queen's students invaded Varsity Stadium and left liberal evidence in red paint of their work.

After the game — won by Varsity 11-6 — Queen's students demolished a set of nylon-padded steel posts, which were set in six feet of concrete.

They had been thought to be indestructible, but the Kingston students upset this theory and spirited the booty away to Guelph by Canadian National Express.

Since then Western students have in turn stolen the prize and have the evidence hidden somewhere in London.

Meanwhile, the Principal of Queen's University, Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, has written to President Smith and confirmed that the matter had been placed in the hands of the Alma Mater Society — Queen's students' council — and that damages, amounting to well over $500, would be paid for.

Bottle throwing was also discussed. Students in the stands have been guilty of throwing empty bottles onto the playing field, it was stated. This was particularly noticeable at the McGill-Varsity game two weeks ago, council members said.

Two university policemen on duty at the game narrowly missed being hit by flying missiles. Cheerleaders also narrowly missed being hit by bottles thrown from the stands. One student at the Queen's-Varsity game was injured when struck in this manner, a council member reported.

President's Message

President Smith announced today that representations have been made to Queen's University with respect to the damage to the Varsity Stadium on the night of Thursday, October 6th, and the afternoon of Saturday, October 8th.

"The initial response of some of our students might be a desire to retaliate when the University of Toronto football team plays the Queen's University team in Kingston on October 29th," Dr. Smith said.

"However, I am confident that the members of this University recognize the fact that if they deface or destroy any building or other property in Kingston they merely set off a chain reaction of vandalism that may involve serious personal injuries as well as wanton destruction of property. There are times when restraint is the badge of good judgment and maturity."

Blue And White In The Black SAC'er Award, New Members All At Last Night's SAC Meet

After gasping a few times for a breath of air at the last Blue and White Dance, B & W Chairman Tom Thompson, III S.P.S., decided to sell 200 fewer tickets for all ensuing dances. This action, along with a better ventilation system, will undoubtedly aid in relieving conditions found at the last two dances at Hart House.

These dances were subject to complaint because along with Benny Louis and Bobby Gimby they featured heat and too many people. Blue and White Chairman Tom Thomson promises that all future dances will be absolutely complaint-proof.

MAN OF THE HOUR
The Big Four has its Bulova Player of the Week and now the Students' Administrative Council has its "SAC'er of the Week."

President Mike Shoemaker presented this week's award to Ted Sievenpiper, Arch. IV. The president complimented him on the fine job he did in obtaining the SAC Notice Board, which is to be erected shortly in front of the SAC office. Sievenpiper obtained without charge paint, concrete, plywood, and glass. Only steel and accessories remain to be purchased.

His award was appropriate — 12 miniature Dinky-toy street signs.

SAC ELECTIONS
Two newly-elected members of the Students' Administrative Council made their debut at last night's meeting. Gordon Purdy, from University College, and Miller Friesen, School of Social Work, won recent elections to fill vacant seats on the SAC.

Ted Schofield, St. Mike's representative, was elected chairman of NFCUS. The vacancy was caused by the resignation of the previous office-holder.

B & W MONEY

The financial status of the Blue and White Society was one of the highlights of last night's Finance Commission's report.

Murray Logan, III Law, in presenting the report stated that the present balance of approximately $1600 is one of the healthiest the Blue and White has had so early in the year for some time.

Later in the meeting, Tom Thompson, III SPS, Blue and White chairman, reported that, due to the great popularity of B & W Football Dances, two hundred fewer tickets will be sold to prevent congestion at future dances

Premarital Mysteries

By W. R. CHADWICK

Europe has often been called traditionalistic, stagnant and conservative, and in nothing are these accusations more true than in the realm of marriage and its prerequisites. After fifteen centuries, the European still seems to think that the annulus pronubus and the engagement ring are a sufficient passport to the altar steps, and for this reason, it might be as well to set down here some of the conventions as regards this subject which have been evolved by more progressive countries.

The most important pre-marital convention on the North American continent is something called "going steady". This, though it may, to the one track European mind, sound rather like an avowal to walk a straight line no matter what the amount of alcohol consumed, is, actually, an avowal of everlasting love. (On an average, "everlasting" signifies a period of time between two weeks and two years.)

Now the advantages of going steady are twofold. First, it is the prerogative of no particular age group, and it appears that one could, if one were sufficiently developed, go steady with the girl in the next pram without anyone frowning on the alliance. Secondly, to counteract any tendency this might have of producing child marriages, this state of steadiness has been made gloriously elastic; e.g., one can go very steady, reasonably steady, and quite unsteady.

Not having the necessary intuition inherent in his genes, the newcomer will have to rely on experience to discover whether some particular glamorous girl is dateable, coffeeable, or merely hulloable.

To give these love matches an air of pseudo-permanency and sophistication, without the degree of finality implied by an engagement ring, a series of subsidiary symbols has been evolved.

By far the most important of these is the fraternity pin, and "being pinned", painful though it may sound, is, in reality, tantamount to being engaged, and is thus accepted not only by the girl, but by her cronies also, with paroxysms of hysterical joy. Another spectre of spinstershood has been laid.

The fraternity pin is at the top of a hierarchy of symbols, a hierarchy which consists mainly of less significant pins, and also, of masses of rings which vary in emotional importance. There are college rings, family rings, high school rings, rings from packages of corn flakes, Woolworth's rings, public school rings, and so on. At the present time, this mania for love signs would seem to be increasing in the direction of favoring younger and younger age groups, so that the time can be envisaged when even the kindergarten child will be giving away his crayon as a token of affection, the one year old its diapers, the baby its bottle, and only the impossibility of the situation will prevent the embryo from giving its umbilical cord to a first foetal love.

Economic Talk By SocCrediter At Poli Ec Club

The Political Economy Club has invited Mr. S. R. Patterson, president of the Social Credit Association of Ontario, to speak on "Social Credit Economic Reform."

"As there is no Social Credit club on the campus, this will be one of our few opportunities to hear a concrete exposition of policies by a top man in the Party," said Bob Fenn, club president.

The meeting will be held in Room 151 of the Economics building at 4 p.m. today.

Student Zionist Organization on behalf of Professor Evenari, Acting President of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

The Jerusalem Bible, the first Hebrew Bible ever printed in Jerusalem, signifies, stated Professor Evenari that "a university is not something special to one country, one age in history, or one nation. It belongs to humanity, and is a uniting bond between nation and nation, country and country all over the globe. The Acting President concluded, "the Bible is in the deepest sense Jewish and universal at the same time."

The five students received the Bible while in Israel this past summer.

The students went to Israel during the summer to work and study in the new Jewish homeland.

"Cheating" Investigated At Cornell

Ithaca, New York (Exchange): The state of academic integrity for cheating on Cornell's campus is being considered now by the Cornell student council. The executive committee of the Council has decided that the problem should be investigated.

The feasibility of establishing an honor code is also being considered. It has been suggested that a committee, composed of faculty, administration, and students, be formed.

All this discussion arose because, in 1952, an Education Committee's survey revealed that 47% of the students cheated.

The School of Civil Engineering at Cornell has been working under a successful honor system for about 48 years. Each freshman signs a pledge stating that he will neither give nor receive information (this applies to homework, as well as exams). The teachers found it necessary that they should define cheating.

In the Engineering School, those who are found cheating, by either staff or students, are warned before the violation is reported to the committee. The committee is composed of two members of each class. About one case comes before them each year.

Two graduate schools at Cornell, Law and Veterinary, also use honor systems.

The six Toronto students who will visit Cornell on a weekend exchange should be able to judge for themselves how well the system works.

RES NATURAL

Fizziology and the Biochemist

By FRED KAHAN

It seems axiomatic to the scientist that to know a process completely one must be able to measure all its components.

Yet living processes have resisted this approach in the past, so much so that many psychologists and qualitative biologists despair of ever getting the same result twice. Often the conclusion is made that life will never yield its secrets to the orthodox methods of analysis. However, developments in the past few decades in the field of biochemistry have shown the error in the above conclusion. If, for example, we want to know how the Arbor Room Hurley-Burley-Wurlitzer works, no end of inserted coins will produce no end of noise, and it is only when a screwdriver enters the attack, that the inner secrets of the monster are revealed (and with luck, an essential part having rolled down an open drain, the machine will stop). In a like manner the biochemist cuts and grinds, dissolves and boils the literal "living daylight" out of his specimen until the chemical cogs of the living process are revealed in his test tube.

The study of biochemistry was initiated and is even today stimulated by that frothy industry closest to the stomach of this university's practical scientist, the breweries. They have made their money's worth from the biochemical activities of the tiny yeast which turns sugar into a bubbly alcohol.

Pasteur, the greatest chemist and bacteriologist in those early years, maintained, as do many today who should know better, that "the chemical act of fermentation was correlated with a vital act and required continued life of the cells involved."

It was, then, a golden day for Biochemistry, when the Buchner brothers around 1900 discovered that the juice of squashed and filtered yeasts would ferment sugar equally well. Fermentation became a function of definite extractable chemicals, so that today a co-operating group of 12 complex chemicals known as enzymes (from the Greek for "in yeast") have been isolated as crystals, the chemist's dream of perfection, which in solution in a test tube will ferment sugar to alcohol (at something like one million times the cost of alcohol—the way Ma Nature makes it).

It may be said, for the benefit of staunch nationalists and John Fisher fans, that Canada played a part in the study of enzymes as early as 1830 (before O'Keefe's started brewing). This took place in a rather bizarre fashion when Alexis St. Martin, a French-Canadian woodsman acquired from a shot-gun wound a neat hole connecting his stomach with the outside air. From this gastric grotto juices containing digestive enzymes which split up complex foods were obtained and studied.

Today well over 50 enzymes have been crystallized and many more have been isolated by their activities.

For an example of the properties of enzymes, we may now turn to a potable of somewhat greater propriety than beer, namely ginger ale. Ginger ale, for all its innocence, represents a condition found in a more dilute form in our blood—namely a solution of the gas, carbon dioxide. An enzyme—carbonic anhydrase—which was crystallized in 1943 at Toronto, present in the red blood corpuscles, accelerates tremendously the removal of carbon dioxide, the body's main waste product. The enzyme is, like all others, a protein about 50,000 times larger than water and containing, oddly enough, the metal (and not the kitchen) zinc.

We have made the following devious calculations: the average human contains approximately 1/100 of an ounce of this enzyme, yet one ounce of this enzyme can defizz almost explosively, 250 gallons of cold ginger ale, in one minute. Yet one quart of this ginger ale would lose its fizz in about 24 hours in the absence of enzymes, according to the ads

In an age when every worldly trend seems to conspire against the traditional freedoms of the university, it is heartening to find a President who has the courage and the initiative to fight for those inalienable rights which must be guarded if the word "university" is to mean anything.

The controversy of the past two weeks over the Hart House Orchestra Associates is a demonstrable case in point: it is appalling to think that in an age we look upon as "modern" there can exist a law which professes to uphold the sanctity of Sunday while allowing the ball parks to be thrown open and compelling the concert halls to shut up their doors. The thing is preposterous; it is the sort of ludicrous legislation we should expect from madmen under the delusion that in order to get one effect they must legislate in favour of its opposite.

The fact that a pressure group like the Lord's Day Alliance could force the cancellation of music on Sundays within the university itself, is only that much more shocking and abominable. As Dr. Neel pointed out, the trend is dangerous.

The action of Dr. Smith in personally meeting this situation is therefore highly commendable and deserves highest praise. Indeed it might be said that had it not been for Dr. Smith, the concert series would not now be reinstated. But the President's stand, we hope, will be only the beginning. We hope and trust that the Board of Governors of the University will fully exercise their not inconsiderable influence in having this obsolete and senseless Act amended.

—M. P.

no bogey here

There has been a lot said about the Hart House Orchestra Concerts and a lot said about the Lord's Day Alliance. But one thing more must be said. The controversy was no "bogey."

In the first place, the cancellation of the concerts was made necessary by the stand of the Alliance, who at that time, showed no intention of being willing to reconsider the case, even with changes in projected plans.

In the second place, the concerts would, in all probability, not now be possible if it had not been for the concerted student and public protest.

And in the third place, the law is now most definitely outdated, much as it may have served the purpose of 1906.

OUR READERS WRITE:

UN Morality Revisited

The Editor,

I should like to thank Mr. Cowan for his interesting criticism of my letter on the UN. His glittering collection of non sequiturs and irrelevancies more than makes up in picturesqueness what it lacks in coherence. However he apparently misses the point of both the argument from morality, which is irrefragable, and that from practicality, or common sense, which is no less cogent.

Here are the arguments briefly:

1) It is the UN's own charter which demands the expulsion of Russia and the preclusion of Red China, and it is precisely its failure to live up to this code which constitutes its utter abandonment of moral principle. How can the UN gain the respect of the world if it cannot even obey its own law — the UN charter?

2) Almost every aspect of the UN redounds to the advantage of Russia and to the disadvantage of the West. The UN provides Russia with a matchless propaganda weapon, a key base for the dissemination of subversives in North America, and the almost unbelievable advantage of not only sitting in on the formulation of its opponents' plans, but of also possessing the power to reject them. In return the free nations find themselves thwarted at every turn in the quest for peace, and sometimes even used as a tool of the Russians (as was the case when the UN tried to stop the anti-Communist movement in Guatemala, which would still be Communist if the insurgents had not defied the attempt.)

So why keep Russia in the UN? If it is "narrow-minded" to believe in excluding the world's greatest collection of war-mongers from an organization dedicated to peace, then "narrow-mindedness" has been equated with morality.

If this is the case, give me my South Sea island.

John Leo,
III St. Mike's

Morality? Whose Morality?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

UN day has come and gone and, much to my astonishment, has actually evoked a comment on that now venerable and catholic organization, the United Nations. (Morality Needed in UN).

The statement, apart from being misguided and inappropriate, was one of criticism, as is usually the case when issued by one of the righteous-minded natives round about here. Come, come, let's bring the issue closer to home. Morality is neither here nor there as far as Russia is concerned. Scrutinize Canada's moral position as you did Russia's with your discerning eye. Consider how comfortably she sits in her chair in the UN General Assembly without any fear of expulsion.

Why should she fear it? Does Canada not contribute 3.30% of the total budget of the UN? Has she not also donated, and at a further considerable expense, no doubt, two bronze doors to the New York building? Outside the UN $26 million goes annually to Colombo plan.

Yet these two amounts are only a drop in the bucket. They do not even come close to a realistic approach in solving the problems of under developed areas. The peoples of the world are approximately divided into half whole and half ill, half prosperous and half destitute, half stuffed and half starved.

Yet Canada with her tremendous surplus of food chooses to reduce it through trade agreements with Russia of all countries.

What's all this balderdash about morality?

Tear away the mask of hypocrisy and reflect on the contrast that we in Canada (all bow and scrape) are wallowing in wealth while the other half of the world starves in squalor. There is sound reasoning in Mr. Leo's last statement:

"The futility of the UN today is proof that in the quest for peace, money and goodwill will not suffice without morality and common sense."

The futility is due to tightwad, penny-pinching nations like Canada, which thinks enough of itself to lay out $2,500,000,000 annually on armaments, and yet can quiet any qualms of conscience over its status as God's most favoured nation on earth with a mere $26 million to other less-fortunate peoples.

Morality? Bah, humbug.

No Thought

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I understand that you are to be censured by the Medical Society Representative at the S.A.C. meeting this Wednesday. This apparently was due to your failure to report accurately an article on the annual conference of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes, an article referred to you by this writer.

The material was given to me by phone and I was obliged to phone the story to The Varsity office. The necessity to phone the story and my attempt to explain the rather confusing details of the statement resulted in what appeared to be inaccurate reporting. I regret that I did not give you the material in writing so that this incident would have been avoided.

I trust that you will not regard the censure motion as representative of Medical Student opinion. It merely reflects the tendency of Medical Society Assembly members to vote on anything without thinking.

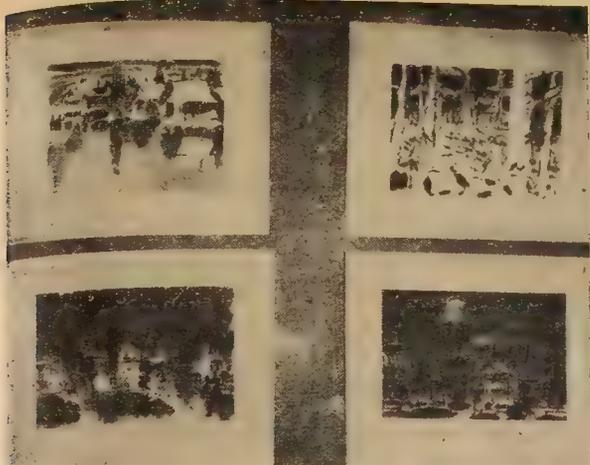

Yours sincerely,

Al Davidson,

Milne

The Hart House Art Gallery had a preview last year of the David B. Milne show now at the Art Gallery of Toronto. The smaller show could show only samples. Pieces which seemed to have a remarkable individuality now appear as part of a larger phase, in this retrospective show which crowds out into the corridors.

However, every present product of the long and prolific career of this distinctive Canadian artist is distinctly "Milne," even the earliest exhibit, a street scene from New York. There are many qualities in common. There is a spontaneity which often reveals itself in uncovered areas of canvas. There is a constant feeling of the medium . . . when he paints in oils he uses blobs of paint without disguise; in water colours it is the wetness of the paper or the dryness of the brush.

For the most part Milne depends on a few co-operating colours without the usual effect of blending or shading. However, the colour does not remain in blocks; it is put into action by dry brush. Milne's remarkable use of quantities of black and white may be part of his policy of not using intermediate colours. The emotional quality of his brushwork could profitably be compared with that of Van Gogh, his colours perhaps with that of Vlaminck.

Milne is an available painter because he works with natural forms. But he is by no means a naturalist, especially in colour. That is one of the elements which make the present show so absorbing, from the early mured oils to the strange and beautiful watercolours that absorbed the last ten years of his life. The show remains at the Gallery until November 20. Student admission is free.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Valk's Othello - and Crest's

The current production of Othello at the Crest, starring Frederick Valk, is extremely illuminating. It raises many questions in this reviewer's mind.

The first would run something like this: Is it a good idea to introduce stars into a repertory theatre? However good the star, won't his style of acting clash with that of the other actors?

Valk's conception of Othello was, for me, a revelation. I compared it with Orson Welles' interpretation of the same role (in London, several years ago) and found that I infinitely preferred Valk's. Where Welles had been restrained, Valk was elemental and passionate — but this is where my first question raises its head.

The rest of the cast gave the impression of being an integrated unit with a common style of acting, within the Anglo-Saxon tradition of understatement. Moreover, most of them have been together for more than two years and each has the feel of the others' interpretations.

Frederick Valk, on the other hand, fine actor though he is, is very much a lone wolf. He has built up a fine reputation for himself in Europe and is continuing that reputation in Canada. In the present production of Othello, however, I felt that this was Valk playing Shylock playing Othello. It was magnificent to watch and I was not just a watcher. I found myself personally involved in the Moor's tragedy, even though Valk did not give the part a sense of development.

In the first two acts he was very much the noble general in the service of the Venetian state. In act three he suddenly became a raging torrent, an elemental storm. One could appreciate his interpretation provided one was not looking for the integrated style of an Old Vic or a Comedie Francaise.

The rest of the cast were a unit and seemed to have taken Basil Coleman's direction with more ease. Murray Davis's Iago was an interesting conception, although how much of that conception was Davis's and how much Coleman's I could not say. Iago was presented as a kind of anti-chorus, a negative commentator on events who was not content to let events take their course. One was very much aware of Iago pulling the strings and watching the puppets dance to his rhythm.

I found Diana Vandervlis in the role of Desdemona disappointing. She reminded me of Jean Simmons with Grace Kelly's facial structure. Her costume and movements did not suggest a high-born Venetian girl caught in the grip of elemental passions. She seemed a rather prim middle-class maiden out of a painting by one of the North German masters of the Renaissance.

Barbara Chilcott as Emilia, Iago's wife, was much more satisfactory. She seemed to catch just the right blend of impishness, womanly maturity, and naive innocence of her husband's evil demanded by the role.

Deborah Cass as Cassio's mistress, Bianca, was adorable. But this small part is not very demanding. Her Turkish costume, complete with trousers, helped her to play the part of "strumpet" almost to perfection.

John Wilson's set was Elizabethan in its use of a forestage and admirably conveyed a feeling of Mediterranean open air with attendant passions. But its Gothic richness seemed to clash with Clarence Wilson's costumes which admirably conveyed the atmosphere of the Venetian Renaissance, with one exception.

Venetian retainers and guards may very well have worn tight-fitting black costumes, but this critic was reminded more of George Orwell's 1984 than of Venice.

The sound effects were on the whole good, but I do wish we could get away from the convention of using a drum to give us a sense of impending doom.

PANTON IN HART HOUSE

art review

Aldous Huxley summed up the distinctive quality of El Greco's backgrounds in one word. The word: "Visceral." It might be hard to find a mot more just for the painting of the late L. A. C. Panton. Panton's present exhibit in Hart House is made up of landscapes, some from easily recognizable worlds, some from the phantom worlds, even more incredible, of a highly competent dreamer. All share the oily copalence of moist peritoneum, and the firm, glistening rotundity of a fresh kidney. Without going into which rocks are liver-like and which trees pancreatic, let us simply say that Panton's work has an organic unity.

We like it. There is something terribly inviting about Panton's landscapes. The technics are modern, but the approach is that of the old romantics, whose endlessly receding rocks, rivers and trees beckon the observer to jump into a canoe and float off into their haunted distances forever. So Panton's desolate lands beckon us to go leaping (or slithering) from rock to rock, or diving and splashing in the ghostly waters of their pools.

The small print room contains another series of prints by the Ontario College of Art's Fred Hagan. This series is an interesting collection of ideas about ladders. The harsh forms and grisly colours are ideally suited to Mr. Hagan's grim view of his subject matter: humanity. At first, there seems a striking contradiction between Hagan's shrill social protest, and Panton's contemplative, almost mystical silences. But the apparent difference may be explained by one fact; all of Hagan's pictures concern people. All Panton's are mercifully, blessedly deserted.

French Club's "Hotel Des Neiges"

"Hotel des Neiges" by Robert Essay will be the annual dramatic presentation of the UC French Club for this year. The play, a comedy of marriage and circumstances, will be presented on Tuesday, November 8 in Hart House theatre.

Professor Parsons of the UC French staff will be directing the play. Last year he directed "Le Barbier de Seville" which was well received.

Marion Hogarth, UC Moderns grad, scholarship student will play Evelyne, the young heroine. Miss Hogarth has taken leading roles previously in French club productions and has been in France studying since her graduation.

The plot consists of the hero's efforts to attract and win Evelyne, a married woman. Being a French play, anything can happen.

Fred Burke plays Philippe, the hero, Adrienne Hunter, Marguerite, a middle-aged companion to Evelyne, and Fred Ward and Dave Jessell play different servants.

The playwright, Boissy, was considered promising, but died early.

U of T Athletic Directorate Appeals To Students

Mr. E. A. Macdonald,
General Secretary-Treasurer,
Students' Administrative Council.
Dear Mr. Macdonald:

The Athletic Directorate is becoming increasingly concerned over the attitude and conduct of our own students at Intercollegiate football games, and the matter has been discussed at length on various occasions during the past two years.

The destruction of the steel goal posts after the Queen's game can be attributed to visiting Queen's students beyond any doubt, but the breaking down of the substitute wooden set at the north end after the McGill game last Saturday can hardly be blamed on McGill. Only 88 tickets were sold at McGill for that game and from the account of observers, Varsity students, mainly engineers, were conspicuous in the senseless and dangerous pastime of knocking down heavy 4" x 4" uprights with obvious danger to spectators leaving the grounds via the field.

The fact is that city police on duty at our games refuse to make any attempt to stop such student rampages because of incidents in the past when police actually have been manhandled by such overwhelming numbers that defence by the police has been impossible and arrest of ringleaders impractical. As a consequence, students now apparently feel that they have carte blanche to behave as they wish and destroy University property at will.

I have in front of me a report from the Chief of University Police dealing with another serious violation of the rules of good conduct, safety and good taste. At last Saturday's game a number of empty liquor bottles were thrown from the student section to the playing area, one bottle narrowly missing two of the police force who had their backs to the stands. It needs no imagination to envisage what might happen if a man were to be hit on the head by such a missile. While drinking in the stands is extremely difficult to control, such dangerous practices as hurling empty bottles must be curbed in one way or another.

We all enjoy the fun and festivity at football games, and the Blue and White Society and the Varsity Band deserve the utmost credit for the wonderful show they provide with its good effect senseless and dangerous pastime upon the morale of team and spectators alike. It is the foolish exhibitionism of a small minority of the student body which is in danger of overshadowing the good natured fun of the majority of our students who attend the games.

To conclude, strong-arm methods are not the answer. My own opinion is that only an appeal through the columns of The Varsity to the common sense of all right-thinking students, backed up by editorials to the same effect, will produce results. It seems to me that this is a matter which might be taken up seriously by the Students' Administrative Council and the weight of student opinion brought to bear against such violations of decent behavior.

Yours sincerely,
J. P. Loosmore,
Secretary.

BY ADAM

One hot summer night this year, a university lecturer was conducting an anthropological experiment with his girl friend on the grassy slopes of Philosopher's Walk. Deeply concentrated upon his slides, same lecturer with same subject did not notice the noisy approach of one of Toronto's Finest. Quickly a light was flashing revealing. Up jumped the lecturer spluttering explanations while same subject revitalized her garmenture. But the gendarme, perplexed and embarrassed, just bellowed, "I'm sorry, Bud, I thought you was two guys."

Sure I understand that this is a benevolent university for book-worms and not bicep benders, but was it not Plato who in his Secularian Republic stressed the importance of the city guardians who were selected after a rigorous training of properly blended physical and spiritual elements.

If we expect the honour of this ivy entangled city block to be well protected from the onslaughts of those savage college tribes to the east and west of us, should we not encourage our loyal guardians to greater heights of valour and imaginative physical endeavour by stimulating their fagositates with some real cool cash athletic scholarships.

Such peace-of-mind producing rewards will give greater time to the worthy to concentrate upon the further development of his spiritual and physical talents.

As we all know fees, rent and food are grotesquely expensive in Toronto and such University Honour defending measures such as football take over 25 hrs. a week of our guardians' time. Some of our loyal, patient warriors are even driven into the outer desert of this campus to earn money in order to keep up their education. How shoddy is out treatment of our guardian soldiers.

One day I asked an acquaintance of mine when I was in his room whose walls were covered with Varga, Petty, Esquires etc. girls, when was the last time he took out a co-ed. "What," he yelled, "Look at them pitchcoors! When co-eds look like that then I'll take them out. Me I stick with the boys."

He wasn't kidding. The men take out the girls . . . And naturally, ladies, this sparkling youth was a spiritual, intellectual, physical Adonis.

Skule, Loretto Debate Equal Rights Decision - Women Don't Deserve 'Em

The complaint that "women want equal rights with men, as well as their seats on street-cars" was voiced at a debate between Loretto College and Skulemen yesterday.

Sponsored by the Engineering Debates Club, the debate discussed the resolution:

"Resolved that woman has come into her own and does not deserve it."

Affirming the resolution, John Foulds (SPS III) held that women were of "inferior intellectual power" and would never achieve fame like Einstein or Shakespeare. "Women were 'slightly crooked in business matters' he maintained, concluding that 'in regard to sweaters woman has come into more than her own.'"

Denying that women are "inferior to men," Mary Anne Flaherty (SMC III), asserted that "the majority of men at Varsity took two years to get their senior matric, whereas women took only one year." It is woman's moment in history, she maintained, and quoted from Greek philosophy to prove her point, "Plato," she said, "says women are just as capable of running things as men."

Al Walder (SPS IV) said that women want equal rights with men, as well as their seats on street cars. Women drivers, he added, were a menace to society. Though women have the privilege of a vote, they do not make sensible or considered choices. "Juvenile delinquency is caused," he said, "because women leave homes. If motherhood is forgotten, the human race may disappear."

"Women have a higher regard for human feelings, and excel in social work," maintained Betty Lounsbury, (Gen. II). "What man would not prefer a female nurse?"

The vote taken at the end of the debate resulted in: Ayes 43, Noes 23.

HH Record Hour Is This Afternoon

Basit Rathbone will be heard reading "Selections from Edgar Allan Poe," at 1:10 today, when the Hart House Library Committee holds its first record hour.

The recital will be held in the Record Room, from 1:10 to 2:00 p.m.

Officially opened on April 7, 1948, the Hart House Record Room had its origin in a refusal by the Carnegie Foundation to supply a record player and record collection. The foundation refused the grant, because, as it pointed out, women would not be able to listen to the records.

The Hart House Music Committee then decided to build up its own collection. Records were bought, using special funds set aside by the Music Committee, and a part of the proceeds of the Hart House Fall Dance of 1947, donated by the House Committee.

Completing the equipment is a high-fidelity amplifier, and a special turntable made by the Micro-Engineering Company. The two loudspeakers are housed in a cabinet, made by Mr. Charles Haley of the University carpenter shop, who did much of the woodwork in the Great Hall, Music Room and Library.

Instructions on the use of the player and the room are given every Thursday at 5:15 p.m. Members who have received instructions may use the player after signing for the key at the Hall Porter's desk.

SHARE Banquet Has UN Delegate - And McCully

A popular speaker at the SHARE banquet, Nov. 14, will be Warden McCully of Hart House.

Rev. Fr. Jerome D'Souza, Indian delegate to the UN will be the main speaker. He will speak on a controversial Asian topic, as yet undisclosed.

Tickets for this banquet, limited to 300, are $1 each. They may be purchased at the SAC office or from faculty EAC Reps.

The SHARE campaign, which will run from Nov. 7 to Nov. 18 has as its goal $10,000, $1 from each student.

RCI Lectures Begin Saturday Nuclear Power Is First Topic

Lantern slides in color will illustrate a talk on "Canada's First Nuclear Power Plant," the inaugural lecture of the 107th session of the Royal Canadian Institute.

The lecture will be held in Convocation Hall at 8:15 p.m. on Saturday, and is open to students and members of the public. It is the first of this year's series of Saturday evening popular lectures, arranged by the Institute to promote interest in the sciences.

The speaker will be Dr. Richard L. Hearn, well-known as chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. Dr. Hearn will review developments that have taken place since the discovery of electricity and will refer to the decision last March to build an experimental nuclear power plant in Ontario.

Dr. Hearn has been associated with the Hydro-Electric Commission for forty years. In 1947 he was appointed General Manager and Chief Engineer, and in 1955 he became Chairman. Since joining the Hydro he has played a leading role in the Commission's power expansion programme. Lately he has applied his experience to studies of the future possibilities of producing electrical energy from atomic sources.

He has received professional recognition on many occasions for his contribution to Ontario's

Hydro enterprises and to the Canadian engineering field. In 1952 he received an honorary D. Eng. from the University of Toronto, and four years ago his abilities were signally marked when the Commission's Richard L. Hearn Generating Station, Canada's largest fuel-electric power plant was named in his honor.

Last year he received the 1954 Julian C. Smith Medal, which is one of the most coveted Canadian engineering honors.

Ex-warden Back

Mr. J. B. Bickersteth, the second warden of Hart House, from 1921 to 1947, will return to Toronto today.

The former warden visited Hart House last month before leaving for a tour of western Canada.

Next Tuesday evening Mr. Bickersteth will address the Hart House Library Evening on "Medieval Canterbury."

Mr. Bickersteth will be the guest of honour at several dinners in Toronto before returning to his home in Coventry, Warwickshire, later in the year.

Trade Union Boots Made To Size Vote Hart House Debaters 44-35 Steelworker Union Director Visits

By a vote of 44 to 35 the debaters at Hart House last night defeated the motion "Trade Unions are big for their boots."

Mr. C. H. Millard, National Director, United Steelworkers of America, was Honorary Visitor at the debate. Speaking for the noes, he said, "I would suggest that unions have not grown big enough for their boots. We have now witnessed the creation of the largest corporation in the history of man. How would weak and inefficient unions cope with the power in the hands of a few individuals?"

"Unions are only designed to meet the situation with which they are confronted," said Mr. Millard, "There is a challenge to day and we have not up to this time found an answer. What labor is after is guaranteed access to work. We ask those who ridicule the "guaranteed annual wage" what is the answer to this if it is not?"

He said, "Unions are not opposed to automation, but we see in that an increasing problem. It requires strong, well-informed and responsible trade unions."

Peter Marsh, II Trinity, calling for a "ringing affirmation of the resolution," said that business is by no means as organized as unions today. "We are faced with the emergence of one super union which is shaking the big stick and which no one dares oppose."

"Great unions should be equally responsible to society just as management. They cannot be sued. If they cannot be sued, they are irresponsible."

Marsh continued, "Right now unions' responsibilities are completely out of proportion to their privileges. Unions' irresponsibility is breeding complete indifference to the welfare of mankind."

Alan Borovoy, III Law, said for the noes, "Unions have won what they have for the workers of this country because they were big enough to do it. If they were smaller, they would have won less."

Commenting on the "guaranteed annual wage," he said, "Very few proposals on the contemporary scene have been as securely constructed and well planned."

"The guaranteed annual wage will turn out to be nothing but guaranteed gold-bricking," said Clyde Batten, III UC, the second speaker for the motion, "The trade union has reached the stage of the Lord's Day Alliance. The trade union movement has outstepped its bounds."

He contended that the trade union movement had gone so far in compelling workers to support the movement that it had lost sight of its social goals. Batten said that instead of the robber barons of big business we now had the robber barons of the little man, who are extracting from employers as much as they can.

Harry Arthurs, I Law, the fourth speaker, said, "The ayes would have us believe that might is right on the side of management, but not labor."

Slowly unwrapping a bronze baby's boot, Arthurs said it was the one the ayes wished the unions to wear. "A 1912 boot for a one year old. It is one which would only fit a weak and ineffectual union."

Double Masquerade

Here a Masquerading Co-Ed looks at herself in the mirror to see if she's spruced up enough to go to this Friday night's HART HOUSE MASQUERADE DANCE. And from the looks of her, she's all set to take one of the 200 silver dollars that will be given away to the first 200 couples arriving in costume. Tickets — $2.50 — are still available in Hart House.

Goalposts —

The incidence of drinking at games has apparently increased. A reporter, seated near such a group at the McGill game, stated that the noise made by the carousing beer-drinkers at times drowned out the public address system and generally made things unpleasant for other spectators who had come to see a football game, and not to be entertained by a "bunch of adolescent rowdies."

A very intoxicated student at the Queen's game, according to this same source, made a nuisance of himself tumbling over spectators and down the aisles. His language, dress and state in general would undoubtedly result in serious charges being laid for similar actions in a less inaccessible place, the student said.

The letters from the president and from Mr. Loosemore condemned such outbursts and appealed for more mature behaviour and the cessation of hooliganism.

The SAC concurred with statements and sentiments in both letters and condemned bottle throwing, the destruction of goalposts and vandalism generally.

The danger to spectators was stressed both in the letters and by speakers at the meeting.

CUP Runneth Over

Montreal: Blood is running freely at McGill this week. The seventh annual corpse drive is on, with two thousand pints of the red stuff as the objective.

Ottawa: The engineers at Carleton College created quite a stir by asking the Club's Policy Committee for one hundred dollars. The slide-rule boys were turned down, and the reason given was a dilly—the engineers had objected to a fifty dollar grant which the council gave to the Arts Undergraduate Society last year.

Morgantown, West Virginia: The Daily Athenaeum of West Virginia University, proudly displays the following caption on one of its articles; "Enrolment at 'U' includes students from 55 countries." That would be quite a feat, but the following story is a little more realistic. None of the students were even from outside the state. Someone had merely inserted the letter 'r' in the word 'countries'.

The girls have also been criticized for reading, writing, filing fingernails and doing crossword puzzles during the meetings.

Talk about world-wide coverage! Thumbing through our C.U.P. files, we find newspapers and periodicals from such remote spots as Malaya, Korea, Japan, and Romania. The pride of our crowded coffers is a well written monthly entitled "The K.P. Telescope." The K.P. stands for Kingston Penitentiary.

"Toronto Most Important" - NFCUS Ontario President

Gary Keyes (McMaster), regional president of NFCUS for Ontario congratulated Toronto's SAC on its particularly keen interest in the national university organization.

Speaking at the SAC meeting last night he said, "You are the most important people in NFCUS. Without the initiative and stimulation of individual student councils," he said, "NFCUS would not be successful." He went on to say that local committees are the "servants" of the organization as they do the majority of work and deserve a great deal of credit.

"The basic philosophy of NFCUS," he stated, "is to achieve concrete benefits for students." In his opinion, "the main objective for the present is to secure Federal Government aid for university students across Canada.

Last night's speech was one of a series Keyes is making to student councils of universities in Ontario. He said he hopes this will be an aid in furthering interest in NFCUS.

Juke Box Gets Applause, Boos QUEEN'S TRIES DRUNKS

Box Brings Battle

Here students show a mixed reaction to the installed for over a year now, has been the subject now-famed Arbor Room Juke Box. The Juke Box, of hot controversy. —VSP by Paul Kyselka

31 Say No - 20 Yes

Should The Juke Box Go?

Should the juke box be removed from the Arbor Room?

"No!" say 31 out of 51 male and female students here.

One student, Dave Watson, a second-year Engineering student wanted a little more. Said he: "It goes along with the atmosphere of the Arbor Room, its social and co-ed nature.

"But why don't they try having dancing here in The Arbor Room after three o'clock a couple of times a week to give people a chance to get to know each other?"

In a move to tap campus opinion on the juke box. The Varsity yesterday sent reporters Joyce Button and Keith Spicer on a fact-finding search which turned up among others, such diverse statements as:

"It gives you a lift when you come in tired after lectures," . . . and (from a professor).

"I think an axe should be taken to the thing!"

Rumour had it last week that members of the house committee of Hart House were contemplating having the machine removed from the Arbor Room, the co-educational coffee shop in Hart House (from 3 p.m. on).

Some views expressed in the survey were:

"Leave it, but bring down the price and the volume," said Ian Hunter, a third-year Engineering student.

"Take it out! An obstruction to the eye and a deterrent to conversation."

Mal Marshall, III UC
Mar Tucker, II UC
"Dreadful! Music in the raw."

R. Morrow, III UC
"I despise the thing. I pull the plug at every opportunity."

Stan Shift, III Law
"It must go . . . too noisy."

Bill Wilson, IV Trin.
"It ought to be tossed out because the music is loud and noisy."

Joe Ramsey, IV Psych.

"A pleasant diversion . . . provides a more relaxed atmosphere."

Celia Shachter, III Arts
"Leave it as long as they uphold the standards of the music and install a device whereby no record can be played more than once in any half hour."

Jerry Giblo, III Dents.
"It should be even louder. You can't hear it half the time. But reduce the price—we're students."

Bob Allen, I PHE
"It'd be an ideal place for the tea dances . . . how about a bar?"

Ted Lotocki, I PHE
"We are definitely in favour of the juke box if the louder and more rhythmic tunes are suppressed to the extent where a coffee cup does not vibrate by itself. Who likes to drink coffee to a strong 'blues' beat? It is most disturbing, as the general tendency is to rock the cup in time to the music (?); an action which stirs up the sediment and that doesn't taste good."

"A possible solution is the installation of more speakers so that those sitting next to the machine need not turn their hearing-aids completely off."

Ralph Jones, Dave Oakes, II SPS
"Leave it. But it needs more volume controls, turn up the volume, I can't hear a thing."

Bill Stegges, IV SPS
"Leave it? If they play Vivaldi and Gregorian chants, yes!"

Joe Grimaldi, IV St. M.
"I can't hear myself think when I'm talking to someone else."

P. H. Walton, IV Art & Arch.
"It completely inhibits conversation."

G. S., IV Arts
"Remove it? Yes, the Arbor Room should be returned to its original function as the Hart House Billiard Room. Co-educational if necessary but definitely return the room to its old place of high esteem."

Art Swanson, III Vic.
"Remove it. It is a capitalistic money-making scheme, a one-slot bandit determined to rob the helpless student of his last nickel. Besides, it renders quiet conversation virtually impossible."

Carl Anderson, III UC

Student Court Trial Decrees Expulsions Of Queen's Students

Four Queen's students this week voluntarily identified themselves as participants in a party raid and face possible expulsion as a result.

In a long-distance phone call to Queen's University last night it was learned their trial was part of a concerted attempt by the Alma Mater Society to stamp out drunken party raids which have been a regular autumn feature on that campus.

After a raid held a month ago a single student was identified as one of the participants. Previous to his trial by the student court on Thursday, the chief Justice asked that others involved identify themselves and stand trial beside him. Four responded to the request and pleaded guilty to a charge of drunkenness and entering a women's residence forcibly.

The students are reported to have handled their defence "extremely well" and asked for consideration on the grounds that they were intoxicated and unaware of the seriousness of the offence. Before a jammed courtroom they submitted a formal apology.

Following their trial, the Alma Mater Society Court made four recommendations:

(1) That due to the seriousness of the offence, the sentence should be expulsion from the university for one year.

(2) Furthermore, that they be fined for damage resulting from a number of broken windows and that court costs be levied.

(3) That this sentence be written into the records as the penalty for all such offences in the future.

(4) That following payment of costs and fines, the expulsion sentence be suspended on the understanding that it could be reinstated at any time during the students' university career.

However, recommendations made by the student court are subject to ratification by the University Senate. The recommendation that the expulsion sentence be suspended is by no means a guarantee that the students involved will be able to continue their studies. Their final fate has yet to be determined.

A further issue is at stake in the case described in a Queen's Journal editorial, as "one of the most serious to come up in recent years." Students here are looking at the Senate's action as a test of confidence in student government.

"And the attitude of the university senate toward the recommendations of the court," the editorial said, "will indicate whether or not the university retains its faith in the ability of the students to govern themselves."

UWO Students Find Baby Left In Parked Car

London, Ont. (CUP)—A week-old abandoned baby girl was what two University of Western Ontario students found here last night when they returned to their car following a dance. The two students also found a parking ticket on the windshield.

A police officer, who tabbed the car for illegal parking, said he didn't see the baby in the car when he was making out the ticket.

But when Barry Pless and Joe Rotman, on their way from a dance at Victoria hospital nurses' residence, arrived in the wee small hours, the infant was plumb in the middle of the back seat, snuggled in a wicker clothes basket and wrapped warmly in blankets.

The students returned to the nurses' residence with the baby and it was placed in the War Memorial children's hospital.

Det.-Inspector Fred Swan said today the baby was in good condition but that detectives had made no progress in discovering its identity.

One-eye Sees Double - Predicts Tie

It is while I am packing my bags for McGill, that suddenly there is a banging on the door and in walks my one-time associate Solly the Sap who is being so-called because he is always running, usually at the nose. I greet him in my standard friendly manner but, as he is wearing a bullet-proof vest the bullets just bounce off and do not stop him.

"It is lucky for us both that I catch you before you leave, my pal, as I have news of great import for you," and with this he assumes a knowing look which I disregard as I know that Sappy Sol knows only from nothing.

But this import line intrigues me as it recalls memories of a business I am in during the Twenties which involves certain imports of liquid stuffs, but I pull my mind back to Sol and his news.

"I am assuming, Benny my boy," blithers Solly, "that you know of the train wreck which occurs just outside of Montreal last week." I am nodding my head in the affirmative and Solly waggles his pinkie in triumph. "Aha, but what you do not know is that this deal happens because the 'boys' believe that that train carries none other than One-Eyed Benny, who is your old pal."

This shocks me as I always believe that I do not have an enemy in the world, but it makes sense since the McGills do not wish to lose all their games to Varsity and when Benny says they lose they are so doing. What could be more logical than to make Benny a little bit dead so he doesn't call the game for his own sweet Varsity. This is why I immediately go into hiding and do not write my calls last week, which is why things are happening as disastrously as they do in Montreal. But now I am being back and I do not flinch before the fury of Queen's, partly because I remain at home and do not venture near there, and partly because I am not offending anyone this week and I call the game to end this way. After the Blues get a touchie, which is matched by the Gaels, and then another which is similarly matched and then a single which also is being matched, the game ends. Since you are all bright little guys and dolls you probably figure it out already—it is a tie—13 even and McGill also wins as Carr railroads Western Mustangs to the Stockyards where they are dealt with in a manner both proper and fitting for the "greatest team in 40 years"—they are sold by the ton, and at premium, first-grade beef, prices yet.

Varsity Students Will Visit Cornell Annual Trip Registry Closes Today

In order that Canadian students may gain an insight into American University Life, Cornell University has invited representative groups from Toronto, Montreal, and Quebec to take part in a visit there on the week-end of November 17-19.
These students will tour the campus and take part in various phases of Cornell's University Life such as attending regular lectures, parties, discussions and a banquet.

Representing Varsity will be a group of six or more students, selected by a special group, from different faculties and years, and presenting a true cross-section of Varsity Life.

The deadline for application for this annual Cornell week-end is 5:00 P.M. to-day. Any students who haven't done so yet may apply at the S.A.C. building. So far only 37 applications have been tendered. All the students who feared that they would be in competition with hundreds of old stalwarts on the campus can now take heart.

Transportation by car will be subsidized so there is no need to enter upon a long period of penny-pinching to scrape up money for the trip.

THIS IS THE BIG ONE FOR BLUES

Bob Hopes For Stronger Attack To Outscore Point-Happy Gaels

By JOHN WILSON

Before a record crowd in Queen's University's Richardson Stadium, facing the strongest aggregation of Golden Gaels that Queen's coach Frank Tindall has ever produced, and the pinpoint passing of import quarterback Gus Braccia, Varsity's Blues will invade Kingston tomorrow afternoon to tangle with the Tricolor in the most important game of the Intercollegiate season.

Since well before the league opened four weeks ago, it's been a well-known fact that this one would be the biggest, and after dropping a 16-9 contest to McGill last week, Saturday's game best a must win for the Blues.

"We'll have trouble keeping a team like Queen's off the score sheet," says Blue coach Bob Masterson, "so we'll have to outscore them."

Allowing the Gaels maybe two touchdowns, not at all unlikely behind the running of Ron Stewart and the passing of Braccia, the Blues will need power both on the ground and in the air to crack the Gaels' defence. Already possessing a ground attack that is just about at its best, Masterson sees the need for a more potent aerial offensive than the Blues have shown in their last four games.

"We missed a scrimmage with the Intermediates last week," commented Masterson, "and that hurt us a lot against McGill." The awkward Baby Blue schedule prevented the usual mid-week scrimmage, and didn't give the passers a chance to work under game conditions. Masterson points out that using two quarterbacks prevents either one from becoming used to throwing the ball, and the lack of a mid-week scrimmage leaves them in Saturday's game without the usual amount of experience. "Most clubs would leave three good ones on the bench and go all the way with one," says Bob, but the Blues haven't done that.

This week's scrimmage may have provided Masterson with some of the answers he was looking for, after the Blues spent three-quarters of an hour running pass patterns against the Intermediates.

Only hitch in the expected strength of the Blue ground attack is Jack Rogers. The fiery little half, who has been a work-horse in the last four games, carrying the ball 42 times for 212 yards, is a doubtful starter against the Gaels tomorrow. Rogers bruised a shoulder in practice this week, and is still suffering, but may be ready to start at the right half spot. If Rogers is sidelined, Wally Bulchak will likely draw the starting assignment, and Al Riva will play some offense, as well as his chores as a defensive half.

Phil Muntz and Don Cheeseman will likely start at the other half slots, with Gerry Lansky at wing-back, and Harry Wilson at quarter.

Burt Kellock and Fred Smale, favorite targets for the Blue passers thus far, will start at offensive end. Kellock has caught eight of sixteen passes thrown for 149 yards in four games, while Smale has snagged six of thirteen for 69 yards. Santo Martini and John Casey start at tackle while Earl Ford and Bobby Waugh will likely start at guard. John Wismer begins at centre to round out the Blue offensive unit.

For Queen's fullback Bill Surphlis and half Gary Schreider may not start. Both missed last Saturday's game with Western. Other than that, the Gaels will be at full strength for this is a must game for them also. They have to defeat the Blues in order to qualify for a possible playoff berth on November 12.

With the odds at a respectable even, the contest shapes into one of the greatest Intercollegiate football games in years. Plenty is at stake, and the winner of this one could end up taking it all.

Baby Blues Face Western In 'Big' Intermediate Test

At Varsity Stadium this afternoon, the Baby Blues take on the Western Colts in the season's crucial game, which has the same meaning to Jack Kennedy's boys as the game in Kingston tomorrow has to the parent Blues. A victory for the Rinkies will put them in first place and virtually assure them of the League championship.

Norm Levine has been returned by the Blues and his presence will add considerably to the already strong Toronto line. Glenn Maclean will not play due to an ankle injury received in the OAC game, and to strengthen the guard spot, Walt Schmida has come down from the Blues. Dave McIntyre will remain with the Intermediates for the game today.

The Baby Blues are out for revenge today, as their only loss to date was at the hands of the Horsies, and the main reason for that defeat was a 109-yard run back by Western's Frank Loftus of a Joynit punt for a touchdown. Kennedy had been working on pass defence and offence all week, and feels that if Larry Joynit can hit his receivers, that coupled with the Rinkies' hard-running backfield, should be more than enough to bring the Shaw trophy to Toronto.

The Colts, however, have a strong, well-balanced squad, and it will take a top game of football by the Baby Blues to knock off the junior Mustangs. With the Kennedy men in top shape for the contest, the Stadium should really rock this afternoon. Kickoff at 2 p.m. sharp.

Harriers Engage Wayne U.

The Varsity harrier team is readying for its second taste of American competition in the person of Wayne University of Detroit this week-end. The visiting Wayne squad will be on exhibition in High Park Saturday morning at 11 a.m. when they take on the Toronto crew in a dual meet.

These cross-country runs have been going on for a number of years with each University paying the other alternate yearly visits. This year's Wayne entry will be as strong as the one which defeated the Toronto team last year in Detroit, but the rolling High Park home course should give the locals a tactical advantage over their more experienced foes.

The Detroit contingent will be led by veteran distance star Joe Babbs, who in last year's meeting set a new record on his home course. He will be ably supported by Owen Clinton, third in last year's race. Other Wayne runners will be Stan Steinkovich, Glen Martin, Cliff Hatcher and freshman Bill Seifker.

The Toronto team will sadly miss the services of last year's captain Herb Tillson and Bill Akkersley, especially Tillson who pushed Babbs to the limit last year to establish his record. The nucleus of the Toronto crew will be made up of freshmen sensation Bill Vary, sophomore runners Bruce Hughes and Bill Gelling and freshmen Ron Toop and Mike Berger. Mal McLeod, Tom Stroud and John Hetherington complete the Toronto squad.

The Wayne team has already had five meets. Besides making a strong showing in the U.S. college senior and junior harrier runs, they also hold wins over Central Michigan, Loyola, Hope College and last Friday defeated the Western team in London.

Although beaten in its first start last week by Nazara University, a much stronger showing is expected from the Varsity crew tomorrow as they try for their first win of the season.

Legal Veterans Dazzle Rookies

The Faculty of Law had its annual inter-year football game yesterday. The second and third year students managed to squelch a fighting group of freshmen 6-0.

The touchdown was scored on a brilliant razzle-dazzle. It was a triple reverse with Wolfson taking Stork's snap and handing off to Ace Elmunda who lateralled to Jack Moran who in turn threw a forty-yard pass to Dave Baum who stampeded thirty yards for the touchdown.

The seniors played well but were outplayed by the experience of the older legal braves.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MAX ROSENTHAL

Our Thursday banner headline read: "Blues May Lace Gaels Saturday." If the Blues do lace the Gaels tomorrow a lot will depend on how well their injuries have healed and how well Harry Wilson and Eddie Skrzypek throw the ball. Ever since the start of the year, the Blues have been plagued with injuries.

Before the Western game, ends Gene Chorostecki and Fred Smale were doubtful starters. When the Blues travelled to Kingston they were without Chorostecki, whose hard charging was invaluable in the Western game. The injury bug struck both guard Don Johnston and end Don Smith who were forced to miss the first McGill game. In that one tackle Al Watt was injured and lost to the Blues for the whole season after tearing cartilages in his ribs. Tackle Walt Radzick and guard Earl Ford had their troubles also, one with a gimpy knee, the other with cracked ribs. The backfielders Al Riva, Don Cheeseman, Dave Cresswell, and Jack Rogers have had their troubles too. Add to this the broken vertebrae to Rich Bethune and you begin to wonder how the Blues ever won three consecutive before dropping the last one to the Redmen.

Those who know how injuries can affect a team, know that the Blues were not performing with one hundred per cent effectiveness. What has pulled the Blues through has been the excellent blocking of their line (including Gerry Lansky, naturally) and the power of their ground attack. "The unknown quantity" Bob Masterson talked about is no longer unknown.

What the Blues were expected to have, a pass defence, has held up and is still holding up favourably in spite of what people might say about the Blues' loss to Dickie Carr and his Redmen.

What the Blues have lacked is an efficient passing attack. What could win the game for the Blues tomorrow, and perhaps, the championship, is their passing, and the Blues know it. That's why Masterson held a 15 minute scrimmage with the Baby Blues the other night with emphasis strictly on passing. Very rarely do Wilson and Skrzypek get a chance to practise their passing in a scrimmage with the Baby Blues because the latter have an awkward schedule that forces them to play in the middle of the week.

The results of the scrimmage helped the Blues to erase a few of their problems. The quarterbacks ironed out some of their difficulties, with the result that to-morrow they will be sharper than they've been all year. This, of course, brings up the point: will the Blues pass as often as they have or will they run the Gaels into the ground. With a view to their potent ground attack we predict the Blues will win. This, we know, is in direct conflict with One-eyed Benny's predictions, but we don't think he knows what he's talking about anyway. Stewart should only break his leg before he goes to bed to-night (nasty, aren't we?)

Max's Muses . . . Ron Renzetti of St. Mike's has been injured and will be out for the whole season. Three other St. Mike's backfielders have their legs in casts.

St. Michael's Edges Victoria, 6-0 To Get A Share Of First Place

By HOWIE MANDELL

The double blue of St. Michael's College sneaked into a first-place interfaculty tie yesterday on the strength of a close, 6-0 victory over Victoria. The same winning touchdown was scored by Brian Anderson in the dying seconds of the first half.

Victoria was caught sleeping on the play as Anderson sneaked behind a pair of Victoria defenders and nabbed a perfectly-placed pass from Irish quarter back Frank Kiely. The thirty-yard pass was thrown from the St. Mike's 27 yard line to Anderson's waiting mitts. Two Vic players were hot in pursuit of Anderson as he raced down the field and one of them by him on the five-yard line, but it wasn't enough to stop the hard-driving Anderson who got up and stumbled across the goal line. Kiely's convert made the score 6-0.

Because of some sloppy ball-handling St. Mike's had two other good opportunities to score. Both were set up by Victoria fumbles in the last quarter of play. The first chance came when a bid pitchout was picked up by the double blue's Curt Russel on the Vic fourteen-yard line. Here the Vic line, led by Jerry Kushman, stopped the Irish in their tracks for the first two downs. Instead of trying a field goal or kicking a single Kiely gambled and unsuccessfully. Vic was up to them, old tricks again and fumbled on the next play. This time Jake Huschilt fell on the ball on the Vic eighteen yard stripe. The Vic line held again and Kiely played it smart, kicking for the point.

On the play Victoria was caught offside and St. Mike's took the penalty instead of the point. On the next two plays Anderson and Leo McGuigan carried for seven and three yards respectively on a third down pitchout. McGuigan was smeared for a five yard loss and Vic took over. Ron Bertram and Paul Newman marched for twenty yards on four plays. Vic quarter Frank Ebenhardt threw a twenty-yard strike to John Hindrick and successive runs by Ebenhardt and Newman bought the ball to the Irish line. Then the same fate struck old Vic as had previously struck St. Mike's and on three attempts they failed to get any closer to pay dirt. With the one minute left for the half up, Kiely hit Anderson.

The second half saw the play seesaw up and down the field with St. Mike's having a slight edge in play. An Irish fumble was picked up by Anderson on the Victoria forty yard stripe but the Vic's could do nothing.

Notes: The defence of both teams outdid the offence. For St. Mike's, Curt Russel and Jake Huschilt particularly stood out, each picked up a fumble and both kept Ebenhardt busy running all streamer Jerry Kushman and Jerry Wiley shone on Vic's line. Both teams lacked a good offensive thrust. Brian Anderson was hard to stop once he got rolling. . . . St. Michael's completed two out of eight passes while Victoria completed only two out of nine and ran one intercepted.

Says Queen's

Students Or Delinquents

(This editorial is reprinted from the October 25th issue of the Queen's Journal)

The people of Ontario have probably begun to think of Queen's as a home for juvenile delinquents rather than an university. The latest incidents in London will only confirm their opinion. It has become traditional among a small group of Queen's students that they turn into a pack of hoodlums while supporting their football team. It would be bad enough if riotous fans were content with damaging the property of their host university. But they are not content unless they create havoc in an entire city, or at least as much of it as they have time to cover.

The situation ceases to be funny, if indeed it ever was. And if the repeated outbursts were merely boring, they could be overlooked. The university would just sit back and wait for the obstreperous youngsters to grow up. But it is not that simple. Not only does the reputation of the university suffer, as well as the reputation of every Queen's student, but there is also a great deal of expense involved. Every time Queen's students break loose somebody must pay for the damages. Quite often it is the entire student body that suffers, since payment has to be made out of AMS funds.

If those who take part in the incidents think they are contributing to the widely-famed Queen's Spirit, they are misleading themselves. That spirit was much more in evidence among students who sat quietly for four hours in the rain to watch Queen's play Western last week. It is shown by students who think Queen's is the best university in the country, and who convince others that it is by their behaviour. They are proud of their university, and they guard its reputation with care. But their efforts are constantly frustrated by the small minority who do not feel the "Queen's Spirit," but rather capitalize on it and abuse it.

Perhaps instead these students think they are proving they are men because they can consume great quantities of alcohol. If so, they are again misleading themselves. They are anything but manly when they are violently drunk. They are little boys making a big noise. Their behaviour would be disgusting if it were not so pathetic. It is time they began to practice a little common sense and self-control. Otherwise people will doubt that they can.

OUR READERS WRITE:

God's Gift To Humanity

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We, the "God's gift to humanity," the university students of Toronto, have lately been demanding more government aid for university students. Why should the government even consider any such thing unless we can at least say that we are spending our time here in order to be of some use to society?

And yet here we sit in our ivory tower apparently completely irrelevant to the world. We apparently have no idea of the world and of life and don't care in the least to find out. When an organized agency, The Red Feather, attempting in 68 different ways to fulfill desperate human need asks our aid we self-righteously offer them 20c. per student.

When any number of us spend at least $1.00 per person on an evening's entertainment at least once a week, can 20c. per head be said to be anything but a disgraceful conscience-piece?

To me the 20c. sounds just like "30 pieces of silver."

It would make me hope and pray that the government cease any aid at all to universities so that there be no more such useless parasites on society manufactured.

Thirsty

The Editor,
The Varsity:

After numerous unfortunate experiences in an well known dispensary of malt brews of Eloor Street, we have come to the conclusion that the age of majority should be lowered from 21 to 20.

This is essential to the prevention of other sweet young things becoming as frustrated and neurotic as we.

This Is Spirit?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Just a note on the much talked about theme of "spirit." Inter-faculty spirit is on the upsurge and this I suppose is a healthy sign. However what we might call Blue and White spirit is on the decline. The B. & W. society has staged some fine pep rallies but it would be fitting if the Toronto song were sung more, frequently than the Engineering song at such affairs!

Also it has been the custom that following a Varsity victory there be a joyous parade led by the Varsity band and cheerleaders. The sole jubilant souls in the parade after the Queen's game were a bunch of drunken Queen's science men who mistook the Varsity capes for Queen's kilts.

Too bad.

a question of manners

University football games are colorful affairs, and are a real part of the tradition and vitality of university life.

The games provide for the players an opportunity to match their skill with the best players from other universities.

The games provide for the spectators the thrill and excitement of watching good players in action, and a chance to see — and be caught up in — the color and glamor of intercollegiate football.

Yet these games were never meant to provide an opportunity for bad manners, drunken debauchery, or willful destruction of property.

At many recent intercollegiate contests, many spectators and game officials have run a serious risk of injury from flying bottles or falling goalposts. A very considerable amount of property damage has been done — and this damage will, in the long run, be paid for by the students themselves.

A university is supposed to be a place for young men and women eager to search out the truth. From the conduct of certain students at these games, one would think that it was an institution looking after the care of delinquent and ill-mannered children.

the one that got away

The other night as I lay in bed I happened to see a spider crawling down the wall toward my bed.

I watched in horror as he advanced slowly, leg by leg delicately lifting and coming down where the leg in front had been. This furry chorus-line came closer and closer, and all I could move was my eyes which solemnly followed the syncopated movement.

In my frozen, fascinated state I wondered what I could do. Meanwhile the creature advanced on me.

It stopped, under pressure of my stare. Then crept forward an-inch. I stared harder, shrinking a bit. It stopped again. I looked wildly for a box, a book, anything hard and unfeeling. I looked back. It was two inches nearer.

Still I didn't move and the legs paced cautiously and irregularly forward. I decided. I would have to try. The spider was motionless a second. I grabbed a book and swatted.

But faster than I was the spider's multiplicity of legs. As soon as I moved, he was away and unattainable behind the bed.

Not At Vic

The Editor,
The Varsity:

May I point out that the writer of a letter in your issue of Monday, October 17 signed Wanda Sulkowski, III Vic, is not registered in Victoria College. There is an obvious mistake in the writer's college affiliation.

I write only to point out that Victoria College has not changed its policy with respect to the joining of sororities by the women of the College.

Deplorable

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I wish to protest the deplorable morals of some people around this university. My coat was stolen on Wednesday from the coat rack outside Hart House library. The only revenge I ask is five minutes alone with the culprit to "reform" him, but since I doubt if the cad will produce his vile presence I demand action. Unscrupulous villains like this must be apprehended and brought to justice. We have a university police but their only apparent function seems to be to stop innocent students from invading the campus with their armoured vehicles of destruction called cars.

Until our campus is cleansed of the vile breed called petty thieves, I warn my fellow students to leave their coats only in places that can be watched where they can be checked.

Marceau In Clay

Art In The Process

A Toronto Sculptress Exhibits Clay Modelling

Miss Pauline Redsell demonstrates her sculpting technique for the Art Gallery Wednesday "open night." She is here doing a figure of Marcel Marceau who did a mime program recently at the Crest. At the same time there was a guided tour of the David Milne Exhibition. —VSP by Stanley Klosevych Wednesday is Culture night in Canada. It is also the night when the Toronto Art Gallery (one block west of O'Keefes on Dundas) invites the public in for tea and cookies, films, and a chance to watch artists in action. Last Wednesday's featured artist was slender, demure Pauline Redsell (Mrs. William Fideow) Toronto sculptress, giving an on the spot exhibition of clay modelling.

A clay figure is built on a waist-high, revolving platform, something like a piano stool or bar stool. An unromantic lead pipe supports the armature, the wound wire skeleton on which the figure will grow. Clay is applied in gobs, until the figure has its approximate desired form.

As sculpture is not something you dash off, Miss Redsell had done the groundwork on her demonstration piece at home. As an absorbed audience looked on, she added to the figure, an action portrait of Marcel Marceau, with quick, accurate thumbfuls of clay. Patting down a roughness here, adding a muscle there, raising folds and wrinkles with a deft stick, she built movement into the clay, the same kind of balletic, highly expressive movement that makes it unnecessary for Marceau to talk.

Fascinated by Marceau's pantomime Miss Redsell did a series of figures, and some linecuts, of the French master. Nothing could be more natural, as he and she (her work suggests) have a great deal in common. Both understand the difficult art of expressing an emotion with the whole organism, of looking sad or happy, lively or contemplative, with face, hands, feet and spine all at once.

Miss Redsell's studio in Toronto's "Greenwich Village" is cluttered (artistically cluttered) with plaster sculptures of all shapes and finishes. Some are by fellow sculptors, but most are her own. The latter are marked by the balance and coordination of athletes or of dancers. Softness is conspicuously absent. Miss Redsell likes the human form, and brings out its best lines and planes with a minimum of abstraction. She does not follow the Creator too slavishly, but simplifies for a stronger, clearer expression of the various things human figures have to say.

The finished sculpture is cast from the clay model, which can be remoulded. Miss Redsell claims to have used Wednesday's clay for the last fifteen years. She uses a variety of tints, in thin shellac, to make plaster and "cast stone" castings resemble terra cotta, aluminum, or bronze. One cast of a wood carving is coloured cunningly enough to fool a termite.

Miss Redsell studied at the Ontario College of Art, and in France and England. Her occupations have included designing tombstones, trophies (which require very exacting detail) and bases for table lamps. At present, she is able to devote all her time to sculpture for its own sake.

"It's no way to make a fortune," she smiles, but she is doing something she obviously loves, and does well. You should be so lucky.

sculpture, music and movies

CHEKHOV TRILOGY

- The Ladies
- The Enormity
- The Swedish Match

Three movie shorts, all "after the stories of Chekhov," are entertainment after a fashion, provided the audience is not too particular. This programme, released in Canada by Artkino films, is presented as a trio of Chekhov short stories, set to music and acted either unfeelingly or with exaggeration far beyond the normal call of slapstick.

A brilliant artist, Chekhov has been poorly handled by his countrymen in this programme. Whereas Chekhov wrote of the Russian middle-class life with sympathetic insight, the film people of Moscow have ignored this approach, confining their treatment to a superficial illustration of Chekhov's stories. To me it seemed as though this was the intention, so static were both actors and camera. Taken as stills and scattered through the pages of the printed Chekhov books, these film presentations might have been quite effective but as a movie, a story in motion, they were disappointing.

The Ladies, a sad story of heartless bureaucracy, indulgent ladies and a scheming "pretty boy," all of whom gang up on a stricken schoolmaster to break him completely, is a moving story, but seems that do not follow one another, and actors seemingly unaware of the feelings they are supposed to have all give a dull finish.

The Enormity, concerning a fat old playboy, his obliging maid, and a rather shopworn routine of slapstick never does make sense, despite colorful sub-titles, vaguely-colored film, and a thoughtfully provided synopsis. The film moves too crudely and disjointedly for any full effect.

Best of the lot was The Swedish Match, hurt slightly by some pitiful over-playing, but generally a neat bit of entertainment. The surprise ending, the discovery that the murderer's central character, the corpse, is quite alive, comes as an anticlimax, the film dragging to an end of sagging irony. The edge is lost before, but a few smiles are drawn right to the end.

Sheila Henig, Pianist In Recital Monday

Miss Sheila Henig, a 15-year-old pianist, will give a recital this Monday in Eaton Auditorium. The 1955 Eaton Scholarship Winner is being sponsored by the Local Council of Women of Toronto.

Since 1945 Miss Henig has been studying in Toronto at the Royal Conservatory of Music with Miss Margaret Miller Brown. She gave her first recital at the age of twelve and has won several scholarships successively since at the Conservatory.

In 1953 she was the winner of the senior piano scholarship at the Canadian National Exhibition, and studied during the summer with Mr. James Finkler of the Juillard School of Music.

Her program will consist of two works by Bach, three by Brahms, a Beethoven Sonata, a Chopin Sonata, a Debussy, Suite and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.

Miss Henig has played previously in Toronto with the C.B. Symphony Orchestra, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, and the Art Gallery and in Hart House.

Scarpini and TSO

By Erwin J. Biener

Perhaps conventional in appeal to the sophisticated "high-brow" hi-fi enthusiast, Sir Ernest's programme arrangement and interpretation of the two opening nights of the T.S.O. subscription series yielded sufficient delight to the humbler concert-goer.

The musicians were almost always well attuned to Sir Ernest, who in turn excelled in sensitive discrimination and unusual vigour during this concert marking his 25th anniversary at the helm of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

Mozart's overture to his rarely performed opera Idomeno was perhaps the most convincing reading of the evening. Brisk tempi combined with dramatic restraint and tonal contrast illuminated this exquisite composition with sound musicianship.

Zoltan Kodaly's Dances from Galantha was less satisfying. Hungarian music especially by its two most outstanding exponents, Zoltan Kodaly and the late Bela Bartok, appears in convincing interpretation. The Dances from Galantha and Bartok's Dance-suit could perhaps illustrate this point. While Kodaly's emphasis lays with the more literal, melodic aspects of Hungarian music, Bartok as seen for instance in his Dance-suit gives a strongly implicit and also expressionistic meaning to folkloric elements. Bartok succeeded in fusing much of the harmonic and rhythmic texture of Hungarian music with his creative genius into a most original union. Although replete with suggestions of his national identity he cannot be called "the Hungarian composer" in the narrowly chauvinistic sense. But neither could he be called the "national" Kodaly who though relatively more conservative in his harmonic approach rose also above the "national."

Kodaly because of his unusually subtle balance between the sensual jagged rhythmic and melodic patterns of the Hungarian folksong and more or less differentiated occidental harmonic framework presents serious problems of interpretation.

Sir Ernest appeared to conceive the Dances from Galantha in a very broad and most pompous interpretation. Instead of strong and at times impetuous rubato and dynamic changes, the composition moved in levels except the very last crescendo which came to a rousing climax.

Pietro Scarpini, soloist in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 seemed to be beset by an almost constant anxiety, which was manifested in frequent hesitations and an odd kind of timidity. Mind you Mr. Scarpini's technical equipment, if not brilliant, is quite reliable. It was rather his musicianship however, which fell short. One felt throughout Mr. Scarpini's performance that he was trying to reach some depth without however being convinced about the soundness of approach himself. His Montreal broadcast performance of the Prokofiev Concerto No. 1 about a week ago, was incomparably more self-assertive than last Wednesday's colourless Beethoven.

A very fine performance of Sibelius' 2nd Symphony ended the evening.

Claim Garbled Story Printed 'Varsity' Censured By Meds

A motion of censure on The Varsity has been passed by the Medical Society. This information was passed on to the Students' Administrative Council last Wednesday night.

The Society expressed approval over the Varsity's handling of a story. The story in question dealt with the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes. The original story was garbled, according to the Medical Society, and a correction printed in The Varsity was also none too clear.

Medical representative to the SAC, Sandy McPherson, announced with regret that he had been instructed to pass the news of the censure on to the Council meeting. The council members laughed.

Varsity Editor Bob Brown replied read the Council a letter from Al Davidson (IV Meds) Davidson was the student responsible for passing the story on to The Varsity. He said that he had been obliged to phone the story to The Varsity and that his attempt to explain the rather confusing details resulted in what appeared to be inaccurate reporting.

"I trust that you will not regard the censure motion as representative of Medical Student opinion," his letter said. "It merely reflects the tendency of Medical Society Assembly members to vote on anything without thinking."

Minneapolis, Minnesota: Student-professor coffee hours are a new feature on the Minneapolis campus. The idea is to give the students a chance to meet and talk informally with their professors—or with any of the profs on the campus.

Two types of coffee hours are in vogue. For one, the students and professors of a particular department are all invited. For the other, students are selected at random, and told to bring along their favourite professors.

Montreal: A petition is being circulated on the McGill campus to have that university reinstated in NFCUS. The students claim that only five percent of the students voted in the referendum about McGill's withdrawal, and that the majority for the decision was very narrow.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan: High winds completely destroyed the Home Economics float and damaged others, in the annual homecoming Float Parade at the University of Saskatchewan. Despite the damage, the parade was described as the best ever. The Commerce float was the prize-winning entry.

Minneapolis, Minnesota: One issue of the Minnesota Daily, we noticed lately, had six of its twelve pages devoted to fall fashions.

Montreal: McGill students have been widely praised for their "outstanding" help in the wreck of the train returning from the Varsity football weekend, the McGill Daily reports.

Students cleared the area, aided the injured, and generally helped to calm the situation, said Harry Griffiths, director of athletics, and Dr. J. S. Smit, football team doctor.

"They did more to help the situation than many others who received more prominence in newspaper accounts," said Dr. Smit.

Paint By The Gaellon Reform School Tactics Q-Type Spirit Is Costly

Kingston (CUP): Paint was splashed and garbage splattered over Western campus last weekend. The damage was done despite the presence of armed police and Western students on guard.

Queen's students splashed red paint on one of the pillars of the $38,000 street gate leading to the main campus. This was done under the very nose of a private investigator hired by Western to prevent damage.

Students painted "Queen's" in large red letters over the entrance to Thames Hall on the campus. A large load of garbage was scattered near the campus cafeteria.

Garbage cans, with glass scraps, were emptied on roads near the Thames River Bridge. Sidewalks and streets were splashed with paint and large "Q's" in several places.

Queen's students also greased the goalposts on the playing field, in spite of the fact that the stadium was guarded by about 20 students from Huron college and three special investigators.

An editorial in the Queen's Journal stated that "the people of Ontario have probably begun to think of Queen's as a home for juvenile delinquents rather than a university. The latest incidents in London will only confirm their opinions."

"Not only does the reputation of the university suffer, as well as the reputation of every Queen's student," continued the editorial, "but there is also a great deal of expense involved. Every time Queen's students break loose somebody must pay for the damages. Quite often it is the entire student body that suffers, since payment has to be made out of AMS funds."

Queen's students even now are being billed for damage to Varsity stadium three weeks ago. Principal Macintosh of Queen's has confirmed the report that Queen's students will pay the $500 and that the Alma Mater Society is now considering the matter.

Richardson Stadium at Queen's was also painted up recently by Queen's students. They were protesting the poor seating arrangements there.

The Western weekend, which was painted up by Queen's, has been described as "the biggest homecoming yet." Despite the damage done by Queen's, the students were all heartily welcomed and included in the celebrations, said one observer. Smoke bombs and overwhelming hospitality were the keynote of the weekend with "very little drinking" according to one Queen's student.

LPP Complains NFCUS Bungles On Three Counts

Students of the Labor Progressive Party — Canada's Communist Political Organization—think that the national student body bungled its "greatest issue" in remaining luke-warm to Canadian-Soviet student exchanges.

At the conference this year, Jiri Pelikan, observer from the communist-dominated International Union of Students, presented a nine-point program to foster international understanding. The proposals, which included east-west exchanges, were termed "favorably received."

The student body was also criticized under two other major headings. LPP students felt that the following objectives should be pursued with more vigor:

(1) The guaranteeing of opportunities and careers to students and graduates.

(2) The securing of direct federal and increased provincial financial assistance to needy students.

The scholarship campaign, the brief said, was not progressing "because of the reluctance of the organization to draw the mass of Canadian students into direct participation."

Commented Bill Smyth, External Affairs Committee Co-Chairman: "The scholarship campaign, run last year by Norman Chalmers, has never been more inspiredly handled. There is every indication that progress is being made."

"I suspect the term 'mass of the Canadian students' is a part of Party philosophy and nothing else."

"As for foreign relations, we're cleaning our own closet first, before trying to convert the world."

So this is the BIG week-end for Varsity Blues supporters. And Ball Or Brawl?

BY DOUG STEWART

five hundred lucky Varsityites are off to waken the sleepy village of Kingston with five hundred hard-to-find ducats clutched in five hundred hot little fists, and their own particular de quoi vivre clutched in the other.

A phone call to appropriate sources at Queen's revealed that this is to be the Homecoming weekend. And in the tradition of all homecoming weekends, college spirit, bonhommerie and lemonade will flow like water.

Said appropriate source indicated that a float parade could be expected by everyone mobile before the game. And at half time the Queen's band, beautiful majorette and those astounding cheerleaders will be out to show that

Queen's has more to offer than just a ball team

But what's a foot-ball weekend without a social side to it? The Alma Mater Society at Queen's knows the answer as well as anyone could be expected to and is catering to social instincts, Platonic or Freudian, in the traditional manner. Tea Dance after the game and a dance ($1.50 per couple) at night.

QUEEN'S MELEE INJURES FIVE

Schreider, Gaels' Best Runner

Romping off-tackle is halfback Gary Schreider (48), Queen's outstanding runner. Schreider amassed 102 yards in six carries for an average of 17 per carry. Varsity's Don Smith (54) is shown diving toward Schreider. In the background is the Blues' Pete Maik who kicked the field goal that gave the Blues a 10-8 lead in the fourth quarter. —VSP by Stan Klosevych

BY JOHN WILSON

Kingston, Oct. 30 (Staff)—With less than three minutes remaining in the fourth quarter the Blues had halted the Gaels near midfield and it looked as though the game was theirs. Leading 10-8, all they had to do was stay on the ground and run the clock out. Then, in a succession of setbacks almost too quick for the mind to follow, the Golden Gaels arrived at the Varsity eight yard line, and Jocko Thompson coolly toed the ball from the fifteen, neatly splitting the uprights for three points, and victory.

The dramatic field goal, coming with just 23 seconds left, electrified the record 13,500 fans jammed into every available inch of space in Richardson Memorial Stadium, cancelled a brilliant Varsity bid for victory, and assured the Gaels of a berth in an Intercollegiate playoff November 12.

With Queen's now alone in first place, the other spot in the league final will be decided by this weekend's action as the regular schedule closes. If the Blues lose to Western, and McGill can upset the Gaels, the Redmen will meet Queen's for the title. But if Varsity wins Saturday they will meet the Tricolor for the Yates Cup November 12 with the venue being decided by the order of finish of the two teams.

If Queen's remain in first place the game will be played in Kingston, as the first place school chooses the location of the contest. Queen's officials have already indicated that they will have the game in Kingston. If the Blues and Queen's are tied, however, it will be up to the C.I.A.U. where the game will be played.

Saturday's finish was reminiscent of the Yates Cup final in 1953, when Murray Henderson snared Don Getty's third down pass and somersaulted over the Varsity goal line for the game-winning major with less than a minute to play. Thompson had earlier missed three attempted placements, two of which went for singles in the first half. But when the chips were down the veteran half came through, with Dick Risk and Gene Chorostecki missing the ball by heartbreaking inches.

Girl's Head Slashed By Flying Beer Bottle; 2 Queensmen Blinded

Despite warnings from President Sidney Smith and the Students' Administrative Council to curb rioting at football games, rowdiness returned to the intercollegiate football scene Saturday with near-tragic results.

Five Queen's students, including one girl, were injured in a 30-minute melee around the goal-posts after the Varsity-Queen's game.

Cathy Cameron, daughter of the Supreme Justice of the Court of the Exchequer, received head cuts and was knocked momentarily unconscious after being struck by a thrown beer bottle. She was taken to Kingston General Hospital and released later Saturday. X-ray examinations were to be taken today.

Donald G. MacNay, who failed out of Queen's Science last year, was charged by Kingston police with intoxication and creating a disturbance in connection with the incident.

Two students were temporarily blinded by lime dust in their eyes.

Hugh Gamble of Ottawa, Meds '57, was struck in the eyes by a bag of finely powdered lime, one of those reportedly being hurled by a group of Varsity students.

Len Robbins of Barrie, Science '58, was reported temporarily blinded in the left eye when he came into the path of one of the smoke bombs being set off on the field. One source reported that there may be permanent injury to the eye due to the effect of the calcium oxide contained in the bombs.

It was reported Varsity students set off the bombs.

Two other Science students suffered broken bones. Pete Smith of Paris, Science '57, received a broken bone in his hand during the goal-post battle and Ira Sutherland of Hawkeston, Science '58, had a fractured finger.

After the game some Queen's students had swarmed onto the field and taken up positions around the goal-posts at the north end of the field. Others of the 600 Varsity students present ran out in an attempt to take the posts, presumably in "revenge" for the Queen's destruction of the steel posts here three weeks ago.

Varsity did not get the goal-posts and lost the game 11-10.

Drama Reviewer Acts As Mirror Says Whittaker

Herbert Whittaker, drama critic of the Globe and Mail, described a critic's job as one of relaying impressions, in the third Varsity journalism lecture last Friday.

A critic, he said, is like a mirror. He must remain alert through both the dull and exciting alike in order to reflect his impressions in the review. The foremost responsibility of the critic is to his readers, not to the actors themselves, nor to people who have seen the play.

The first qualification of a critic was interest in the theatre, he said. It made his job easier and more agreeable. In addition some technical knowledge of stagecraft was necessary, although not so much that theatrical effects would seem to him purely mechanical.

Speaking to a Varsity reporter after the lecture, Mr. Whittaker said he considered the arts section of a newspaper very important in developing a nation's culture.

Vox Pop Re Maths Discussed By MPS

Public opinion of Mathematics was the major topic at the second meeting of the Mathematics and Physics Society held Wednesday in the Croft Chapter House.

Dr. I. R. Pounder addressed the gathering on "How Others See Us." Quoting from sources as widely diversified as Greek philosophers and famous statesmen, he finished with a challenge to all the students to thoroughly pursue a well considered goal.

Mr. Gordon Beatty of the Canada Life Insurance Company gave a reminiscence account of the history of the graduate-supported $43,000 scholarship fund.

Canada Unlimited

Surplus Too High

"The only way we can distribute the agricultural and manufactured products of Canada is to make our money correspond to real wealth," said S. H. Patterson, president of the Social Credit Association of Ontario, Thursday.

If total wages and salaries equalled total production, this would be brought about, he added.

Mr. Patterson was speaking to an open meeting of the Political Economy club, on the Economic Policy of the Social Credit party. About 50 students heard him.

"The real wealth of a nation is its goods and services, delivered as required, Social Credit is bringing to the people all the credit for the real wealth of the nation, he said.

He outlined the present plight of Canada today, and suggested that the value of our produce exceeds the amount of wages paid to Canadians by 25%. For instance in the 'Depression, people were cold and starving not because of "overproduction," but because they hadn't enough cash to buy the goods available, Mr. Patterson stated.

He also mentioned the world economic situation — where millions are starving in Asia while a billion bushels of wheat are surplus in Canada. He said that 70% of the world's peoples go to bed hungry every night.

"There is something radically wrong here—the problem is distribution. We can produce a super-abundance of food, and alarming amounts of goods by automation—"Yet we cannot get rid of them."

Social Credit would give government money to the producers for their goods, in order to equalize the value of goods produced with the wages and salaries earned. This would be done by reduction of taxes, purchase discounts on consumer goods, removal of indirect taxation, increase of old-age and disablement pensions, and perhaps by national dividends to the people of Canada, participants in 'Canada Unlimited.'

Mr. Patterson outlined the four principles of the Social Credit Party: the individual is the most important part of God's creation on earth; the major function of government is to bring about the results the people want in government; we must have freedom with security; that which is physically possible and desirable can and must be made financially possible.

Trinity Divinity Responds Doctors Are Necessary

Trinity Divinity students have taken exception to a statement that "A practising Christian should never need the ministrations of either doctor or surgeon," made recently by an Anglican minister, Rev. Graham Lesser.

Mr. Lesser, a member of the Guild of St. Raphael, a group dedicated to the ministry of healing through prayer and the Sacraments, was quoted in the Oct. 24 Telegram.

Jack Roney and Ray Verge, III Divinity, Trinity, quoted Ecclesiastics: "Honour a physician according to your need of him, for verily the Lord hath created him — hath created medicines out of the earth and a prudent man will have no disgust at them," in answer to Rev. Lesser's statement that a Christian should "unhesitatingly seek healing direct from that inexhaustible source that gave him life, through the Church."

Commenting on Mr. Lesser's statement that "since practising Christians are all too few in number, the services of the doctor are vitally necessary, for faith in the doctor is better than no faith at all," the students said that "the question is not of faith in the doctor but of faith in God, through the instrumentality of the physician, to cure sickness."

Miss Jeandot Villette, III Divinity at Trinity, remarked "Faith will heal one spiritually, but can it set a broken leg?" Rev. Lesser thought faith in prayer, the ministry of absolution, laying on of hands and anointing, and the Sacrament of Holy Communion were sufficient to heal.

BABY BLUES BID FOR CHAMPIONSHIP

Whitewash Western Colts 21-0 John Tattle Top Ground-Gainer

The University of Toronto's Baby Blues practically clinched the Intercollegiate Intermediate title with a resounding 21-0 shellacking of the Western Colts on Friday afternoon at Varsity Stadium. If the Rinkies can win their remaining two games against Queen's and Ryerson, the Shaw Trophy rests undisputedly in Toronto. A Western win over OAC on Friday of this week would give the Baby Blues the title even if they lost one of these games, which is highly unlikely.

Fullback John Tattle, who has been an unheralded standout all season for the Rinkies, was the backbone of a solid ground attack which completely demolished the which touted Colts. Tim Reid highly touted Colts. Tim Reid and Bob Dann came up with their usual top efforts, and the quarterbacking of Larry Joynt left nothing to be desired. Yet despite the excellence of the backfield, the Toronto line was the major factor in victory. Only twice in the game did Toronto lose yards, and one of these was a backfield mix-up. Mike Syron, Nick Bruchovsky, Gary Canlett and Walt Jarrenko paced the linemen.

After long gains by Lansky and Gee, Joynt hit Nelson with a touchdown pass from the Western six as the Baby Blues opened the scoring in the first quarter. Joynt converted. Early in the second quarter, Reid went 22 yards around the right end to score the second Toronto major, which was also converted. Shortly after, a single made the score 13-0 which stood till the half.

The lone Western threat came in the second quarter, but Jim Joynt fumbled on the Varsity three and the Colts lost the ball.

There was no scoring in the third frame, but in the finale, the Baby Blues added eight points on a converted major by Joynt, a single, and a safety touch when Bruchovsky nailed Joy behind the Western goal line.

Baby Blue View . . . Tattle averaged 7.8 yards a carry . . . Preston, father of three, led Western with a 5.2 average . . . Thirty passes were thrown, about half completed . . . Preston and Joy paced the Colts . . . Joynt averaged an excellent 47.3 yards on his kicking . . . Western were out-rushed 229 to 123.

Rugger Blues Whip Scots Jacques Counts 7 Points

Varsity Rugger Blues defeated Toronto Scottish 2nd fifteen by 25 points to three on the back campus Saturday afternoon. This was the Scots first defeat of the season and their three points came as the result of a penalty goal kicked by Cresswell so that the Toronto Varsity line has not been crossed by any team in the league so far this season.

The Scots started two men short and John Hill who has moved so successfully from scrum half to center three quarters soon took advantage of the gaps in the Scottish side. Hill opened the score with a clever jinking run through the middle to score between the posts and Chris "sure foot" Jacques made a sure conversion to put Varsity five points up in the opening minutes of the game. Ray Cornbill managed to sandwich in a try after a burst down the wing before John Hill charged over the Scottish line to score again and Chris Jacques again obliged with a neat conversion.

It was obvious that this scoring by his fellow three quarters had put Mike Laughton on his form and he too shot over for two tries in quick succession. The Scottish who by this time had a full team settled down and played better football but were unable to stop Stan Leper from scoring a further try, as he is now greatly improved and is running hard and straight. The final score came appropriately enough from a long penalty kick by Chris Jacques putting the finishing touches to a fine afternoon's play on his part.

The forwards have quietened down considerably though they seem to be better in the loose than on previous weeks. Bob Wilson and John Bonnycastle were very impressive in the mauls and Tom Harper again demonstrated his ability in the lineouts. In all a most successful afternoon for Varsity and it now seems certain that they will be in the Toronto league playoffs.

Varsity 2nd fifteen captained by Mike Davis lost to Toronto Irish on Trinity field after a very hard game. The score was 3 to nothing, the Irish winning by a penalty.

Blue Soccerites Trip McMaster

Toronto soccer Blues defeated McMaster 5-1 on the back campus Saturday. Blues got off to a very quick start and after a clever movement down centre B. King netted Toronto's first goal. Green scored Varsity's second goal from a sharp angle to the left of the net.

Just before half Eddie Bracht scored again for Toronto to give the Blues a half time lead of three of 3-0.

Green scored his second goal in the second half and Mike Uzumeri scored the Blues' last goal after dribbling around the goal keeper. Jerry Chapple put in McMaster's only goal. Blue intermediates defeated McMaster, 7-0.

UC Tramples Dents 29-0 Captures Group Two Lead

By HOWIE MANDELL

In the most one sided game of the season to date, University College trampled over a woefully weak Dentistry squad by a 29-0 count Friday afternoon.

The pattern for the game was set on the first play when Jim Trenton intercepted a pro pass on the Dent 32 and ran all the way for the score. Sid Weinrib converted the touchdown to make it 6-0.

The Artsmen had an affinity for first minute scores. On the first play of the second quarter UC quarterback Dave Sutherland hit Weinrib with a 30 yard pass. Weinrib evaded five Dent men and crossed the goaline to give UC a 11-0 lead.

Not more than a minute later the red and white crew made it 16-0 as Dave Sutherland intercepted another Dent pass on the Molar Mechanics' 25 and scampered to their two yard stripe. On the next play Bob Nadin drove through the paper thin Dent line for the score. Weinrib's convert was successful.

UC capitalized on another Dentistry error late in the third stanza when Garry Vipond picked up a fumble on the Dent's 30. Here Sutherland threw Weinrib a 20 yard strike and Weinrib ran to the one yard line. Sutherland pushed himself over on the next play. Again Weinrib converted the touchdown.

In the opening moments of the final period, Vipond picked up one of the many Dentistry fumbles and ran 20 yards to paydirt.

The victory set the stage for one of the biggest Interfaculty games of the season next Tuesday when the Artsmen battle the Junior Engineers. Both teams are undefeated and a win means first place in Group Two. The whole UC line led by Norm Bergstein and secondaries Harvey Salom and Jim Trenton kept Dent quarterback Jim Fawcett and Bill Smith running all day and forced them to throw the ball to UC men on four occasions. Offensively, Dave Sutherland, Sid Weinrib, Bob Nadin and Garry Vipond shone. Vipond averaged 35 yards on punts.

first half. The Varsity line held Braccia pass in the Blue end zone in the second quarter but held on to the ball for a touchdown after Al Riva had seemingly batted it safely out of reach. Thompson converted giving the Gaels an 8-1 half-time lead. Blue quarter Ed Skrzypek had put Varsity on the score sheet minutes before with a single from the Queen's 34 yard line.

Twice the Blues drove in over the Queen's 30, and each time penalty halted their march on one occasion, and Lou Bruce recovered a Bulchak fumble at the Queen's 33 before that.

Bulchak played a tremendous game, filling in for the injured Jack Rogers whose bruised shoulder kept him on the bench. Bulchak carried 12 times for 36 yards and a 71 average, equalling the performance of fullback Don Cheeseman who amassed 109 yards rushing in 15 carries. Muntz carried thirteen times for 75 yards.

For the Gaels Gary Schreider averaged 17 yards a try, making 102 yards in six carries. The bulk of the diminutive halfback's total came on the opening play of the game, when he stunned the Varsity fans by waltzing 49 yards through centre to the Blue 34, setting up Thompson for the opening single, conceivably the game-winning point.

The Blue pass attack was not dangerous, with Wilson and Skrzypek completing five of 15 for 110 yards. Skrzypek completed only one in six tries but that was the 32-yard strike to Smale that set up Maik's fourth-quarter convert.

The Gael pass offence was more than a threat, with Braccia completing eleven of 21 for a devastating 219 yards. But Braccia still overshot his targets and with an alert Blue pass defence spearheaded by Gerry Lansky, couldn't break loose. Still, throwing to Schreider, he made the Gael aerial attack pay off with a second quarter touchdown.

The Blues now meet Western in Toronto this Saturday, and with their backs to the wall they must win or risk elimination from the race for the title. If Queen's can beat McGill in Montreal, there will be no danger of such an occurrence, but a McGill win would spell disaster for the Blues unless they defeat the Mustangs.

McGill Mauls Mustangs, 35-17

London, Ont., Oct. 30 (Staff).—McGill Redmen powered their way to a 35-17 victory here Saturday over the hapless University of Western Mustangs. The win kept the resurgent Redmen's play-off hopes alive. A McGill win over the Gaels next Saturday coupled with a Toronto loss to Western will put the Redmen into second place and the Blues in third with the Gaels finishing on top.

The Redmen were extremely sharp recovering all six of Western's fumbles, two of which were indirect causes of Redmen touchdowns. Fumbles deep in their own end zone cost the Mustangs two majors, and blocked punts were causes of two other McGill scores.

Led by quarterback Dick Carr, the Redmen played their best game of the year. They totaled 16 first downs to the Mustangs 12. On the ground McGill amassed 290 yards to Western's 46. Western's pool showing on the ground was accountable for their poor showing. One of their backs, Neil Desborough, did, however, emerge as the standout of the game, with spectacular running performances of 90 and 95 yards on kickoff returns for two of Western's three majors. Bob Labbett converted Desborough's touchdowns.

Carr continued to play well as he threw two touchdown passes to John Bennett and directed his team to four others. John Cronin also scored two majors for the Redmen while Rick Adrian and Bob Holland scored the others. Holland converted four of McGill's six touchdowns and Carr kicked a single, his first score of the year.

Brian Young scored Western's third unconverted major. The Mustangs have now lost four of their five games. They have one tie. McGill has two victories and one tie.

a hip in the door

When Hart House opened the Arbor Room last year it welcomed the thin end of the wedge of its own destruction — Woman.

Hart House is one of the last strongholds where that valuable and necessary function, male fellowship, may flourish and produce, unimpeded by the disturbing influence of woman.

Woman's place is behind the scenes. She may be the inspiration and the ardent supporter of the British Parliament, the discoverer of North America and football, but these institutions depend for their existence on the society of Men, alone.

A meeting ground where Men can relax and work together, and foster the spirit which produced these strokes of genius is an absolute requisite to society. When we see Woman — brazen, chattering and utterly feminine — walking the halls of a male club, overextending her privileges as guest, we view the beginning of decadence.

Possibly, Woman is unconscious of her invidious infiltration. Properly, she should make herself aware of it and refrain from this affront to established order.

HART HOUSE ROOMS

Campus Profile — The Warden

The rugged six-footer who runs Hart House is probably the friendliest man on the campus.

Though plagued with all the details of running Canada's biggest private men's club, he still manages to meet — and know by name — a surprising number of students. For all of them he has a smile and a minute to hear their problems.

Frequently, while talking to a senior student, he will excuse himself to welcome a freshman to the House and to assure him "The Warden's door is always open."

Warden Joseph McCulley moved into Hart House three years ago with more than

House activity keeps the Warden moving so swiftly that students and staff members warn him to watch his health, and he himself has to turn down some 80 speaking invitations in a year.

When he does have a free evening, he frequently spends it in the Arbor Room with a group of his "young friends."

One of the best dressed men on the campus, Warden McCulley is also a charming host. He has utilized this talent by offering his apartment to many Hart House groups seeking a comfortable meeting place.

Visitors going up the back way to his third-floor flat have been known to stumble over a long rowing oar — a memento of his career as an Oxford Blue. The Warden went to Oxford on a scholarship after graduating here in 1924 as President of the University College Literary and Athletic Society.

Other visitors making the long climb to his front door, note on a table in the hall a miniature wooden safe — a souvenir of a more serious period in his life. For five years before coming to Hart House, Mr. McCulley was applying his teaching experience as Deputy Commissioner of Penitentiaries for Canada, in charge of education and rehabilitation.

The carefully-finished inlaid safe, complete with a working combination lock, was given him by a grateful prisoner.

Between the two jobs, he spent 20 years as headmaster of Pickering, building it up to its present reputation. Former students at the Quaker college occasionally fill the guest rooms at the back of his flat.

Warden McCulley

30 years' experience in education. He also brought with him a host of new ideas — and a polished sales technique.

His first year he sat back and studied the campus. Then the ideas started appearing: redecorating schemes, Glee Club recordings, and (most precedent-shattering!) the Arbor Room.

Architecture, Culture and Life
Hart House Trade

By ALAN

Hart House was built after the medieval style of colleges at Oxford and Cambridge. From the exterior one would imagine that an attempt had been made to reproduce in Toronto the shape and form of collegiate buildings in England, so suited to university life there.

Unfortunately, both for us as students and for Hart House, Toronto is only mildly a college university; only a few people here are serious about the idea of small residential colleges and so the exterior is merely a copied facade which bears no relation to the environment.

Nowadays, the quadrangle always out of bounds, and the cloisters are banished from their time honoured place at the head table of the questionably exalted position of the minstrel's gallery. The changes were made because the original form was either thought to be unsuitable, or has since become

If we forget that Hart House looks like a residential college, it may be justly proud that Toronto has a building with so many of the common rooms, a library, magnificent gymnasiums and swimming pool. As a club, it serves its purpose very well. We all share of its fine collection of paintings, its record room and theatre.

Hart House Fills Large Need Halts Trend To Parochialism

By JOHN BECKER
Undergraduate Secretary, Hart House

Need supplied the original impetus for the building of Hart House. Sir Robert Falconer, President of the University in the 1910's and 1920's, foresaw the future growth of the University and sought to supply quarters for severely cramped organizations like the University YMCA. He looked also to fill the need for a centre for male activities on a non-faculty level.

In a federated college system the tendency towards parochial activity is great, and in many ways harmful to students who only take advantage of what their college or faculty has to offer.

Mr. Chester Massey, Chairman of the philanthropic Massey Foundation, was approached. The Foundation agreed to finance the building and Chester's son, Vincent Massey (now Governor-General of Canada), who had just returned from Oxford, took over the planning.

Obviously, Mr. Massey's Oxford background influenced him greatly and this resulted in certain things being included in the House which do not appear in the common North American Student Union.

The all male character of the House is English, and is written into the House's Charter.

However women are increasingly enjoying the efforts of the male committees in concerts, art shows, and even library evenings but these things are still organized by men.

The Arbor Room, open to all university women, was inaugurated last year.

The committee structure which resulted in the present type of program was the combined achievement of Mr. Massey and the first warden, J. B. Bickersteth, both graduates of Oxford.

The Hart House debates grew up as a reaction against the form of debating that had developed in American colleges. Toronto debaters had had a rude lesson from Oxford debaters in 1923 when the Englishmen, disregarding weighty, laboriously prepared arguments, won the judges with wit and charm. Consequently, the House now is set up much like a parliamentary body with no judges to cast a critical eye upon the scene.

The room which holds the House's books is probably the most interesting room in the house with its exquisitely shaped ceiling, and the books themselves are the kind that any well stocked private library would contain.

There have been many extensions to Hart House since the time that it opened. The String Quartet, one of the finest chamber music organizations of its type, was very active previous to the Second World War and won Hart House a name in the field of music which still lives on to this day.

A fortunate extension of this is the present Boyd Neel's Hart House Orchestra.

Caledon Hills Farm, the idea of the late Warden Nicholas Ignatieff, has fulfilled a real need in this metropolitan university.

The story of Hart House would fill volumes and would be concerned with students and their development as a result of their Hart House experience. There is little in the House which would function without students' unqualified support. The House is dedicated to breaking down the parochial boundaries which crisscross this huge campus. The reason being that an engineer who always associates with engineers will make a poor one, a medman who always associates with medmen will make a poor doctor, and the artsman who always associates with artsmen is apt to be intolerant.

The function of the House then, is to educate. It does this by putting students in a position 'to do' rather than 'have done for them', to express rather than copy, to talk rather than listen, to give rather than receive.

THE INSCRIPTION which runs around this page also is written around the walls of the Great Hall of Hart House. It is from Milton's Areopagitica, written in 1644 in defence of freedom of speech, of thought, and of the press.

of the Arbor Room has abided it to continue its student body in these times. But all this does it a good work of art. work of art is the product of imagination. It is the artist's reaction to the world around him. It should stimulate a state of relief and while exciting us with a previously unexpressed this may sound like a lot is meant is that the artist usually sensitive person conscious of the needs and in the life which surmounts and who produces work which contains the parts of that consciousness adding something new which will clarify and redefining his own and other experience. Buildings are built in us a sense of repose and surrender or merely nostalgia do not do this. It is the difference between 'being awake and being asleep.

It is one of the tragedies of our society that people are no longer able to distinguish between a feeling of nostalgia or quiescence, and response to the products of a creative mind. It is the tragedy of the society which produced Hart House that it was satisfied with it. It is the tragedy of most university education that we are not stimulated to commit ourselves wholeheartedly to the imaginative life of discovery and deeper understanding. Instead we do things which are safe—or else we do unsafe things like raiding women's residences. These are all indicative of our condition. Presumably our buildings will reflect this unless we make more demands upon ourselves.

Our reaction to the work of a creative mind would be a sense of unity with it and an entirely new feeling of joy and excitement. This is utterly different from that feeling we get from something which is not creative or imaginative at all—a feeling which is non-rejuvenating or simply static. It is sad to think that the outward forms of another civilization have to be borrowed to clothe and make respectable something which has grown out of our functional needs. Why did they try to make us accept something by 'dressing it up and arousing in us ungenerative sensations and flaccid emotions?

As it is, few people care about Hart House as a building one way or the other and they are right.

In short, the art of the period which produced Hart House was dead because it expressed longing for an earlier age and a withdrawal from the problems of its own.

A Wonderfully Active House

Hart House might be called, in the exact sense, a Wonderful House. In every corner of the gigantic building facilities for student necessities and entertainment are manifold, guided by Warden Joseph McCulley,

Reminiscences

The Hart House swimming pool actually has a longer tradition than does the House itself. The site where Hart House now stands was once McCaul's pond, part of the Taddle Creek, in which freshmen were usually ducked in the darker days of the university.

One tradition in architecture has remained in Hart House to plague both residents and visitors for 36 years. This is the chimneys—they were built so tall that no fireplace in the House has ever drawn properly.

The men of 1950 were hit hard financially a second time that year, by Hart House policy. The price of coffee was raised one cent—from seven to eight cents per cup. It's been three years. The Varsity reported at the time, since Hart House men could buy a nickel cup of coffee.

Hart House was officially opened one year after the armistice of the first World War—November 11, 1919. It was a gift of the Massey foundation, in memory of Hart Massey, father of the present Governor-General, the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, C. H. The hart is used as the symbol of the House.

The first Hart House invitational dinner in history was held in March, 1953. Previous to that time, women were only allowed to eat in the Hart House Great Hall at banquets. "This is not the thin edge of the wedge," the House Committee announced at the time.

Various suggestions have been made for the improvement of Hart House. One of the most radical ones made within the last few years was the suggestion of a Varsity Sports Editor in 1950. He advocated the sale of beer in Hart House.

This would provide a source of revenue for the University and a better atmosphere for student drinking, he suggested.

wonderfully active house

(Continued from Page 5) sandwiches and a carton of milk—and after 3 p.m.—with your girlfriend. A great variety of items — from coffee and soft drinks to athletic equipment—is continuously available in the Tuck Shop. Hart House has its own Barber Shop.

For those who want to relax for a few minutes after lunch, there are Noon Day Programmes, featuring sing-songs, movies, and musical recitals. Wednesday Afternoon Recitals and Sunday Evening Concerts provide more music for members. There is also a Glee Club for the vocalists.

The Record Room, with its fine collection of recorded music, is available to all members. If you are artistically inclined, there are evening Art Classes, and the Art Gallery, with periodic shows and talks, as well as the special Lee Collection and Art Library.

Under the grass in the quadrangle is one of the finest small Theatres in Canada. Here you may see a play, or if you aspire to be a Thespian, participate.

When you want some recreation reading where no study is allowed, the Library is the place. Here are held bull sessions under the name of Library Evenings.

Many men, now prominent in the public life of Canada, learned the art of speaking at the Hart House Debates. Three Squash Courts are available for the use of members.

Table Tennis is an organized House activity. For mental gymnastics you want the Bridge Club or the Chess Club. The Camera Club is well equipped to serve you no matter how expert you may be, and the Radio Club (VE3UOT) has a special "radio shack," with a transmitter and receiver. If you like small-arms practice the Revolver Club provides shooting in the Rifle Range, where the Archery Club also practises.

Hart House has its own Chaplain who is responsible for the spiritual life of the House; he is always available for help with personal problems. The Student Christian Movement has its offices in the House. In the Chapel are held Daily Services throughout the term.

There are Guest Rooms for the use of visitors and guests of members. There are Common Rooms in every part of the House, where members may enjoy a smoke and a chat between lectures or labs.

If you want to get away from it all for a weekend, Hart House has its own Caledon Hills Farm, operated by the Caledon Committee, which is part of the Exploration Society.

counter tenor deller

It is rare in the study of art forms, that an individual or single incident can be identified as the beginning of a new trend, style, or medium. Yet in Alfred Deller, we see the rebirth of the countertenor as a virtuoso, with a cultivated technique, and a high artistic appreciation of the medium and the music. A recital, one of the Royal Conservatory's Special Events Series, was given last Friday by Mr. Deller, with Desmond Dupre playing the lute and viola da gamba, and Robert Conant the harpsichord.

The countertenor voice is one which, at its breaking in adolescence, settles naturally in a range including that of a normal mezzo-soprano and contralto and in a quality that excludes the chest tones which give the usual male voice its vibrant and penetrating characteristics. Mr. Deller's career is exceptional in that, finding himself the possessor of a fine natural countertenor range, and with a first-rate musical background as a chorister, he undertook to train himself to a pitch of technical and artistic proficiency equalled by few singers and, I am convinced after his performance last Friday, surpassed by none.

Mr. Deller now has a small class of pupils, one of whom has already entered the concert field. Thus the revival has been the doing of one man, assisted only by a growing demand for the type of music he is able best to offer. The programme opened with a group of songs for voice and lute, and later Mr. Deller and Mr. Dupre performed a second group of songs either sung in or connected with Shakespeare's plays. Throughout these songs the singer realized his superb technical powers, producing trills, ornamental melismas, and plain vocal phrasing with an effortless purity, embellished only with an inspired interpretation that had the audience in broad smiles at Morley's Pedlar's song Will Ye Buy a Fine Dog, brought sighs in Robert Parsons' lament, Fandolpho, and licentious chuckles at the pun-line of Thomas Campion's naughtily air It Fell on a Summer's Day.

The parts of the programme where Mr. Conant and Mr. Dupre appeared without Mr. Deller were not, I am afraid, of the same high standard. Mr. Conant's harpsichord, and his playing on it of a group of sonatas by D. Scarlatti, was inadequate in tone and prosaic in interpretation. In a sonata for viola da gamba and harpsichord by J. S. Bach, a struggle between the two instruments for supremacy was won by the harpsichord, but lost by the feeling of ensemble esprit which would appear indispensable in Bach's chamber music. In his performance of some solo music for lute, Mr. Dupre did not, it seemed, draw the best and most vibrant qualities from his instrument.

The only modern work on the programme was a trio for countertenor, viola da gamba, and harpsichord, by P. Racine Erickler, an English composer now in his thirties. The work is a setting of a part of a latin hymn in honour of the passion of the Saint Eulalia. It was not easy to understand at one hearing, but its performance bore the stamp of hard work, and the ostinato figures in the harpsichord and da gamba were made clear to the listener, giving the work a cohesion and a musical reason. The vocal range proves the work to be created for the countertenor voice, and it is significant that because of Mr. Deller's struggle and self-discipline composers of our time are beginning to acknowledge the peculiar characteristics of the countertenor, and works are appearing requiring such a singer. Works which, needless to say, were in most cases written expressly for performance by Mr. Deller himself.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

HUNTER & THE HAUNTED

The Night of the Hunter, currently showing at the Odeon Toronto and Fairview, is a memorable film, memorable because it could so easily have been one of the most magnificent uses ever made of the camera's art. At its best, it reached heights of poetic and pictorial imagination that have seldom been surpassed on the screen; it is its worst, owing to a bewildering directoral heavy-handedness, it was coy, cluttered, and incredibly cloying.

The names connected with the film carry a weight all their own. Davis Grubb's haunting and beautiful novel was adapted for the screen by poet-critic James Agee, whose much-mourned death occurred before the film was released. And the guiding hand behind the camera is that of Charles Laughton, here adding film-direction to his already considerable talents.

Much of the praise, and almost all of the blame, goes to the direction. The story itself—of a crazed corn-belt evangelist's chase of two children across the Depression-ridden South—has a stark demoniacal simplicity, but the director has larded the action with pretentious symbols. Perhaps the adjective is unjust, for often the symbolism is used with delicacy and undoubted effect. Unfortunately, almost as often the use of a Manichean light-dark antithesis, gigantic figures, cross-cutting, and all the rest of the tricks, bludgeons the audience into a half-protesting insensibility.

Some mention should also be made of the director's use of camera angles that even Hitchcock could envy. Shots down a stair-well or up from a river-bed throw scenes into fantastic perspective, pointing hands quiver across the entire screen—but in so many cases the emphasis shifted, by the sheer weight of the image, from what was implied to what was perceived by the captive crowd in the dark. The impact of things seen left the audience too exhausted to think of what things mean. In short, the director is guilty of a bad (indeed, almost an artistically unforgivable) case of over-enthusiasm with his new toys.

Robert Mitchum is dramatically competent as the preacher warring single-handed against his own conception of Sodom and the other place, walking and talking with God on his (rather than His) own terms. "What's it t'be, Lawd—another widder?" he queries at the opening of the film, politely turning his eyes Heavenwards. The only radical fault in his portrayal is that "Preacher" Harry Powell emerges as a slightly comic hypocrite instead of a dementedly devout man who honestly believes that his eager knife-blade serves as Jehovah's avenging arm.

Mr. Laughton is well on the way to developing a twentieth-century Cult of the Child out of this one film, with its emphasis on the God-given strength and endurance of all children. He has been well served by Billy Chapin, here a 10-year-old with the fearful burden of guarding a hidden hoard of loot, but has been almost sunk by the fearful little moppet who plays the boy's little sister. I'll bet the little darling was livid when the production staff took the ringlets out of her hair for the frenzied screen-chase through swamp and stream.

The high priestess serving at the Grand Altar of the Archetypal Kiddiewinkie is played by old-timer Lillian Gish, as a genuinely endearing old soul who houses and cherishes the pitiful waifs of the Depression. Here again the division arises between intent and actual effect. Basically, the character has all the wisdom, beauty, and spiritual strength of the Mother-Figure. These qualities still shine through, but are slicked over in transmission. "Miz Cooper" appears as a fusion of Moses and Grandma Moses, speaking a sort of galloping bastard blank-verse (My soul is humble when I see/How little ones accept their lot...).

Two others of the cast in particular have no place in the near-mystic scheme of things, but deserve some attention for their thorough understanding of their roles. Shelley Winters is satisfyingly stolid as the hunted children's mother, yearning for the preacher and having her throat cut for her "wantonness." After a long spell in film-dom's limbo, James Gleason returns to etch the delightful little character-cameo of boatman Uncle Birdie. You can tell it's a "character" part because Birdie constantly refers to himself in the third person.

Looking back through this review, I see I've dwelt gleefully on the bad to the near-exclusion of the good. This is unfortunate, as much of the film has an evocative beauty that makes the lapses all the more exasperating. Add to this beauty a masterly handling of searing suspense and an all-over narrative tension, qualities undoubtedly possessed by The Night of the Hunter, and you have a film that's worth going 'way out of your way to see.

Laughton's method lends itself to parody and ridicule as I've probably pointed out more forcefully than was necessary, but so do most products of inventive genius. Hollywood needs more directors like Charles Laughton, I hope he will direct many more films—but I also hope that, before he does his next, someone with more experience in the film field gives him a good talking-to.

New Campus Jazz Club

A modern jazz club is being formed on the campus to give all those interested in jazz a fuller appreciation of this art form. And it is acknowledged by all leading critics that jazz is an art form; the only one America has offered to the culture of the world. However, jazz must be studied to be properly appreciated.

The primary aims of the jazz club will be to study and discuss the past, present and future of jazz. This can be done in various ways; the presentation and discussion of a paper prepared by a club member on one phase of jazz, well-known guest speakers, the playing and discussing of records, etc.

"We hope to reach all those on the campus who have an interest in jazz, and particularly those who would like to become better acquainted with it," said Roger Feather, sparkplug of the new group. "The idea has been well received by all those who have heard about it, and we expect a good turnout. There are many problems to be overcome, such as a regular meeting room, definite time, etc. There will be an inaugural meeting to discuss the further plans of the club on Wednesday or Thursday noon at a still undetermined room in UC. Check the Coming-Up and To-Day columns in the Varsity. We hope the many jazz enthusiasts, student and staff, on the campus will turn out."

UC's Production Of 'No Exit' Halted by Leading Lady's Exit

Production of "No Exit," a controversial, two-act drama by the French playwright, Jean Paul Sartre, slated for presentation here later this month, has been cancelled, director Curt Reis announced last night.

Reis said the cancellation had been forced by the withdrawal of Sandra Collis, one of four in the cast.

Miss Collis, a graduate last year of University College, is currently doing work in two shows with The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

She said last night that because of "heavy duties imposed by her work with the CBC" she felt unable to rehearse the necessary number of hours for "No Exit."

The play was being produced by the University College Players' Guild.

Reis said that "the loss of Miss Collis is certainly a disappointment to himself and to the cast but that the production date makes re-casting of the role impractical."

Miss Collis starred in last year's award-winning production of "This Earth Is Ours" directed by Reis and produced by the Players' Guild.

The play, a "philosophic melodrama" as Reis calls it, deals with the eternal damnation of three sinners to Hell. Some authorities have contended the play espouses such morally questionable acts as lesbianism and infanticide.

"No Exit" has been produced with success on Broadway, in Paris and on the London stage.

Open Window Provides Entry Trinity's Attack Best In Years

In the wee small hours of Friday morning, a battle royal raged between the rival colleges of Wycliffe and Trinity, said a Wycliffe man last night.

He said the fracas was started about midnight by a band of Trinity men, retaliating for a Wednesday night raid in which a section of Trinity's fence was carried off by Wycliffe students. Wycliffe was stoutly defended by firecracker warfare, causing a brief retreat by Trinity to Whitney Hall, where a ladder was procured.

An attempt to retrieve the Trinity fence from its position above Wycliffe's porch was foiled by the accurate aim of Wycliffe students wielding a fire hose.

Disbanded but not discouraged, several Trinity men penetrated the college by an open window, he said. They were captured, ejected by way of the fire escape, and liberally doused with cold water.

About 2:30 a.m. another Trinity band gathered in a concentrated attack on the enemy, capturing a Wycliffe hostage. The end of the encounter coincided with the arrival of police officers, who also released the bound captive.

Comment of an active participant on the Wycliffe side of the fence — "It was the best raid Trinity has made on Wycliffe in my 3 years-at this college."

Trinity participants were not available for comment.

BPhE Stands For Versatility TV Show Views Curriculum

The TV program Exploring Minds (Sundays 6:00-6:30 on CBC-TV) focussed its attention on the Physical Education course offered in the University of Toronto for its opening production of the season last night. MC Trent Frayne interviewed leading professors from the departments of Anatomy, Genetics, Hygiene, and Psychology in an attempt to emphasize the broad academic background which a phys-ed student must absorb before he can qualify for a degree.

In this particular instance both the MC's reiteration of the fact that the main aim of the phys-ed course at Toronto is to "teach students to teach others," and the duller than usual exhibition of 64c questions and answers — (Question: "Why should phys-ed students study about muscles?" Answer: "Because muscles do move joints and that's why they must know what muscles do.") — left me so benumbed and listless that I failed to register the called-for degree of surprise when informed that phys-ed students took psychology (D). However, I did shut off my set convinced that the course is "physically stimulating, mentally satisfying and socially sound."

However, in view of the high calibre of the programs Exploring Minds offered last year, it is only fair to say that there is a more than fifty-fifty chance that next week's presentation will counteract the flaccidity which permeated this Sunday's effort: Professor Creighton of the U. of T. History department and actor Robert Christie are going to bring some of the spontaneous wit, salt and humor of Sir John A. MacDonalld to tv-life.

Audax Minor

Thurs. Vote Names Mock Parl't. Reps.

A general election to pick representatives to this year's session of the U of T mock Parliament will be held November 24, Duncan Campbell, secretary-treasurer of the Political Economy club announced last night.

Students on campus will elect 98 members to sit in a three-day mock session at Queen's Park in January, Campbell said.

Election day—a Thursday—was unanimously agreed to, Campbell said, by officials of the Progressive Conservative, Liberal, CCF and Labor-Progressive parties.

The first U of T mock Parliament sat in session in the Ontario Legislature in 1951.

But since 1953, disagreement over how the parliament should be formed has led to cancellation of sessions, Campbell said.

This year's representation will be elected on a strictly proportional basis, he said.

"In the federal elections we vote members to government by constituencies," Campbell said, "but in the election on campus the votes will go simply to the parties running."

In a move to bar "joker" parties from appearing on this year's ballots, Campbell said that these stipulations would govern:

- 1) No political organization on campus not recognized by the Caput as of Nov. 4 of this year would be eligible.
- 2) Any organization appearing on ballots must have affiliations with existing Federal political parties.

Campbell said that although members would not be elected directly as in an actual Federal election, there would be "nothing to hinder" any of the political parties from supplying a list of 98 names of those who would fill the parliamentary seats if they were elected.

Not 'Threat' Says Smith 'People Could Be Killed'

Cancellation of college football games loomed as a possibility here today as a result of last Saturday's "shenanigans" at the Varsity-Queen's game in Kingston.

President Sidney Smith said last night he intended to raise the question with "responsible officials, including the University's Athletic Association, of the desirability of even discussing out the league schedule this year."

The President stressed, however, that he did not wish his statement to be taken as a threat.

"It is simply," he said, "an attempt to ascertain the facts in the interest of both spectators and players. Someone," he said, "could be killed."

President Smith said he regretted the prospect of cancelling intercollegiate football games.

"It seems too bad to think that the games might be cancelled on account of a reckless minority," he said. The President went on to say that he was waiting for more information before making a definite statement.

Seven students — two of them from the University of Toronto — were injured during a wild melee around the goal posts following Queen's 11-10 victory, and during the game.

The two U of T students were treated in hospital for nose damage doled out in a fistfight.

Two Queen's students were blinded by a so-called lime-bomb which burst in their faces. A 20-year-old Ottawa nursing student was slashed by a flying beer-bottle. Police had to battle off students to arrest an ex-Queen's student in connection with the incident.

Commenting on the near-riot, Dr. Smith said that he was concerned with what he called "the building up by retaliation after retaliation" of the incident.

"This is most unfortunate after all the warnings which were given," the President said. "I don't have the deciding power and I cannot at the moment assess the extent of the damages," he said, "but I shall write to the Principal of Queen's in an attempt to get at the facts."

The President emphasized that any repetition of the kind of performance carried on at Queen's last week-end would almost certainly mean an end to intercollegiate football.

As the smoke from Saturday's incident began to drift away last night, it appeared that five main features contributed to Saturday's melee:

(1) Gas-filled balloons set adrift by students over the jam-packed stadium (which blew up with injurious results if touched by a match or cigarette). Queen's students may have set these off.

(2) Lime-filled bags termed "lime-bombs" by the students, which burst in the faces of opposing students. These may also have been thrown by Queensmen.

(3) Containers filled with calcium hydroxide known as "smoke bombs." Varsity students may have been responsible for this.

(4) Flying beer and whisky bottles thrown from both stands.

(5) Ropes hooked around the goal posts which were tugged on by students, squashing hands and fingers in their cops. (Not clear whether Varsity or Queen's responsible.)

Macdonald M. P. Speaks Today On CCF Hopes

Donald Macdonald will speak at a meeting of the CCF in Toronto on Tuesday, Nov. 1, at 7:30 p.m. in the Victoria Hotel. Macdonald, an elected MPP for York South, will speak on "The Prospects of the CCF in Ontario."

Although the date is still tentative, it is expected that Macdonald will also speak at a meeting of the CCF in Ottawa, Monday, Nov. 2.

Macdonald said he will also deal with party structure and the possibility of having the Ontario CCF become a different party from the federal party.

Macdonald is a former MPP for York South, M. Macdonald's second organizer in the CCF. A graduate of Queen's University, he was formerly a newspaper man with the Montreal Gazette and the Ottawa Citizen. He has been active in the CCF since 1945.

Wall Of Fire Spans St. George St. As UC Celebrates Hallowe'en Night

Traffic was halted here for ten minutes last night as a raging bonfire lit by University College men stretched across St. George Street.

The incident started with a wren's roast scheduled by the boys of the UC Men's Residence and girls of Whitney Hall to be held at the corner of St. George and Hoskin.

The fun started with a small fire made of newspapers and kerosene in the centre of the quadrangle. Anyone daring to enter the quadrangle, however, was roundly doused by cold water thrown from the third floor windows (the Varsity reporter narrowly missed a ducking).

A girl, thought to be from Whitney Hall, was kidnapped by some five or six boys who almost succeeded in dragging her into the UC residence. A rival gang effected a rescue, however, before any damage was done.

Then a gang of some seven or eight boys marched up St. George to Hoskin carrying newspapers and several cans of kerosene. Newspapers were hurriedly strewn across the street at the intersection, well-soaked with the kerosene, and ignited. The ringleaders redirected traffic and the blaze roared merrily for about ten minutes.

Police arrived shortly, however, and after watching for a few minutes, ordered the students to disperse.

Five minutes later fire-reels arrived, but all that was left burning by this time were a few scraps of paper. Nevertheless, they turned the hose on full and soon all that remained was a "slippery black mess."

The police again ordered the crowd to disperse and slowly the students returned to the residence, singing the University of Toronto song lustily at the top of their lungs.

It is thought by observers no arrests will be made but a policeman, when asked at the time, replied, "I don't know yet."

J. B. Bickersteth Addresses Hart House Library Group

J. B. Bickersteth, the man who for 25 years played the part of host at Hart House, returns as guest tonight to give an address in the club's library. The one-time

Warden will speak on Medieval Canterbury at the second Hart House Library Evening at 7:30 p.m.

Mr. Bickersteth has just completed a 3,000-mile jaunt across the Dominion which took him to the Pacific coast.

Recently, he has been doing research in Canterbury, England, on medieval literature.

Earlier this university year, he had dropped in to Hart House on his way across the country, to renew old acquaintances.

It was his first visit to the campus since 1947 when he retired as Warden of Hart House.

Educated at Oxford, ex-Warden Bickersteth came to Canada in 1911 and lectured for a time at the University of Alberta.

Failure Rate Down 6%

One-Sixth Fail UC English

Results of a remedial English exam held in University College recently showed a 6 per cent improvement over last year, with some 23 per cent missing the annual composition test required of all freshmen in the college. This year the failure rate was chopped to 17 per cent.

Professor R. S. Harris of the Colleges English department said yesterday he was "pleased" with the results. In 1953, the last year the test was given, some 40 to 50 per cent failed.

Professor Harris said, however, that the improvement was not due to better teaching but to the fact that only 15 per cent of the students who wrote the paper.

Those wishing interviews must call for them by Wednesday at 5:00 p.m. on lists posted on the office door of the subject concerned.

Special assistance will be offered to all but 10 per cent of the top 10 per cent of the Department of English students, all of whom are expected to receive special attention.

A lecture on punctuation will be given in Room BUC 410 on Monday, Nov. 9, at 7:30 p.m. in Room BUC 410.

For all first-year students who did not write the paper set on Oct. 11 an examination will be held on Friday, Nov. 4, in Room BUC from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Amazed By Inaccuracy

The Editor,
The Varsity:

On reading the feature article in Monday's Varsity, we were amazed by the inaccuracy of your report on the behaviour of Toronto students at the Queen's game. With very few exceptions, the Varsity students heeded the president's plea to avoid rowdiness.

In the mob of Queen's students who swarmed around the goal posts, we saw a futile and very half-hearted attempt on the posts by a few Varsity students, which lasted only for a few moments. No damage was done. The lime that temporarily blinded the unfortunate Queen's students was thrown by other Queen's students. It is our opinion and that of many to whom we spoke at the game, that the Varsity students behaved themselves.

responsibility

Last Saturday's disturbances in Kingston would seem to indicate that some students — both here and at Queen's — do not desire a continuance of intercollegiate football.

This can be the only reasonable inference drawn from the actions of a considerable body of them which resulted in injuries to seven people.

One Queen's student is in serious danger of losing the sight of one eye; another will have his hand in a cast for weeks; and a woman student narrowly escaped being killed.

If this is sport, then universities can well afford to do without it. If this is student "shenanigans," then the time has definitely come for university authorities to impose a straight-jacket on student life.

But if it is just plain hooliganism and reckless stupidity — and we think that it is — then the time has come for all students to take stock of the situation. Those who are responsible for the particular incidents in question should realize — if they can realize anything — that injury to life, limb and property plays no part in university spirit, and that no goalpost in this world is worth a man's life.

And those people who are not directly responsible — those who only watched while the fracas went on or who stayed comfortably at home — these people also should be aware of their responsibilities.

Students whose encouragement of their weaker-minded brethren, or whose indifference to the whole affair aided in the development of this and other incidents, must also share the blame.

It is time that strong action was taken by both individual students and by the representative student councils involved to stamp out this debauchery and vandalism at university athletic contests.

Unless this is done by the students, it will be done for them by other and less gentle hands.

AND WRITE MORE:

A Suggestion - Tennis

The Editor,
The Varsity:

This fracas down at Queen's University last Saturday, which resulted in the injury of several university students, is a disgrace to the university educational system, and further illustrates the "laissez-faire" attitude of the university administration in Canadian Universities, who are shirking their responsibilities to the public and the student body.

This event at Queen's was not the least bit unexpected, as "hooliganism" has become a central theme for some time in the Canadian Educational System. It was only to be a matter of time before this lawlessness and mob rule would be pushed far beyond the code of propriety and become a serious threat to life and property.

Now if I was to go down Bloor Street and clout some poor soul over the head with a beer bottle, throw lime or some other foreign material into his eyes, or topple a sign off a respectable merchant's shop, I would soon be apprehended and whisked off to the local police station pronto and face a possible conviction involving a jail term or a severe reprimand. Skule Whitewashes Trinity 12-0 Wong, Selby Score Touchdowns

SPS handed the Trinity Panthers their first loss of the season yesterday afternoon as they waltzed to a 12-0 win. Paced by Al Wong and Ken Selby, the men of Skule took a 5-0 lead the first time they had the ball and never looked back as a solid ground attack swept around the ends for continuous gains.

The Panthers, who had not been scored upon previous to yesterday, looked surprisingly weak after knocking off Vic and St. Mikes, and were unable to get a proper offense under way. Quarterback Dave Smith was the bright light for the Artsmen, although Mike Shoemaker and two gentlemen named Saunderson came up with some good defensive ball.

By JOHN BROOKS

Selby opened the scoring early in the game as he galloped 15 yards around the right end for a touchdown. The convert attempt hit the crossbar. Trinity seemed to be headed for the tying points towards the end of the first half as they rolled for three first downs on the ground to their own 40, but an intercepted pass stopped the attack.

In the last quarter a Trinity backfielder threw the ball away as he was tackled, and ex-Baby! Lu speedster Wong picked up the loose ball and scampered 55 yards unopposed for a major. The convert was good and the Engineers led 11-0. Trinity received the kickoff and on the first play, MacDonald broke through to take the ball from Smith as he prepared to pass, and that play set up Skule for a single to round out the scoring.

The main difference between the teams was the poor blocking and tackling of the Panthers on end plays. Skule made all their yardage around the end, and it was the inability of Trinity to stop these gains which cost them the game.

St. Mikes Down Saints

While Phe II were defaulting to St. Hilda's I, another softball game worthy of spectator interest was being waged in the Trinity field. St. Mike's met St. Hilda's I in a contest that would usually be referred to as a league softball game, but to this casual observer, it was more of a Martin-Lewis fiasco. St. Hilda's lost 17-1.

Charlotte Gorman, starting on the mound for the Trinity Saints, was replaced at the top of the second by Anita Pochen as the St. Mike's gals were continuously baffling their way to victory. The fielders were continuously hampered by the mud and the water holes in center field consequently, it a bitter air on one of the fielders was a sign of a home run. The home run was hit by a member of St. Mike's, Judy Shaker was responsible for the lone St. Hilda's tally.

In the same hilarious vein the second baseman, who was M. K. ... errors than runs.

Harrier Blues Victorious

Led by Bill Varey, a determined Blue Harrier team recorded the first upset of the current season when they defeated the highly touted Wayne University team of Detroit here Saturday. Winners of their five previous meets, the Wayne squad was defeated by the Blue team with a score of 26-30.

Varey turned in his second good effort of the week, having won the intramural harrier on Tuesday. Grabbing the lead at the start of the four and one-half mile hilly course, he moved away from his two Wayne challengers at the two-mile mark, and finished a full minute ahead of his pursuers with a time of 26 minutes, 8 seconds. Glenn Martin and Joe Babb, of Wayne, finished second and third.

Toronto picked up their winning margin by placing runners in the fourth, fifth, seventh and ninth positions to back up Varey. Freshmen Ron Toop and Mike Berger finished fourth and fifth respectively, while Bill Gelling and Tom Stroud nailed down seventh and ninth positions. The Blues' other finisher, Bruce Hughes, finished tenth.

Wayne runners finishing in the second, third, sixth, eighth, eleventh and twelfth spots, said the rugged rain-swept High Park course was the toughest they had seen to date. Points were registered only by the first five finishers from each side.

Judging from Saturday's results, the Blue team stands an excellent chance of recapturing the Harrier crown from Western who were trounced by Wayne last Friday, 38-18.

The University championship Harrier race will take place in High Park at 4:30 Tuesday afternoon. The result of this race will have a great bearing on the selection of the Senior and Intermediate teams. The intermediate team will see action first, traveling to McMaster this Saturday for the Intercollegiate finals. The senior team will compete in the Senior Intercollegiate finals to be held at Kingston on November 12.

Interfac Summary

Trinity salvaged a 4-4 tie with Meds IV in interfaciary language action yesterday afternoon. Eric Paterson, managed the first three with three goals for the Red and Black, with Smith adding a single. Kerr duplicated Paterson's effort, scoring three for the Doctors, while Farrow added one.

Junior SPS shut out St. Mike's 2-0 in soccer action on the back campus. Milich was the key man for the Engineers, scoring both goals, one in each half.

In a volleyball game played in Hart House, Dentistry C's dropped Vic Commerce in two games, 15-6, 15-3.

COTC Invades Queen's On Army Training Plan For Frolic and Football

Kingston, October 31.—(Staff)—What started out as a small tour of military training centres here by a few COTC recruits from the University of Toronto ended in a "double-barrelled football weekend" for some 40 students.

Timed to coincide with the Queen's week-end, the COTC held free version of the time honored football joy jaunts. No one was obligated in any way at all to join the COTC or anything else. The only fixed cost was $2.00 for a ticket to the game.

The 23 artsmen outnumbered the four medsmen, six engineers, four architecture students, two dental students and one divinity student, but faculty differences were forgotten (except for the occasional cheer) as the cross-section of the campus moved off on their never-to-be-forgotten visit to Queen's.

The trip was under the command of Major D. H. Gunter, resident staff officer of the COTC's Toronto contingent. Second in command was 2 Lt. Joel Wagman, 1 Osgoode Hall, of the contingent.

Early rising was the order of the day for Saturday, when the group split in two for a tour of the Signal School and the Royal Canadian Electrical and Mechanical Engineering School across the road.

After a highly interesting tour of the training schools, the boys boarded the bus and headed for the Eastern Ontario Area Headquarters, near the Stadium, for lunch in the Officers' Mess. They then left for the game and innumerable parties afterwards.

One of the few responsibilities the guests had was to get their own dates for the evening. It presented no problem and everyone enjoyed his outing for the evening.

As well as the festivities provided by Queen's, the Officers' Mess at Headquarters and at the School of Signals were also included in the evening tour of parties.

On Sunday morning after breakfast the group visited the Royal Military College to be taken on a tour of the dorms, classrooms and nearby Fort Frederick.

Said Major Gunter, "This trip has been most useful in giving the students some conception of the extensive facilities available for summer training."

As well as the Toronto group, ten students from OAVC took advantage of the trip to see the game and take the tours.

The offer to go was open to everyone without obligation to join. Facilities limited the number who could go to the 40 lucky ones, who, unlike the much larger group who visited Queen's last week-end, won't be counting their small change for coffee this week.

First Co-Ed JCR Meet

For the first time in history, the Women's Undergraduate Association will meet in UC's JCR. The topic is "Abolition or Revision" of open meetings for University College Women.

Lack of interest and a feeling that open meetings are not necessary has led to the debate, said Rhonda Straus, publicity Director of the WUA.

"It has been felt somewhat undemocratic to have the 30 people who usually attend meetings decide policy for all 400 UC women."

"Constructive criticism and suggestions are looked for at the meeting," a member of the executive stated. "We hope that the meetings can be revised to serve a useful function rather than abolishing them altogether," she said.

Gay Sellers, president of the WUA, said, "The executive is not trying to abolish open meetings because they are bad or because they are dull. We are concerned whether or not they serve a useful purpose."

Also scheduled for discussion is a reorganization of activities to allow non-residence girls to take a greater part in university life.

In an effort to streamline the meeting, executive reports will be omitted. Discussion will centre around the two main issues.

A Suggestion - Tennis

This conviction would undoubtedly endanger my job, and the stigma attached would cancel any opportunity of obtaining an honorable, self respecting job in the future.

But a university student can go to a football game; destroy university and personal property; club some innocent young thing over the head with the nearest weapon, namely a whiskey bottle; and throw lime into others' eyes, to say nothing of rolling down the rows stone drunk and what happens!

The university authorities appeal to the students to please stop! I know they make Red Feather Appeals and all the more power to them. But an appeal, when stringent disciplinary measures should be taken, seems to me to be on the point of being ludicrous. I know old fashioned discipline that our fathers used to know way back twenty years ago is liable to antagonize the students responsible and to hurt their self ego. No doubt the psychologists of the university who believe in such things as self expression would emphasize that it might have serious psychological and emotional implications, but let's face it; it's getting dangerous going to university football games.

Next thing you know, we will have to wear armoured suits and carry pikes to the football games. It seems obvious to me that it is a definite responsibility of the university to preserve law and order at university football games and all other events under the auspices of the university, so that the majority of the student body may once again enjoy the fine spectacle of football rather than an unruly mob of hoodlums carrying on their vandalism.

If the administrative body of the university is incompetent to police these events, let's call off the football games and take up table tennis.

Princess Was Right Say UofT Students Despite Sympathies

BY JANE EDGAR

Princess Margaret has done the right thing, but there is something wrong when the laws and customs of a country can destroy a person's chance for happiness.

Such was the general sentiment expressed by 35 students questioned here last night regarding the Princess' decision not to marry Group Captain Peter Townsend.

Eighteen out of 30 students answered "yes" to the question "Did Margaret do the right thing?"

Typical comments were: "It's the correct decision to keep up the honour and dignity of the ancient British tradition... Her duty to crown and church comes first... She is not an ordinary person... She is a symbol, an example to thousands of women the world over."

But these comments were in nearly every case tempered by remarks such as "a shame"—"It's just unfortunate she was under too much pressure... she had no choice" as a private individual it's too bad." And there was universal indignation at the way in which the royal family has been dragged through the mud during the controversy.

Less imperially-minded students approved the princess' choice because she had made it. "It's her life and she would have to live with him. I believe that if she had wanted to marry Peter Townsend she would have married Peter Townsend, being a woman."

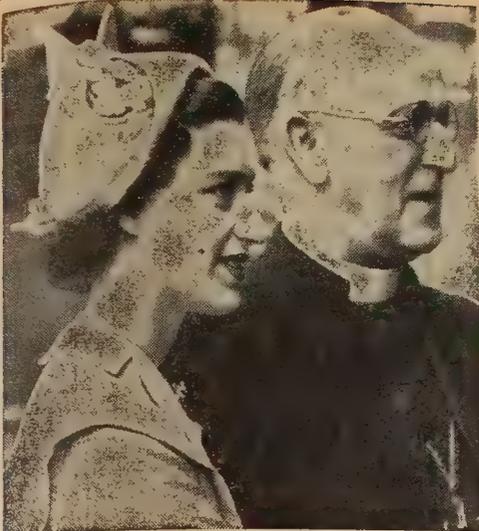

Those students who were opposed to Margaret's decision were vehement. "Ridiculous to sacrifice one woman's life to a—'Commonwealth.' It's sheer perversion... 'The Princess' happiness should be placed above country, state, religion." "England is ruled by the prime minister—why not restrict his marriage?"

Feeling ran high on other questions put to the students. Remarriage of divorced persons as a general principle was approved 17 to 7, though with numerous reservations.

After all, said Laurence Cohen, (II UC) "We can't have these divorced people running off and getting married; they might have a happy marriage, and then when would they have time to suffer for former mistakes?"

On a third question: "Should royally's marriage choice be re-

He who wisely would restrain the reasonable Soul of man within due bounds, must first himself know perfectly, how far the Territory and Dominion extends of just and honest liberty. As little must he offer to bind that which God hath loosened, as to loosen that which he hath bound. The ignorance and mistake of this high point hath heaped up one huge half of all the misery that hath been since Adam. In the Gospel we shall read a supercilious crew of Masters, whose holiness, or rather whose evil eye, grieving that God should be so facile to man, was to set straighter limits to obedience than God hath set, to enslave the dignity of man, to put a garrison upon his neck of empty and over dignified precepts...

"Medieval Culture" Bickersteth's Topic At Library Meeting

"Canterbury is not English; it is just as much Canadian, it is everybody's heritage," J. E. Bickersteth, ex-Warden of Hart House declared here last night. Mr. Bickersteth spoke last night at the second Hart House Library Evening on the history, architecture and records of the monastery and cathedral at Canterbury in medieval times.

Since retiring Mr. Bickersteth has been living at Canterbury, where his family also lived, doing research on the records of the medieval period. He said that until recently the libraries of the great churches were little used, but that in the last few years there has been a tremendous surge of interest in medieval culture, and every major library now has its own archivist.

By illustrating part of his talk with slides Mr. Bickersteth was able to point out the salient features of the architecture of the cathedral and the changes which were made from the 12th century to the present time.

Despite the fact that Canterbury was in the centre of the Battle of Britain, little damage was done. All the good glass windows, some dating from before 1200, were preserved, he said.

Using his slides Mr. Bickersteth described the Hugenot Chapel, in which a service has been conducted every week in French since it was built in 1560.

In the cathedral are the tombs of many early English leaders, the most famous perhaps being the tomb of the Black Prince, whose shield and banner were recently restored and put under glass and key to preserve them.

...The Papers...

Toronto newspapers, like those all over the world, capitalized on the unhappy love affair of Britain's pretty Princess and her divorced airman lover. Prof. McLuhan of St. Michael's college summed it up: an unhappy marriage of headlines and pictures. —VSP by Stan Klosevych

CCF'er Berates Apathetic Public, Cynical Attitude

According to Donald MacDonald, MPP for York South, the CCF will play an important role in Canada's political future.

Speaking to a group of some 40 students he said that the opposition forces in Canadian politics are too small to be effective.

Moreover, the C.C.F. Ontario leader charged apathy on the part of the Canadian electorate which is reflected in the small percentage of people who turn out to vote on election day.

"The healthy critical attitude of the Canadian voter," he said, "has degenerated into a destructive, defeatist cynicism."

The fact that there are no real differences between the Liberal and Conservative parties has brought about deepening lethargy in Canadian politics, he said. In the past he said, such a situation usually resulted in a re-alignment of political parties, with the S.P. forming the government and the old parties forming the opposition.

Princess' Tragedy Benefit For Royalty ...and Peter

The unhappy romance between Princess Margaret and Peter Townsend has helped produce a perfect marriage, Professor H. M. McLuhan of St. Michael's College said last night—the marriage of big headlines and page-size pictures.

Professor McLuhan said that a personal tragedy had been turned into a boon for both the Royal Family and the newspapers. The Royal family, he contended, had been lacking much-needed publicity in modern terms.

The key-note to the whole thing, he said, was photography. He called the Hollywood-like focus on the romance, "cruel."

"The Royal family has been forced into competition with Hollywood," the St. Mike's English Department professor said, "and now they're hardly 'royalty' any more; rather it's Hollywood that's become the royalty."

Professor McLuhan called it a competition that is hardly fair. "It's the result of the perfect marriage of headlines and the photograph—the headline is really a photograph itself; it's a picture, a situation in words."

Professor McLuhan, a well-known campus-figure, was a member of the communications seminar.

Missing Art Entries Investigated Artists Receive Explanations

An investigation into the loss of several pictures from the tour of the 1954-55 Art Contest is being held. Items, a NFCUS publication, announced recently.

Letters of explanation and apology are being sent to those whose pictures have disappeared, it said. No new information on the lost short stories has become available, but it is hoped that the parcel containing the stories can be located with the help of the Post Office.

The Dalhousie NFCUS committee have placed on sale plastic-coated book covers, the NFCUS bulletin also announced. The book covers are in Dal colours with the Dal Crest and "Dalhousie University" on the front and "The Tiger and "NFCUS" on the back.

Check Mate

By FRANK R. ANDERSON AND GEORGE BERNER

Solutions of the chess studies from the previous issue of the chess column:

R. Refi. No. 1: 1. KN7, PR5; 2. KB6, KN3 (otherwise the White King will be able to protect his Pawn); 3. KK5! (note the diagonal approach of the White King which enables him either to catch the Black Pawn or to protect and subsequently promote his own seemingly forsaken Pawn), PR6

(if 3... KxP, then 4. KB4 and the White King is within the "square" of the Black Pawn whose capture is then unavoidable), 4. KQ6, PR7; 5. PB7, PR8Q; 6. PB8Q—draw!

R. Refi. No. 2: 1. KN6, PB4; 2. KxNP! (2. KxBP? would be a fatal error, because then Black would have the precious "tempo" to attack and get rid of the White Pawn, while his own connected Pawns would constitute an impregnable fortress), PB5; 3. KB6! (the same manoeuvre along the main diagonal for the same twofold purpose: either to catch up with the Black BP or to defend and queen his own lonely QB-Pawn).—the rest of the solution is similar to that of the preceding study, e.g.: 3... PB6; 4. KK6, PB7; 5. PB7 etc. with an easy draw.

New Ending Studies:

The following two ending studies have a similar "leitmotiv"; they prove that there are endings in which a Bishop and a Pawn are stronger than a Queen. This hint should suffice to help our readers to solve these tricky problems which, by the way, might easily occur in their own practice. Therefore, we take the liberty of advising our readers to study these "beauties" very carefully in order to apply the new ideas in the usual lunch-break games in the Hart House Chess Club; imagine the surprise of your partner when you will finish him off "a la Rink" or "a la Kasparyan"!

H. Rink (a famous French composer of problems and studies): White: KKR1, BQ4, NK2, Pawns: Q6, KB3, KN2 (6); Black: KKR5, QQ6, Pawns: Q2, KN3, KR4 (5). White to play and WIN.

G. Kasparyan (a brilliant contemporary Soviet composer of problems and studies):

White: KKR1, RQ2, BKN1, Pawns: QR4, KN2, KR3 (6); Black: KKN6, Pawns: QR4, K7, KB6, KN4, KR4 (6). White to play and WIN.

The "Rink" position is simpler and involves a maximum of about 5 moves, whereas the "Kasparyan" study requires about 7 moves; both contain sacrifices and the so-called "silent" moves.

UC Theatre Night

Meet The Cast

Friday night, Nov. 11, will be "Theatre Night" at UC, the Lit. and the W.U.A. decided at a joint meeting Friday. It will celebrate the Players' Guild's first venture into Hart House in many years.

After R.U.R. on Friday night all University College students and graduates attending the show will be invited to the Men's Residence for a Meet the Cast and Players' Guild party, with dancing and refreshments.

DaVID DunsMuir, Players' Guild president and producer of R.U.R., said, "From both my official viewpoints, I'd endorse the UC theatre night as a 'constructive college enterprise, promising well for the Players' Guild and general interest in it."

R.U.R. ("Rossum's Universal Robots") is the drama in three acts and an epilogue chosen by UC in conjunction with St. Mike's as their second joint production. Their first show was Brigadoon last February.

More Check Mate

The following game affirms the opinion that the formation with PQ3 in the Ruy Lopez opens up very good prospects for White, if Black has played... PQ4. This game also supports the modern theory of the center, which dictates a reserved policy to increase the effect of later manoeuvres.

BLUES WILL BE AT FULL STRENGTH

Rich Bethune Returns To Action In Saturday's Tilt With Western

For the first time since before the season started the Blues are at full strength, and barring the ugly hand of fate they'll stay that way for this Saturday's important game with Western, and next week's playoff for the Yates Cup.

Halfback Rich Bethune returned to camp Monday night, minus the cast he has worn since his neck injury in a pre-season exhibition game against the OAC Aggies. McGill game with torn rib cartilage, ran last night without pain, and should be ready for next week's league final. In addition to this good news coach Bob Masterson welcomed six guards to practice last night for the first time in several weeks.

Bethune will be a great help to the Blues on defence at the halfback spot, and will probably see some offence against Western from right half. Watt won't play against the Mustangs, and end

Vic Gals Best Snilda's 21-17

In a fast, close-checking game last night, Vic Sophs downed St. Hilda's Jr. 21-17. True to her usual excellent game Mary Foster opened the scoring and managed to keep the well organized Scarlet and Gold Team ahead throughout the entire game; although the Saints pressed hard during the four quarters. The half ended with Vic leading 13-7.

Saint Hilda's came back fast in the second half, but were unable to stop the might of Vic. Mary Foster was high scorer, with 14 points, followed by Pam Miles, with 8, and Penny Linell with 6. Worthy of mention on the guard lines was the fast work of Barb Bully for Victoria and for Trinity. Cecil Phillips.

Jr. Skule Pastes UC 26-5 Defensive Team Gets Four

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Defensive end Ted Reid, scoring on two intercepted passes and a fumble, tallied three touchdowns to lead SPS Jr. to a 26-5 victory over University College yesterday. In all, the Engineers' defensive team scored four of the victors' five majors.

UC Tops Skule Allen Pots Nine

UC Firsts continued their unbeaten streak in interfaculty lacrosse yesterday afternoon, overcoming Skule Firsts 16-12. Bob Allen again was high man for the Red and White with nine goals. Stan Labanovich added five and Bruce Lee two. Reese scored four for Skule, Chabrian three, Kearney two, and Wawrychuk, Falby, and McMurthey one each.

Emmanuel shut out Pharmacy

3-0 in soccer action with Kirkwood performing the hat trick. Trinity B's defeated UC II 2-0. Thompson and Davies scored for the Black.

In volleyball action Pre-Meds defeated Trinity B's 15-5, 15-11, while Law overcame Emmanuel 15-9, 15-9.

Don Smith injured his ankle again against the Gaels last week. Jack Rogers' shoulder is still bothering him, but he should be ready for Saturday so that the Blue ground attack will be at its strongest, while the defensive set-up should be even better.

Western may be without full-back Ralph Simmons when they visit Saturday. Simmons had a bad leg in the McGill game, and didn't carry the ball much against the Redmen. Doug Aitchison and Brian Britton are also reportedly injured, while end Bob Labett has a bad shoulder.

"It's hard to sell Western short," said Masterson last night, "the Mustangs had a lot of bad breaks against McGill. They literally fumbled away two touchdowns to the Redmen. It's also hard to picture Western not winning a game this season, no matter how bad they are."

Smart Doubtful Starter As Seconds Ready For Rams

When the Western Colts hit town on Friday last to engage the Baby Blues, they were heralded as a power-packed club which was sure to give our boys a rough time. At four o'clock on the same Friday, we felt that other than a good quarterback (good enough to play for the Mustangs the next day), a good end, and a comparatively fair halfback, the supposed power of the Colts was non-existent.

And yet if stories issuing from Aggie-town are in any way true, this Western team may just end up in second place in the Intermediate standings. OAC is having team trouble, so the story goes, and so the 17-15 win over Ryerson last week would indicate. If Western can upset the Aggies on Saturday, it makes things all the easier for the Baby Blues, who actually have it pretty easy anyway.

Bob Smart picked up a severe charley horse on Friday and is a doubtful starter on Friday when the Ryerson Rams move in to try to make amends for the 29-0 shellacking they absorbed earlier in the season from the Rinkies.

Coach Kennedy is not sure who will be playing from the Blue roster, but at least two will be in action.

Other than Smart, the Baby Blues will be at full strength for the Ryerson tilt and unless Ted Toogood has created a miracle in three weeks, the Rams should be easy prey for the high-flying Little Blues.

UC Cleans Up Wins Harrier

With its football and lacrosse teams riding along in first place in their respective leagues, UC added another winner yesterday as its harrier team won the first five places in the University harrier race. By turning in a perfect low team score of 15, the five UC runners will represent Varsity in the Intercollegiate Harrier finals at Queen's next Saturday.

Freshman Bill Varey turned on a last minute sprint to edge out fellow frosh Mike Berger by 50 yards in a winning time of 27:16. Close on their heels were Tom Stroud, Bruce Hughes and Ron Toop. All five men turned in times under twenty-eight minutes over the four and a half mile High Park course.

The sixth to tenth positions went to M. MacLeod (SPS), Bill Gelling (SPS), J. Stewart (SPS), Gord Hueston (Vic) and John Hetherington (SPS) respectively. These five runners will journey to McMaster on Saturday for the Intermediate Intercollegiate finals as representatives of the U. of T.

Leafs Announce Reid's Signing

Toronto Maple Leafs of the NHL announced yesterday the signing of former University of Toronto and Marlboro junior star Dave Reid for the next two years.

Reid is a third year Engineering student and will play home games only with the Leafs, beginning tonight against Detroit.

Playing last season with the Intercollegiate champion Varsity Blues, Reid amassed 27 points in twelve games, leading the league with 17 goals. He will give added strength to the Leafs at left wing, a position still weak in this year's squad.

Before playing with the Blues, Reid had two seasons with the OHA Junior 'A' Marlboros, where he played at both centre and left wing.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Some people can play winning chess blindfolded, some of the best trout are caught in the blackest night-time, and they say Ty Cobb knew the habits of certain batteries so well he could correctly call a sequence of deliveries while facing the rear wall of the dugout, but nevertheless the fact remains that sport was meant to be looked at. We are given to understand that certain people are being accused of failing to do this and of channelling their energy in the direction of goalposts, beer bottles, lime bags and other such unimportant paraphernalia while ostensibly watching a football game.

We can only be given to understand this because we were there, and we didn't see any of this extra-curricular activity in progress. But evidently it happened, and while it wasn't on a scale requiring the present rather super-complete coverage being given by the undergraduate press, we would suggest that there is more to it than meets the eye.

Nevertheless the fact still remains that sport was meant to be looked at, and we would just suggest that those people, if there were any, who enjoyed themselves more by participating in this sideline activity, missed out on the greatest game we have ever had the pleasure to watch on the Canadian gridiron since the war.

It appears that some of the trouble can be traced to the consumption of spirituous liquors while the match was in progress. We believe that this is inevitable. The standard excuse for such a stunt is that the autumn weather often leaves the body a little chilled and that some sort of stimulant, in the form of a little medicinal liquor, is needed to prevent the chill from becoming anything more than a tickling sensation in the toes. We will admit, however, that this consumption has of late extended to the limit, and that some chaps have been known to pass out at football games, thus defeating the original purpose of our modern stadiums, that of providing accommodation for a large number of spectators.

Obviously the consumption of beer is dangerous. There is no receptacle for the empty bottles and the excited spectators. It is necessary to dispose of the now useless bottle, throws it away, he cares not where. Firstly, beer is a lousy frost repellent. If you can't wear flight boots and a fur coat, and you simply have to drink, you're better off with liquor. You can't consume it nearly as quickly, and you have less bottles to throw away. If you are that serious about it you may have purchased a flask of sorts, which you would not be inclined to part with. Secondly, you don't need to drink to keep warm, be one of the boys, or enjoy a football game. The tension in the fourth quarter of Saturday's game alone should have been enough to keep even the most casual of spectators completely fired up. Thirdly, if you must drink at the game, do it in small quantities. If you want to get plastered and be in style, stay at home and listen to the Argonaut game. We don't suppose for a minute that any college football team wants to represent a bunch of freshmen. Besides, there is about all that will help the Argonauts' playoffs or not.

Evidently there are those who can create trouble without the internal aid of alcohol at the game. These people have received their stimulant prior to game time, or else they are the old-fashioned type who go to a football game to see it, to cheer for the 'home team'. This last group are fired up because the ball team won a tough one against tremendous odds, or alternately because the sting of defeat bites deep when you lose with seconds to go. We wish there were more of them. They leave the stadium dejectedly, because defeat hangs heavy when you really follow the Blues', but they can look forward to going back in two weeks and "knocking those so-and-so's flat right in their own backyard."

The don't need to capture the goalposts, throw lime-bags, and lose their tempers because they lost. And why should they? Queen's need their goalposts more than we do, we've got a set of our own. Besides the ones in Richardson Stadium are pretty well mouldy with age anyway. And a lime-bag doesn't accomplish anything more than mutilating the field, if you get it that far, or blind a couple of good friends if you don't. Why not throw water bombs if you've got to cut up. They'd be a good deal funnier, and might even freeze over in the cold weather. That'd be a real riot. Meanwhile the same goes on.

Without sounding as if our bag of sour grapes is sitting on the desk, we might just add that facilities at Queen's are hardly conducive to the best in football spectating. The ushers, if they have any, don't keep the students of the field at half-time, or with 23 seconds left. The public address system is poorly informed and the policemen, again if there are any, appear nonchalant. We saw one when we went in. He was admitting one of Kingston's numerous urchins who appeared to be in bad straits about a ticket. We didn't stop to investigate, but observed the urchin later making nuisances of themselves within the stadium. No ushers were available for comment.

Let's add it all together and see what happens. Let's drink at the game if it's cold, and let's drink liquor if we have to. Let's drink at the hotel if it's warm, and let's drink anything we can get our hands on. Let's leave the Gaels their goalposts and stay on the good side of the touchlines until the game's over. Let's stay in the stands side at half-time and watch the Queen's Pipe and Pennywhistle Band do its act. Let's cheer for the team, whether ahead or behind, and let's give the cheerleaders something to catwaul about. Let's leave our props in the upstairs attic and take the little woman to the game instead. And let's go down there and whip them right in their own backyard and win or lose let's behave like we went to University.

Blue Notes . . . Trinity's stalwarts, comprising a good portion of the Varsity senior rugby team will test their skill against the Medsman in the annual English sport this afternoon at 1:00 on the back campus. Provost Seelye may kick off. Blue basketball team opens against the Northtown Tri-Bells in St. Mike's gym this evening at 8:30.

a spotlight can burn

Young children get their emotional stimulation out of Donald Duck's pratfalls. Older children get thrills from criminals brought to justice. Adolescents are enraptured by semi-moral, syrupy love stories. Adults, it would seem, expect to get their vicarious sensations from newspapers.

This, at least, seems to be the assumption which has motivated the disgusting coverage that the question of Margaret's marriage has received.

Almost every paper — except the immovable Times — has hastened to dip its hands into the private lives of these two people and come out with some fascinating detail.

In Toronto we can read how Townsend stuck his hand in his pocket and kicked savagely at the pebbles on a driveway, how "the innocent party to a divorce, whose bedroom light had burned until 2 o'clock, did not smile as he walked away with his host's wife, Lady Nevill." We can conjecture about the next suitor to come under the merciless glare of a public stare.

If treatment of royalty has come to this, perhaps we should choose them by Gallup popularity-poll, or by beauty contest or some other method of star appeal that would prepare them for the role they will have to play.

Princess Margaret must have been greatly consoled and helped in her choice to know that millions were following her agony in all the intimate details, watching and waiting like a crowd in front of a man about to jump from a tall building. She must have been glad to know that she was providing an emotional stimulus, a catharsis, for all the people lacking a personal drama.

And Peter Townsend. He must have been comforted to know that a world of unsuccessful lovers were all kicking the pebbles in their driveways in sympathy. He must have been glad to see the reporters on his front lawn, waiting with pencils to note his every gesture of dejection.

Much has been said in newspapers about the intimidation of church and state and their interference in her private life. Yet their interference is as nothing compared to the pressure of intimate publicity, and the pre-decision conjectures.

We do not deny that a newspaper must cover such an event, that it is part of its function in reporting news. Nevertheless there might be a modicum of good taste exercised by editors even in the face of a competition which often forces an appeal to the lowest level of public interest.

In Good Queen Bess' days, royal marriage was one of the chief means of strategy. We wonder if even that staunch a person might not have been precipitated into a marriage with one of her suitors if she had had the familiar masses urging her in many sized print. — "Don't Stay Spinster."

Teachers Can't?

But They Try Hard

This letter is in reply to an editorial in The Varsity of October 18 which dwelt on the defects of teachers. It was written by E. MacMillan, Grad Studies, who here reviews sympathetically the work of a teacher.

The Editor, The Varsity.

I have been writing since October 18 for some OCE student to rise to the defense of his profession in reply to the article in The Varsity of the above date. But perhaps it is up to one who has experienced the satisfactions and frustrations of the profession to take up the glove.

Despite the low scores obtained by students in Education Courses in the scholastic aptitude and intelligence tests in the U.S. universities; despite a reverence for a Shaw who could say:

"Those who can, do:
Those who can't, teach."

I still think some understanding of the position of the teacher in any community — that jack-of-all-trades — should be of vital interest to students — in Arts and Engineering with their average intelligence of over 75% and all other courses which were not far behind — and above all to teachers-in-training.

I have taught public school in settlements in Northern Ontario where a train was the only evidence of civilization; in a mining town and in a southern Ontario rural school as well as on a large city staff. I have talked to teachers with even more varied experience. Let me say that I do not disparage other trades, but could any other professional group lay claim to such unusual requests as teachers are expected to fulfill?

In the first five years of experience, one teacher to my knowledge was asked to:

1. conduct a religious service when the student-minister and the pianist both fell ill on the same Sunday
2. sew up an injured piglet

3. give first aid to a severe case of blood-poisoning
4. produce a play
5. lend active support to a singing society
6. learn to smoke and play pinochle because these pursuits proved to the settlers that he really was a part of the community.

So much for adaptability and aptitude!
Perhaps the student body is unaware of the Extension Department and its prodigious activity. Among the numerous courses offered, are subjects leading to a B.A. Degree through the Teachers' General Course.

Night after night, week after week, month after month, year after year, teachers spend hours snatched out of a full life to attain degrees. During the summer months, the relentless drive continues. Some of these men and women do not stop at the B.A. level; they go forward to post-graduate work in Education and allied fields.

There is the activity of teaching itself — by no means a sideline, though from this writing you might have been misled into thinking so. According to his position on the staff, and the size of the school, a teacher might meet from 20 - 200 persons daily.

Surely it is evident that teaching requires reasonable intelligence, originality, knowledge, patience, and some understanding of or sympathy for problems of young people.

Teaching is a dynamic occupation; its interactors are human beings. The rewards of the profession can be tremendous; its disappointments overwhelming. It is a fine field — let no one tell you anything to the contrary.

OUR READERS WRITE:

What Irreparable Harm!

The Editor,

The Varsity:

I am surprised that you should have accepted for publication the article "Pre-Marital Mysteries" by Mr. W. R. Chadwick.

If it were written first to fill space then things have certainly reached a new low when The Varsity finds difficulty in procuring substantial material in what is reputed to be a bee hive of intellectualism.

Further it is paradoxical that the people who criticize the commercial papers for offering a critical reading public such plebeian fare on which to chew, should themselves present the same kind of diet in a publication that I am told is the creation of the intellectual elite.

The facts regarding European women are in direct contradiction of the facts and if anyone can be proud of what is suggested to be the North American tradition, then his ability to make a valuable judgement is very questionable.

In addition the writer could not pretend that this is an attempt at serious social analysis relative to the behaviour of College men and women before marriage.

Finally, if the writer is jesting, then his article is to be doubly condemned. The unfortunate fact is that there are young men and women on the campus who have not got a clue as to how they should behave towards each other and who are glib and naive enough to accept this mode as a proper method of behaviour.

What irreparable harm can be done!

Trinity

Utter Nonsense

The Editor, The Varsity:

On reading the utter nonsense written by The Varsity concerning the smoke bomb set off by Varsity students last Saturday, we feel compelled to state the following facts.

1. There was only one true smoke bomb set off at the game. It was of a type which has been used for smoke screens and definitely did not contain any compounds of calcium.
2. It was not thrown and the container referred to was one slightly used paper pie plate set flat on the ground.
3. It was set off in an open spot on the field such that the wind would not carry the smoke towards the stands.

4. It could not have possibly been "one of the five main features" of the melee after the game because it was set off at half time.

We would like to congratulate The Varsity and their reliable sources on their very fine guess that Varsity students set the smoke bomb off. We should also like to draw to the attention of those responsible for the smoke bomb in our float parade that repetition of such an act may lead to cancellation of future float parades.

Library Agonizing

The Editor,

The Varsity:

I should like to voice a common complaint — the inefficiency of the main university library. Its ultra-modern atmosphere is incongruous with its medieval system of lending, or more accurately, hiding books.

To spend agonizing hours only to hear infallibly: "So sorry; the book is out," is the height of frustration.

I remember one afternoon starting out blithely at two o'clock, hoping to extricate some books from the unwilling library staff. After waiting for two hours I discovered, to my unspeakable joy, that, although three of the four books were being hoarded by members of the staff, as usual, one was actually in!!!

I seized it before they could decide that it was reserved and whisked it out of the library. Outside I opened it with glee... it was in Latin!

By the way, have you noticed the little man standing on the top of Hart House Tower lately?

VILE SEAT

bob-up-and-down "The Shrike"

CRITIC IN THE DARK

It was ambition that killed Caesar and too much of it has done the same for Victoria College's Bob Revue of '55. The Vic show had some extremely good writing, apt staging and impressive musical arrangement, but an over-long story, lacking noticeably in point, and useless repetition of songs and gimmicks provided more than enough straws to break any show's back.

From our sweet seats, back near the cloakroom — courtesy (?) of Vic — we were sufficiently removed from the stage to be able to consider, not only the Bob Revue, but, more generally, campus shows at large. In many ways it seemed to us that the faults most evident in the Bob Revue were typical of other College shows. Most apparent was the attempt to do a really impressive show, an intention purely laudable, though the product was something less. Straining for effect, however, usually removes all chance of achieving it, as was most evident in the Bob Revue.

Characters, such as Louie the Hunchie, who could have been used as foils to get a truly humorous effect, were rendered ballast by over-use. The first time Louie said "I'm hunching, I'm hunching like crazy!" it was funny. The second and countless times after that the line was used, it was obviously being milked and the laughs just didn't come.

It was unfortunate that the Revue had to be so overloaded that it dragged, tortoise style, because stripped to a skeleton the Bob Revue would probably have been a quality show. The cast can be summed up with the evaluation "exceptionally fine," the best work coming from Dick Dean as Sammy Betzel, in strictly a supporting role.

Good use was made of the singing ability of Dave Watts, and it is possible this it would have been satisfying entertainment. Very effective and a definite asset to any show was 'Vampira, Ann Lloyd, who played a most appealing blood-sucker, while Molly Hewitt, as Hecate, was a bloodcurdler.

The only real point of having the warlocks in the show seemed to be the chance they gave Gord Sheppard to deliver himself of a spiel touting Swansdown Snake Mix, a real treat for witches, warlocks and ghouls in general.

Since the Bob Revue comes first in the line of College shows for this year it sets the standard for coming Colleges either to top or miss. Talent — and music-wise the other shows may have trouble matching Vic, but as long as they have less than 14 scenes in two acts they have an excellent chance of bettering the Bob Revue standard.

The trouble with Vic, as previously and persistently noted, was that blood-curdler Hecate and friends, good as they were, had so much to curdle that the show was all curd.

Roma Butler

Hart House At 5

Roma Butler, young soprano of the Toronto Opera Festival, will sing at the second of the Wednesday 5 O'clock Hart House Concerts. A native of Newfoundland, she came to the Conservatory five years ago on a scholarship in the school's Artist Diploma Course.

In 1954 she was acclaimed for her performance as Susanna in Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro in the Toronto Opera Festival.

Her program today includes four Schubert songs, two of the Bridal Songs of Cornelius, three of the songs from Mahler's "Youth's Magic Horn," and four German folk songs which were arranged by Brahms.

AISLE SEAT

SWEETEST SYMPATHY

The production of Tea and Sympathy at the Royal Alec this week is a passing fair one, and there is really no point in ramming headlong into the ground a second-run presentation that now lacks its original star, Deborah Kerr, and through wide publicity, its original capacity to shock.

The primary virtues of the present production, featuring Maria Riva as the school master's wife, Laura; Alan Baxter as the schoolmaster Bill Reynolds; and Robert Higgins as the 'off-horse' school-boy Tom, are its surprisingly adequate supporting cast and the practised skill with which Alan Baxter plays the schoolmaster. Robert Higgins' Tom failed to move me as Don Dubb's interpretation of the role did last January. Maria Riva's Laura is too much like Deborah Kerr's for the audience not to expect as much satirism from her.

Unfortunately she does not succeed in giving this much, creating only a Laura who is just too sentimental, too emotionally concerned, and whose characterization is marred in more than one instance by downright hamminess. How an actress could avoid getting bogged down in emotional slush periodically in a role that is approximately 90% undiluted emotion, I don't know, but Deborah Kerr certainly played it with a lighter touch and did not feel obliged to round out every speech with a husky wailing, oh-the-injustice-of-it-all kind of quiver, as Maria Riva does.

My quarrel with this particular production, however, is secondary to my quarrel with the author of the play itself. Capitalizing as heavily, dramatically, as he does solely on the explosive impact of words like 'homosexual', 'fairy', and 'queer', without developing them in any intelligible context, he fails to bring his audience as complete a rendering of the personality of Harris, against whom these words are directed, as he does of the off-horse Tom, or the aggressively healthy Al. The fallacious conclusion that a "guilt by association" kind of thinking leads to, provides playwright Anderson with a lever by which his hero, Tom, can mistakenly suffer the brunt of damning accusations, and yet be saved in the eyes of his audience.

Mr. Anderson, I fear, has made things altogether too comfy for his audience. Theatregoers who prefer a balanced, whole stage-imitation of life rather than one that gives in to its audience all along the line (and succeeds only in creating the inevitable distortions that accompany such calculated give-and-take) need to hie them to the Crest Theatre's production of Othello to have their sense of proportion restored. Othello's sweet conubial passion for Desdemona is counterbalanced by Iago's perverted disgust, his repugnance, and his disapprobation of heterosexual practices, and the two strands prove equally essential to the play's climax.

Meanwhile, it is not surprising to find that the climax in Tea and Sympathy is just one more instance of underhand playwright-audience bargaining. Love conquers all, and just at this tantalizing moment the lights fade out on stage, and come on in the house for the last time—a technique that Anthony West rightly relegated to frontier vaudeville skits in his review of Cat In A Hot Tin Roof, where a similar climax is foisted on the audience. All in all, some bargain, but just, I'm afraid, what audiences want!

Audax Minor

sheila henig

pierre souvairan

Pianist Shiela Henig gave a most satisfying performance at Eaton Auditorium Monday. In choosing a programme of well-known favourites from the piano repertoire, she set herself a hard test, and passed with brilliance. Even Debussy's Claire de Lune and Chopin's Marche Funebre assumed an immediacy that only a live performance by a really good pianist can give them in this age of the radio and record-player.

One felt that the music flowed through Miss Henig directly from the composer to the individual auditor, with absolutely no impediment. The light pastoral texture of the Debussy was well indicated, with a refreshing crispness; and throughout the concert there was a pleasing refusal to give way to sentimentality. The pianist herself, however, might have enjoyed the Suite Bergamesque a little more with advantage.

The command over the piano's light-and-shade was particularly noticeable in the contrast between the liquid Bach Choral Prelude and the organ effects of the Prelude and Fugue. And when this was followed by a Beethoven sonata (op. 53) with its demand not only for contrast but also for imperceptibly elided crescendos, Miss Henig had full scope to show her technical range.

Many more students might have shown their interest in piano music and attended the concert. The university forms a large section of the appreciative public, but its members were on the whole noticeable by their absence. Miss Henig in the future should not be allowed to go unheard.

art music and drama

The brick and plaster of the auditorium of the First Unitarian Church do not provide the best acoustics for a musical recital, as was clearly shown in Pierre Souvairan's recital Sunday evening, the first of the church's music season. To some extent, acoustics probably accounted for the often muddy runs and lack of clear part-definition especially noticeable in the Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue of Bach.

Mr. Souvairan is not flamboyant pianist. The Beethoven Sonata op. 110 showed the order and refinement that are the trademarks of his playing. Each idea was clearly defined and executed with an attention to tone that allowed the pianist a large dynamic range without the fortissimos ever taking on a tonal harshness. This ability to build a climax without sacrificing tone was noteworthy in the Beethoven, but even more so in the Symphonic Etudes of Schumann. In contrast to the lyrical approach to the sonata, the Schumann composition ably demonstrated Mr. Souvairan's ability to carry off bravura playing without making it noisy and without beating the piano to a pulp.

One might have required a little more of the performance; perhaps a more definite approach to the second movement of the Beethoven sonata; perhaps a little less pedal in the interest of clarity. But with such an artistic delight as Mr. Souvairan, these shortcomings did not really detract from a very enjoyable recital. Pierre Souvairan's musical structures may not be large and impressive, but they are solid and very pleasing.

RUR Goes Far Afield

If you're about six feet tall, with a close-cropped head of hair, Leon Major needs you for his latest production. The director, currently staging RUR with the combined talents of the UC Players' Guild and the Saint Michael's Music and Drama Society, to be produced at Hart House Theatre, November 10-12, is at present on the hunt for a few football types as extras.

"These roles are completely serious, and essential for the success of the play," says Mr. Major, who explains that the "extras" will play several of the robots whose revolt marks the highlight of the action.

Prime requisites for the parts, he says, are "a little intelligent interest, and a few free evenings next week." For any football-players who always had secret yearnings to go on the stage, this should be an excellent opportunity for some intensive coaching.

Any interested are asked to show up at Clover Hall (St. Mike's) at 7:30 tonight, or to contact Dave Dunsmuir at the Varsity office

Dying Students Require Reason

Dean's Memo

Re — Dead Students Memorandum

To all faculty members:
 Re: Standard Procedure-Instruction in Death of Student:

It has been recently brought to the attention of this office that many students have been dying while in class for no good reason at all. Furthermore, the same students have been refusing to fall over after they are dead.

THIS PRACTICE MUST STOP AT ONCE. On and after March 21, 1955, any student found sitting up after he or she has died will be dropped from the roll at once without investigation, under Regulation No. 29, Section B.

Where it can be proven that a student is being held up by a desk or wall or any other support which is the property of the School, a 90 day period of grace will be allowed. The following will be strictly adhered to: If, after several years, it is noticed that a student has not moved or changed position, the instructor will investigate.

Because of the highly sensitive nature of our students and the close resemblance between death and their natural working attitude the investigation will be made quietly so as to prevent waking the student if he is asleep.

If some doubt exists as to his true condition, extending a 'bur-sary check is a fine test. If the student does not reach for it, it may reasonably be assumed that he or she is dead.

Note: In some cases the instinct is so highly developed however, that a spasmodic clutching reflex action may occur: do not let this fool you.

In cases of this type, a sworn statement by the dead person must be filled out on a special form provided for this purpose.

Fifteen copies will be made, three copies to be sent to the Dean and two to the deceased. The others will be lost in the office files.

Signed:
 The Dean (CUP)—from
 The Western Gazette.

A Quiet Note

The Editor,

Now that most of the solicited controversy concerning the music machine in the Room of the Tree seems to have subsided, a cooler note is in order.

First of all, our friend William Shakespeare or somebody has it on good authority that he who does not suffer music to be heard isn't to be trusted, and Shakespeare was an honourable man. Moreover, that poor machine never repeats itself of its own accord, nor does it chew 'the poor student's spending money' intentionally. Rather it is a non-too-mute testimony of the thought level of the room's inhabitation. They should be thrown out and not the machine.

Besides, the calibre of the 'quiet conversation' that is prevalent in that quarter is such that it warrants far harsher drowning out than that of the various dulcet tones that are attempting to do the job now.

The Figleaf

BY ADAM

SAID ADAM TO EVE AFTER THEIR FIRST:

Adam: Now look what you've done. It was bad enough that we got tossed out of that old vegetable garden by what's his name?

Eve: Joe, Jove or something. I don't know. You know him better than I do. He made you. I was after you, remember?

Adam: Why in . . . Eden didn't he leave me alone. I was so happy then.

Eve: Happy! Ha! Just because you could lord it over the animals.

Adam: Yeah, so he sent you to make my life miserable.

Eve: No, just to make you toe the mark that's all . . .

Adam: I say miserable! Ever since he caught me napping one day and grabbed a rib I've been taking a beating. If you weren't snatching apples you were pulling something like this just to make things tough for me. You'd think Joe had nothing better to do but to make my life miserable. He was driving Satan to hell too.

Eve: That was before. He was just kinda bored so he gave us a break.

Adam: Break!?

Eve: Ah, you never had it so good.

Adam: Good! Hah. How do you explain this, anyway? What is it?

Eve: I don't know. Looks like some animal or something. The stork brought it.

Adam: Stork. Don't hand me that malarkey. It's just another one of your ways to keep me tied down.

Eve: Look, don't blame me, Adam. It was just as much your fault as it was mine.

Adam: What? All I was doing was trying to get my rib back. Ah I'll bet you women are going to be all the same.

Eve: Oh, quit grouching. You'd think you were starting a big thing or something. I know the way you think.

Adam: Well, I still say it wasn't my fault.

Eve: Man, you always say that.

Adam: O.K. what are we going to call it?

Eve: I don't know. First of all what is it?

Adam: A nuisance — that's what it is.

Eve: All right, we'll call it that. NUISANCE. It sounds good —

Adam: You know, Evie, I wonder if he'll look like me? I mean look at its hair. See the way it falls over his eyes. Just like mine.

Eve: Such an ego. You'd think you were Joe or something. He doesn't belong to you —

Adam: What do you mean it doesn't belong to me? Its as much mine as it is yours.

Eve: You see! Now you own up to it.

Adam: All right. All right. I'm just a prisoner of love. Don't rub it in . . . Maybe he will grow up to be Joe or something. The old guy is getting kind of old.

Eve: Don't kid yourself, Adam, he's going to last a long time. Don't let that beard fool you.

Adam: Well anyway this Nuisance of ours is maybe going to be chief someday, eh? I'll bet he'd be the smartest little chief you ever did see. Look at him, ain't he the sweetest, kindest, little lovable Nuisance you ever saw. He wouldn't harm a fly, I'll bet.

Eve: Adam, maybe you're right. Maybe he will be Joe some day.

Oxford Newsletter

BY JOHN FRASER

(John Fraser was the Editor-in-Chief of the McGill Daily in 1954-1955. He is currently attending Magdalene College, Oxford on a Rhodes Scholarship.)

I doubt that anyone can claim to be a world traveller of any distinction (unless he be John Foster Dulles) without at some time successfully defying Customs regulations. High marks can perhaps be awarded the persistent failure, providing his attempts have been made in good faith, but the title of "Expert" is the prerogative of Those Who Get Away With It.

One student on his way to Britain was particularly eager to win his spurs, and he boarded the ship with forty-eight bottles of gin with which to do it. (For obvious reasons I mention no names, but assure any Customs inspectors who may read this that it was not I. I prefer Scotch.)

Anyone will admit that the problem of bringing two cases of liquor into a country when the legal limit is two bottles is a stiff test of ingenuity.

He was particularly eager to succeed for a number of reasons. Not least of these was the fact that it would cost him at least fifty pounds (exclusive of whatever fine there might be) to fail, and this item was not included in his budget.

Even more compelling, however, was the humiliating fact that he had tried before and flunked the course. Attempting to smuggle only one bottle of gin (a confirmed gin drinker, this), he had tucked it neatly in his underwear. Unfortunately the bottle cracked, and as he was chatting merrily with the Customs official, a dark and rather damp stain spread down one pant leg. He bolted with unseemly haste to a door marked "Hommes," followed by official glances in which amusement struggled with contempt.

But here was a tour de force to redeem him. There was only one problem: how was it to be done?

He could, of course, disdain deception. When asked about his two sealed cartons he could reply simply, that each contained twenty-four bottles of gin, hoping that the Customs officer would chuckle heartily with him at the joke, and let him pass. This has in fact been done, although not very often, but its disadvantages are obvious.

A small but steadily increasing group gathered in the student's cabin one night to discuss ways and means of solving the problem. By the time we left him we had solved almost half of it, but the twenty-six bottles of gin he had left to smuggle were no more legal than the forty-eight with which he had started the voyage.

The solution he eventually adopted was, unfortunately, quite prosaic. Many of the students had not planned to use the quota allowed them by the British government ("one bottle of wine and one of spirits, or two of either if open and in use.")

So it was that the thirteen conspirators trooped off the ship, each firmly clutching two bottles of gin "open and in use." If the Customs officer thought it odd that so many of us should be using two bottles of gin simultaneously and that it should all be of the same brand, he did not confess his bewilderment to us.

Two bottles of gin went with their owner to the university for which he was bound. Eight headed towards the City London; the remaining sixteen set off for Oxford.

How the owner planned to collect the London consignment I don't know, but one member of the Oxford party (and it could have been quite a party) had been designated to act as a collection agency.

As the group descended from the train, each deposited his two bottles with this gentleman in a suitcase that he had opened for the purpose on the station platform.

So we arrived in Oxford.

Kingston: Queen's coeds have apparently walked off with the hats of three cadets of the Royal Military College in Kingston. Until the hats are returned, the cadets cannot leave their college. A cadet cannot appear in Kingston unless he is in full dress uniform. The cadets have issued a desperate appeal for the return of their hats.

Halifax: The annual wave of vandalism on college campi has reached Nova Scotia. The Dal Gazette reports that vandals on the Dalhousie campus smeared "almost immovable red paint" on windows, doors, and "other conspicuous parts" of their Shirreff Hall. Bright red paint was also splashed over the main doorway of the Arts Building. An investigation is being conducted by the Halifax City police. The Dal reported.

Montreal: Comment in the Georgian on Quebec censors in a review of "Not as a Stranger?" "We are still amazed that our Quebec censors passed the scene of the stallion and the mare. Could it be because something (not much, it's true) was left to the imagination?" writes the reviewer, a student at Sir George William's College.

Hamilton: An editorial in the McMaster Silhouette, referring to the Fall Convocation, says in part, "The evening convocation was packed because of the Prime Minister's speech, but the afternoon speeches and ceremonies were more interesting and certainly more important to undergraduates . . . We were rather pleased to find that the McMaster part of the ceremonies were so well done that the Prime Minister's speech was definitely an anti-climax."

Winnipeg: Engineers at the University of Manitoba apparently got all "het up" about the shortage of Tobans at their building—so heated up that when they got three hundred extra copies, they burned them. The Engineering council plans to take action against the offenders.

With Neck In Cast

Hurt Varsity Student To Resume Classes

Brian Gibbs (IV Pharm.), 20, who suffered a fractured neck in a fall at the Toronto-McGill game last October 15, will be released from hospital this Saturday, his doctor announced.

In attempting to vault over the guard rail from the stands to the track, his foot caught on the rail and he plunged eight feet to the ground of Varsity Stadium.

"Right on top of my head," Gibbs said from his bed surrounded by nurses, in orthopedic Ward C of the General Hospital. His head held together but his vertebra cracked. "He suffered a fracture of his sixth cervical vertebra," said Dr. D. L. MacIntosh.

Gibbs recalls that he passed out for a few seconds and when he came to, had sharp pains in his shoulder, neck and back. Several bystanders were wisely dissuaded by Gibbs from helping him up as he recognized the possible extent of his injuries. He had taken first aid. St. John's Ambulance men lifted him properly onto a stretcher and raced him to the hospital.

One witness, Miss B. King (Queen's) said, "He looked unconscious to me."

Gibbs, who plans to return to classes next week, has had notes taken for him by his classmates, who have arranged a schedule to see that all his lectures have been covered. Besides missing school, he missed his brother's wedding at which he was to have been best man.

A star soccer player, Gibbs was captain of the Pharmacy team for the last two years. He was also on the water polo team and a member of the Pharmacy Athletic Association. "He won't be able to play soccer for some time," said his doctor.

Vaccine Efforts Get Top Award For Dr. Defries

A Toronto doctor and former director of Connaught Medical Research Laboratories, Dr. Robert Davies Defries, has been awarded a Lasker Foundation Award for his work on the Canadian Salk vaccine program.

The first Canadian to win this award, Dr. Defries will be presented with it at a meeting of the American Public Health Association in Kansas City on Nov. 17.

A graduate of the University of Toronto in medicine in 1911, he obtained his diploma in Public Health three years later. He then joined the anti-toxin laboratory in the Department of Hygiene and Preventive Medicine, which later became the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories.

For his work during both world wars Dr. Defries received the OBE in 1944 and the CBE in 1947.

In 1940, he was made director of the laboratories, and on his retirement, was named consultant.

Dr. Defries received the award in particular for development of large-scale virus production that made possible the field trials in the United States and Canada in 1954.

The award is considered the US's highest medical honor.

Western Canadian CUP Conference Urges Exchange Of News, Columns

Saskatoon (CUP): Greater exchange and co-operation was the note sounded at the recent Western region Canadian University Press Conference held at Saskatoon. The conference included the four western university papers—

The Manitoban, The Sheaf, The Gateway, and The Ubyssy.

A guest sports column will be carried each week by each paper, it was unanimously decided by the delegates. As well, guest editorials from each paper will be carried every term, and special features from all papers dealing with topics of interest to other western papers.

A representative from the Canadian Press newsgathering agency was suggested by a western delegate as one of the judges in the annual CUP competitions for the best paper awards. The conference split on the suggestion.

Some of the delegates felt such a representative would not be qualified to judge, since CP is primarily concerned with gathering news, not presenting it.

The conference felt that any CUP staff member in Europe at Christmas should be asked to attend as an observer the student editors' conference held this year at Vienna. They did not think a CUP member should be specifically sent to the conference which is held by the communist-dominated International Union of Students.

stricted by church or law?" opinion was evenly split. According to J. A. McKay (I Knox) "as custodians of the unity and moral fibre of society, both Church and state have it within their prerogative to prescribe such a structure for the monarchy as will command the highest respect and loyalty from all the commonwealth."

"I think the training of the royal family enables them to make a wise choice in marriage for themselves," said Murray Eades (U Law).

"Restrictions as they stand now are too narrow," another student said.

Men and women were interviewed in equal numbers. There was no striking difference in their views: where difference existed the men tended to uphold the commonwealth tradition more strongly, the women to sympathize with the princess.

With one exception the division of opinion was the same among students of all colleges and faculties.

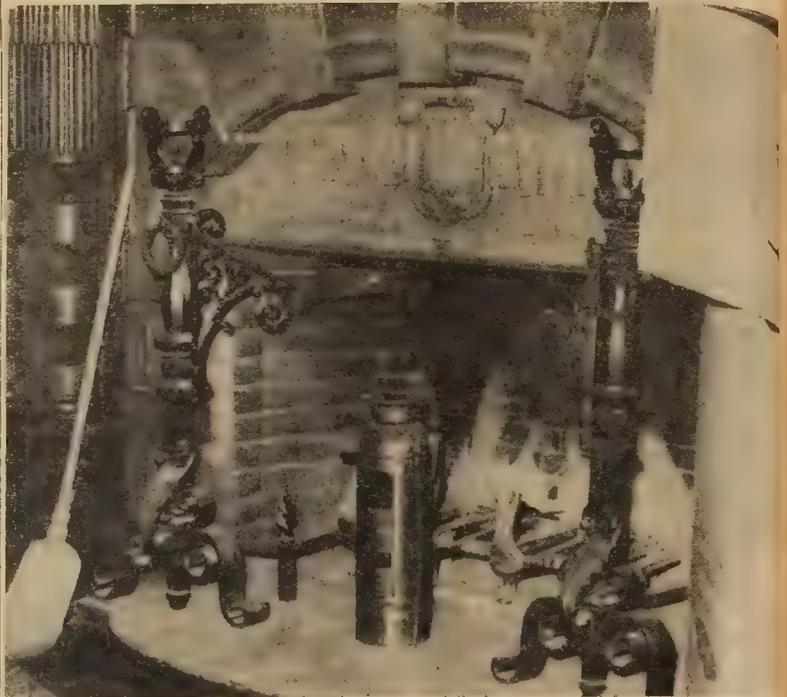

Five students declined to answer, on the grounds that the royal family was not important enough to merit all the fuss.

Old Smokey

Hart House's fireplaces have long provided heat in front of the fireplace indicates. Evidently there but are a source of hazard too as the fire extinguisher has been an emergency here. —Varsity Photo

Heap Big Smoke

But No Fire!

A fireplace without a fire is just a hole in the wall.

At a recent meeting in the Hart House Music Room members of the Law Society unanimously judged this to be true. And they further decreed that the assumption be tested. The Hall Porter was ordered to perform the prescribed ritual.

Within minutes, the room was filled with the pleasant aroma of burning wood and the sound of crackling embers. The august members relaxed in pleasant informality.

And yet, the room was quickly filling with smoke. Dense clouds rolled out of the fireplace and spread over the room while the Society members, all business forgotten, dashed unceremoniously to open the doors and windows.

This is not the only incident in which the fireplaces of Hart House have acted temperamentally. The House is the proud possessor of eight fireplaces, and each of them at one time or another has resented any attempt to build a fire in it.

Not too long ago a young man eager to impress his girl-friend with a more romantic atmosphere lit the fire laid in the Arbor Room grate.

Again the results were disastrous. Thick clouds of smoke poured out into the room dumping layers of soot on everyone and everything in sight.

The pleasant evening atmosphere of the Room was utterly disrupted. Windows were thrown open. Doors were flung back. Tear stained faces were wiped with smutty hands. Everyone fanned the air in a mad attempt to clear the smoke away.

Only a clever soda jerker had the sense and courage to penetrate the fumes and put out the fire. The cleaning staff was still mopping up ashes from salt cellars, arm chairs and the floor one week later.

The cause of these periodic escapades lies in the tremendous height of the Hart House chimneys. Any chill or dampness keeps the flues from working properly and the large volume of cool moist air forces the smoke down through the fireplace and out into the room. Usually fires are started half an hour before the room is to be used. This allows the whole chimney to be warmed. Any smoke that accrues may be cleared out privately.

The Law Society reached no decision on any remedy to the situation. Members have retired to private consultation with the House Committee before handing down a verdict.

Trinity Chapel Architect Surveys Concreted Plan

Trinity College Chapel was seen for the first time this week by its world renowned British architect, Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, OM, RA, FRIBA, DCL.

He stated that it was an "exciting experience" for him to see the chapel for the first time as a completed stone and mortar reality. Never before has he designed an important building and not been on the scene during its construction.

Grandson of the leader of the Gothic revival in England, Sir George Gilbert Scott, Sir Giles has designed such famous buildings as the Liverpool Cathedral, Cambridge University Library, Waterloo Bridge, post-war reconstruction of the British House of Commons, London Guildhall and numerous churches.

He is visiting Toronto to see the Trinity College Chapel, and to lend assistance in the installation of some of the fittings, some of which are of his own design. He himself made all the architect's drawings for the chapel, some of them life-size. He explained that this was the only way, in a Gothic building of this kind, to make the "whole" pull together.

When asked if this new chapel resembles any of his previous designs, Sir Giles replied that he could think of none to which it is really comparable. One of its unusual features, he pointed out is that its buttresses are partly internal and partly external.

Most churches, he explained, have aisles; and single-aisle churches like Trinity College Chapel are likely to be rather dull if their walls are plain and flat. It was to avoid such monotony that he placed its buttresses partly on the interior.

Sir Giles approved the general tone of the stone and plaster which form the fabric of the chapel, the effect obtained by using more glass than is usual, and the fluorescent lighting system installed in the stone piers.

The chapel, in daily use since the opening of the college term, is now being made ready for its consecration, November 20. Its erection and furnishing was made possible by gifts from alumni and friends of the college.

By the time of the consecration Sir Giles will be back in England at work on plans for a 800,000 sq. block of offices for the city of London, the reconstruction of a Carmelite Church in Kensington, and designs for three new churches in the north of England.

Sir Giles Scott

LEST WE FORGET

Guy Fawkes

In 1605 the English House of Commons instituted November 5 as "a holiday for ever in thankfulness to God for our deliverance." The deliverance was from death by dynamite and the villain in the case, as every one knows, was Guy Fawkes.

Old reports tell that Guy was usually a man "of mild and cheerful demeanour, an enemy of broils and disputes," but in these times of tempestuous religious dispute, the Protestant House of Commons in general and the Scottish King James I in particular made Guy, a faithful Catholic, see red. Thus, when he was approached by the initiators of the Gunpowder Plot, Guy threw himself into furious activity.

Alias Johnson, a servant, he rented a house whose cellar was under the Houses of Parliament, filled the cellar with dynamite, attached a fifteen minute fuse, disguised the whole as a wood pile and sat down to wait for D Day.

But some one had blundered. One of the conspirators wished to save the life of Lord Montague and sent him a cryptic warning letter. Lord Montague took the letter to James I and the wisest fool in Christendom for once made use of all his booklearning and deciphered the Gunpowder Plot. Guy and eight others were apprehended and hanged and thenceforth, before every opening of Parliament the Yeoman of the Guard solemnly inspects the vaults of the Houses of Parliament with lighted lanterns.

The decree for holiday was received uproariously by all ardent patriots, especially the Calvinists. Puritanism could not justifiably frown on festivities which upheld the downfall of the Scarlet Woman and Calvinists jumped at a release from sobriety. Guy Fawkes day became so popular that it had to be organized. An order issued in London in 1825 forbidding "squibs, serpents, fire balloons or other fireworks" was totally disregarded.

The celebration at Lewes, including the Bonfire Boys torchlight procession, fireworks, revels in costume and, of course, the burning of Guy in effigy, is the oldest — two hundred years. In succeeding years, Napoleon, Cardinal Wiseman, first Archbishop of Westminster, Nana Sahib of the Cawnpore atrocities, the Turkish Sultan of the Armenian atrocities, Kruger, the Kaiser, Hitler and even Colonel McCormick have been burnt in various Guy Fawkes day draws.

the opinion that, "a student who races down Yonge Street at fifty miles per hour in order to be on time, instead of being praised, should be frowned upon by his classmates. This, after all, is a serious affair when lives are at stake." The Attorney-General feels that mature leadership on the part of Varsity students can play a vital part in the success of the drive.

For the first time on such a scale, unidentified Ontario Provincial Police cars will patrol Ontario highways. The plan is to concentrate large numbers of patrol cars on, for example, Highway 401 one day and then move the concentration to the Barrie Highway the next. Motorists will have no way of knowing beforehand in what section the pressure will be applied. More than five hundred police cars will be patrolling the highways.

A further indication of the campaign's magnitude is the fact that co-operation has been sought on all government levels, including magistrates, crown attorneys and provincial police. Insurance companies and safety councils across the province have joined the campaign.

Tim Buck Talks - Oranges Thrown By BC Students

Vancouver, Nov. 2—(CUP) The poor marksmanship of University of British Columbia students was exhibited at Tuesday's speech by Communist Tim Buck. The oranges and apples thrown by the students could have felled him if they had not been wide of their mark.

The Labor-Progressive Party leader was the target of some of the 1,100 students who crammed UBC auditorium to hear the noon-hour speech sponsored by the campus LPP group.

Mr. Buck's statement that there would be no world war met with a roar of boos, and catcalls such as "How about beer?" The air was filled with missiles as the speaker tried vainly to make himself heard above the uproar. At one time, Mr. Buck knocked over the microphone, in an attempt to ward off one of them.

Commotion mounted until the speaker's words were drowned under a wave of shouts, and continued even after he had left the platform. A group who tried to snatch an LPP banner was tackled by pro-Communist students, and a few punches were exchanged.

Meds Joins Law For Discussion

Medico-legal problems will be the subject of a joint panel discussion by the U of T Law Society and the Medical Society.

Topics for discussion include "Psychiatric Evidence in Criminal Cases" and "Evidence at Malpractice Cases." It is hoped that the Deans of both faculties will be in attendance. The panel is scheduled to take place in the Hart House Debates Room on November 23.

Physics Professor Leads Seminar Topic To Be - "Theory Of Metals"

Professor A. C. H. Hallett of the Physics Department will report on phases of low-temperature physics to interested students at a seminar this afternoon at 4.00 p.m. in the McLennan Laboratory.

Professor Hallett attended the "Congres de Physique des Basses Temperatures" held this year in Paris. Scientists from universities in many parts of the world gathered there to discuss, amongst other topics, the properties of super-conductors, and properties of metals at low temperatures.

"The conference," said Professor Hallett, "reinforced beliefs we have had that the accepted theory of metals is not correct. We still have many problems that were left open, and more have been added to the list."

Toronto's contribution to the conference was on the problems of liquid helium at low temperatures. This research work has been carried on by Professor Hallett and research students at the McLennan Laboratory.

This research has shown that there is some type of motion in liquid helium which had not been observed before and which cannot be explained by existing theories of liquid helium.

Open to interested students and staff, the seminar will start at 4.15 in Room 135, McLennan Laboratory. Tea will be served at 4.00 p.m.

Runneth-Over

London, The Gazette: Some at Varsity were slightly peeved because the Torontonensis was a few weeks late in appearing last summer. Well, please note that Western's students will not receive their yearbook, The Occidental, for 1954-55 until early November 1955.

The lucky Western School of Nursing had the winning entry in the float parade this year. They arrived on the scene draped in togas of 500 B.C. and attending a fallen Queen's gladiator. Second prize in the parade was won by London's Pi Beta Phi fraternity.

Those short of cash (and who isn't) will perhaps favour a plan started at Western whereby students can borrow $5.00 interest-free from the Arts and Science Council. If a student fails to pay his debt in one week, his name appears on a card in the window case of the lower Arts Hall, and he is charged 25c. a day. If the borrower still hasn't paid in a week, his name is sent to the Dean's office.

Minneapolis, Minnesota: The Minnesota Daily, of the University of Minnesota, has the world's largest college circulation.

Dal Gazette, Halifax: On November 4, all freshmen and others attending Dalhousie for the first time will be treated to a grand welcoming dance by their Alumni Association.

Ann Arbor, Michigan: It is noted that plans are being made here, and an architect hired, to build a co-ed dormitory and 800 married-student apartments. Officials are studying similar systems at other universities.

UBC By 5-4 Vote Upholds Federation

Vancouver, B.C. (CUP): The University of British Columbia has joined this year's ranks of those who are undecided whether "to stay or not to stay" in Canada's student federation.

A vote in the UBC Student Council defeated a motion 5-4 to withdraw from the federation. As a result of the close vote, the council has set up a committee to review the national student group. The committee is to report on the merits of the federation within two weeks.

The issue was touched upon when UBC delegates to the annual conference returned stating that their time had been wasted. The federation is unable to attract an executive capable of handling such an operation under the present system, said Council president, Ron Bray.

The federation budget was also strongly criticized by Bray. "They do not even have any idea of simple accounting principles," he said. The budget was not prepared in any way prior to the conference, it was approved in the last moments of the conference and was totally inadequate, he added.

Marc Bell, local UBC chairman of NRCUS, was more enthusiastic about the outcome of the conference. He agreed that leadership was lacking and thus the meeting did not accomplish as much as it should have. He added that, in his opinion, the conference might get somewhere if it could turn nebulous discussions into action.

NORTOWNS BEST CAGE BLUES 72-46

Oldsters Outplay New Stulac, Osborne Shine

Varsity Blues made their Basketball debut last night against the Nortown Tribells, coming out on the short end of a 72-46 score. Biggest factor in the defeat of Varsity's new was a group of Varsity's old, former Blue stars now with the Bells. Against them, the Blues, still green and not really started on game preparations, showed a slight lack of offensive power, height and experience.

Up to the half it was a close game with Varsity matching hoop for hoop against the bigger slower Bells. The main edge for Tribells lay in their height and the advantage it gave them on rebounds.

Freshies Defeat Phys Ed Sophs

P.H.E.'s first year team downed their big sisters last night 15-12 in one of the fastest basketball games this season. The first team started their forward drive early in the game with a basket by Anne Channen and continued to outpace the sophs throughout the remainder. Two baskets by second years Helen Hickling in the final minutes of the game gave the first year girls a few rough moments, but they managed to hold the scoring in check until the time ran out.

Top scorer for the freshies was Jackie Davies who netted a total of seven points for the winning team. Also scoring for P.H.E. I was Ruth McIntyre, who boosted the score with accurate free shots, resulting from many fouls called on the opposing team.

The first year team showed strength in defensive ranks, with guards Barb Campbell and Carol Smith making a particularly good showing. The game was extremely well played and each team showed good form and teamwork.

A weakness in organization showed through all too often as the Blues were caught without rebound men in position to go up for their mates' long sets. Generally there seemed to be far more outside shooting than was necessary as the Blues moved the ball too slowly to spread the Tribell zone and had to settle for the long tries. It was almost enough to keep the Blues in the running for that first half but in the last quarters it fouled them up with the Bells nabbing all rebounds, and they were many, straight away turning them into Nortown points.

A notable feature of the game was the switch of George Stulac to Tribells, only to be replaced with the Blues by his younger brother Joe. Joe Stulac hit for 6 points, checked effectively and hit with a dead-eye on his long sets. George on the other side of the bench hit for 17 and was easily the best the Bells had to offer.

On the whole the Varsity defeat could only be considered encouraging. The Blues went at the game for just what it was worth—an unimportant exhibition match and nothing more. It was exploited to give John McManus, Blue coach a look at his players in game conditions and the look was very interesting, showing a balance Varsity's Jack Rogers is upended in the league opener against Western, October 1. End Fred Small is in the background, as Western's Doug Aitchison and Neil Desborough move in for the kill. Rogers missed last week's game with Queen's due to a shoulder injury but should be ready for the Mustangs this Saturday. The Blues crushed Western 20-0 in their last meeting in London, and will need a repeat to be sure of a playoff berth.

that could develop into one of the strongest teams Varsity had fanned in several years.

High men for the Blues were Joe Stulac with six, Rube Richmond with 5, Hesh Rotman 5, Gerry Edelist 5 and another 5 for Florian Matsalla.

For Tribells it was George and then Coulter Osborne and his 15 points.

Meds Take Muddy Beating As Trinity Ruggerites Win

The Trinity Rugger Panthers defeated the Meds by nine points to three on the Back Campus last night. Trinity had their full share of the Rugger Blues team out and were able to take advantage of their excellent back field. Chris "late sure foot" Jacques scored early in the game but was unable to convert his own try. Mike Davis, one of Trinity's Blue forwards went over after a tanking run through the mid field, to put Trinity six up.

Meds settled down to try and play good foot ball and the combination of Macey and Silver in the forward division was impressive. But it was left to Ralph Hull, class president of 1st Meds, as far as Meds scoring was concerned. Hull barged over for a disputed try. Meds also failed to convert, and soon after the ball went loose with the Panthers taking the initiative. W. Chadwick was soon over for yet another Trinity try.

Blues captain Andy Baines did a grand job with Mike Davis in organizing the game and it is hoped that further interfaculty games can be arranged.

Blues Must Beat UWO

With their backs against the wall Varsity Blues go into the final league game this Saturday against the University of Western Ontario Mustangs. Back at full strength the Blues will need a win over the Mustangs to be sure of a berth in the Intercollegiate playoff.

If McGill beats Queen's, a highly likely possibility say the books on the corner, and the Blues lose to Western, McGill will meet Queen's in post-season action. If McGill loses it won't matter what happens to the Blues on Saturday, but it would be best for the Blues to win. That way there is no danger of elimination.

With Rich Bethune back in the line-up after a six-week lay-off with a neck injury, Varsity should be stronger than ever defensively. Bethune was counted on heavily before the league opened to take the place of veteran Steve Oneschuk who moved up to the Hamilton Tigercats.

Bethune's loss necessitated a shift in the defensive backfield, and Masterson has used half Phil Muntz and quarter Ed Skrzypek to great advantage here. This however cut down on the offensive backfield. But with Bethune back, Masterson has an ample supply of halfbacks Don Bagwood and fullback Dan Mucci will play with the Intermediates against Ryerson tomorrow and will not be with the Blues against the Mustangs.

The Blues went through a heavy scrimmage with the Intermediates last night and spent a great deal of time on pass offense. Masterson still hopes to sharpen his aerial attack for Western in his first meeting the Blues broke the Mustangs' back in the early minutes of the game when Sampek threw 53 yards to Bart Kellock for the first touchdown. Blues trumped 20-2 in that game and will likely repeat Saturday.

Interfaculty Summary

Meds thirds laced Skole 7-0 4-0 in interfaculty lacrosse action yesterday afternoon. Creighton performed the hat trick to the Doctors with three goals, while Christie added a single for the shutout.

In soccer action on the Back campus Wycliffe blanked Pharmacy 4-0 on a muddy field. Scoring twice in each half the trustees had little trouble defeating the druggists. Niblock and Macey each tallied a pair for Wycliffe.

In volleyball action on Hart House yesterday afternoon SPS A's overcame SPS B's 15-2, 15-7.

What has happened to the proposed new women's athletic building? Has it, like so many other things on this campus, been shelved into the back rooms of Simcoe Hall in order that the plans will become entangled with all the red tape that permeates that establishment?

Last year, the women of the University of Toronto were promised a women's athletic building by the president. The architects drew the plans. The money was put aside. Construction was scheduled to start last June.

Take a walk along Philosophers' Walk and scan the horizon. You will see as I do—nature unspoiled—flowers blooming in the Smith's garden and the archaic coach house still standing and taking up space. What is worse, there is no indication of the athletic building nor is there any sign that there will even be one by the time my grand-daughter gets around to taking her B.A. The situation is not to be taken lightly, for is the fact that facilities provided by the University of Toronto for its women students are outmoded and completely inadequate.

Those who have the say on the subject seem completely disinterested; however, I feel if they were taken on a grand tour of the buildings allotted they would become definitely aware of the desperate conditions of affairs. I, personally, as would any girl who is interested in the athletics on the campus, like to take the "powers that be" to that towering highway for women, the Lillian Massey building. This edifice was built for an enrolment of 10. Granted, the structure looks imposing from the front, but on closer notice you will discover that this is the Household Economics department, not the female Hart House, and that the small entrance at the rear is the home of female sports.

The gym that is provided is not a standard one and is so small that if the basketball boards were suspended according to regulations, they would meet in the middle of the floor. But if you think the gymnasium is petite, "you powers that be," you should take a quick glance at the famous swimming hole, or better still, we invite you to have a swim. If you can manage to take two strokes in that pool, you are doing well. Most people have bigger bath tubs!

Why should the women of this university have their athletic programmes curtailed and in many cases forgotten because several bureaucrats like to take their jobs lightly? It is not right that a university the size of Toronto has not even the facilities for women's interfaculty meets and tournaments, let alone sufficient facilities to be hostesses for intercollegiate games. The women of this university have the staff, an excellent one, they have the girls with the desire to play, but they have no place to participate. Why should this be, "you powers that be"?

Kingston Definitely Playoff Site Tickets To Go On Sale Monday

J. P. Loosemore, Secretary-Treasurer of the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association, announced today that playoff arrangements in the senior Intercollegiate football league have been finalized.

Queen's have already qualified for a playoff spot, and in the event that they lead the league after next Saturday's games, they have the choice of field and will play off in Kingston with either Varsity or McGill.

In the event that Varsity ties

Queen's for first place the playoff will still be in Kingston, this having already been decided by the toss of a coin.

Only possible hitch in the playoff schedule is that Varsity could tie McGill for second place. This could be effected by the Blues drawing with Western and McGill beating Queen's. Should such a finish prevail the Blues would enter the final against the Gaels, as they have more points in their mutual games with the Redmen.

The CIAU playoff rules provide for such a second place tie, sending the team into the final that has prevailed in the two games they have played together. Varsity, having won 33-12 and lost 16-9 against the Tribe, would set the nod 42-28.

It will, of course, not be known whether the Blues are in the final until after Saturday's two crucial contests in Toronto and Montreal. Mr. Loosemore stated yesterday that if Varsity qualifies reserved seat tickets for the game in Kingston will go on sale at the Athletic Office Monday at the special student price of $1.50, on presentation of the playoff coupon from the student season ticket book.

The sale will continue through to Wednesday at 5:00 P.M. when unsold tickets will be returned to Queen's. The usual SAC combination game and train tickets will be sold in the SAC office.

Mr. Loosemore also suggested that it would be advisable for students to make their plans early, as overnight accommodation in Kingston will be limited. It is not known how many tickets will be available to University of Toronto students, but it is expected that there will be more than for last Saturday's game.

Last weekend was Queen's homecoming and the large number of graduates returning to the Kingston school helped fill Richardson stadium to record capacity.

Since the game is definitely in Kingston let's go on down there en masse and whip 'em right in their own back yard!

not everywhere

"On a Monday morning
High upon the gallows tree
Kevin Barry gave his young life
That his country might be free —"

The singing of this song is punishable by law in parts of Canada, and just as well, for only an Irishman can do it justice.

Kevin Barry was a university student. It was his student opinion that the English oppressor had no business in Ireland. This opinion he published in the most effective of ways, by taking up his fowling-piece and potting away at the dastards. And hanged he was.

"Ah," you say: "That was in the past, glorious age. That type of university student, hero of so many a song and saga, is no more."

Well, you're wrong. Last weekend, intrepid Irish students from Dublin University captured the Nelson Column stuck conspicuously in their city by the factless Sassenach, and held it against concerted attacks by the police. Their bold intention: to remove the insulting Saxon presence of Lord Horatio, and to replace him with the more harmonious likeness of Kevin Barry. The engineering aspects of the task balked them, but their razzberry has been heard around the world.

So don't be cynical. Don't give way to the easy, modish despair so prevalent in this twentieth century. Idealism is not dead. The dashing, devil-may-care student of the romantic past is not extinct. Not everywhere. —E. S.

without a riding

An intriguing suggestion caught our eye the other day when we were reading an old Varsity file — back in the days when students on this campus cared about politics, liberty and all that.

The suggestion was that the Canadian parliament should institute "University Ridings" where only graduates of recognized universities would be allowed the vote.

Under the system of university representation that operated in Great Britain for years, several of the universities were allowed representation. The graduates of the Universities in question were mailed ballots, and they then had the privilege of having two votes in any election. The advantages of such a plan are double: firstly, the voters in these "ridings" are so spread out that they must be appealed to on different political grounds than most, and secondly, the votes of grads — presumably among the most intelligent and best-educated people in the country — are given more weight.

The MP's elected from such ridings are usually, professors or noted educators who are the only people known to all of the graduates: and the presence of these people in the parliament adds considerably to its lustre and experience.

However, there are objections to the idea. It is "undemocratic" — the reason why the British Labor party dropped the seats in Britain a few years ago, and why the Conservatives have never had the nerve to restore them.

And we realize full well that in the bleak landscape of Canadian politics, any such suggestion would be instantly rejected.

But it still remains an interesting suggestion.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Poor Choice Of Conductor

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Sir Ernest MacMillan's retirement from the post as conductor of the TSO left void this coveted position. In the late spring of last season it was given out that his successor would be chosen from between Dr. Heinz Unger, a Toronto conductor, and Mr. Walter Susskind, a native Czechoslovakian, at present holding the baton in the Victoria Symphony of Melbourne. It was naturally assumed by not a few of the Orchestra's supporters that the choice of the governors would be influenced by popular response to the work of these two men, who will, as guests, conduct concerts of this present season.

However, it is now revealed that the choice had already been made last spring (Susskind has the post for two or three "trial" years), and that the Symphony's supporters will not have the chance to say whom they would prefer. This sort of conduct is hardly to be desired, especially in the ranks of our own Symphony's directors. May I say to these gentlemen that the Orchestra is our Symphony, Toronto's Symphony, and not the social toy of a few gentlemen controlling the futures of 70 or 80 of our very best musicians.

Perhaps I am prejudiced: I have seen Dr. Unger work and I know what he could do for the Orchestra. I also am certain that we would be downright idiots to refuse to this genius a post to which he could bring world-wide recognition and acclaim. Sir Ernest is quoted as saying that he feels the governors made a good choice in Susskind. I, however, cannot but sense that he might have thought Dr. Unger a better choice.

Well Behaved Eyewitnesses

The Editors,
The Varsity:

The freedom of the press entitles you to report the news and to express your opinion of it, but not to misrepresent the facts. As eye-witnesses of the Queen's-Varsity game this past Saturday we feel that the Varsity has exaggerated its report. Perhaps One-eyed Benny covered the game and had only a Cyclopien view on the figures instead of the facts.

In the case of the unfortunate beer-bottle incident, disciplining action was taken immediately by the A.M.S. constables resulting in the prompt removal of the offender by the Kingston police.

However, as far as the "battle" of the goal-posts was concerned—there was none. In addition, no damage was done to the stadium before or after the game.

In all, the majority of the spectators were well behaved, heeding the President's plea.

Dampened

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Once again the Varsity is all smoke and no fire. "Old Smokey," depicted in all her incendiary glory in yesterday's edition, is one of the eight fireplaces to grace the halls of Flavelle House, not Hart House.

We did not wish to make a flaming issue of this, but you have re-kindled the embers of dissatisfaction with the Varsity's glaring inaccuracies. Our faith in the Varsity is dampened, perhaps extinguished.

Bolero For Bursars

Oh poverty! Thou deadly curse!
Detested ailment of the purse!
No mortal malady is worse
Than thee, thou crawling fungus.

Cutthroats and communists abound

Wherever poverty is found
Which makes it morally unsound
To have the poor among us.

So we've devised a simple test
To guarantee we train the best
And say to hell with all the rest
Found wanting in the balance;

We've raised the fees, a tactic which Ensures that none but the rich
Can fill an academic niche
Regardless of their talents.

If anybody should object
We are not morally correct
To use such methods to select
Our students, T's calumny.

For if, alas, we were to choose
Only the ones with high I.Q.s
We should be almost sure to lose
Our favorite, rich alumni.

Not Seriously?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I am terribly upset to think that I may have trodden on E. G. Goodin's sensitive toes through the medium of my feature "Pre-Marital Mysteries."

His letter of castigation was an excellent piece of writing. It was unfortunate that it was a little incoherent, but this no doubt was caused by his indignation.

I have an awful feeling that this indignation may have been caused by his "steady," who, after reading the guilty feature, flung his pins, rings, crayons, diapers etc. in his face and ended eighteen years of pre-marital bliss. I am mortified to think that I may have been the direct cause of this, but perhaps if it were pointed out to the girl in question that the article was actually not meant to be taken too seriously, then the situation may yet be redeemed.

Yours sincerely,
W. R. Chadwick

Sadness

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It is always with sadness that I attempt to crush a fellow student, and especially one who is as eloquent as that chap from Trinity, a certain E. G. Goodin.

In this instance, however, it would have been much, much happier all around had he held his peace. Any student who attempts an article, no matter how dubious the result, has the right to be read. Mr. Chadwick expected, and quite naturally too, that the voice of the student, The Varsity, should hold it up for all to see. We should be very sad indeed if he were silenced.

To be more specific — until such time as our friend from Trinity produces something of his own, anything, let him please shut up. Chadwick said what he had to say, and he couldn't have said it any other way, or else he would have.

He should, in some measure anyway, be free from these barages of railing verbiage, emanating from nothingness.

... is what had been boring us to death. We'll try a few of the old platonic favourites that the great man left unanswered. You know: Beauty, Good, Truth, and so on.

A: Tally-ho! Truth is as good as any. What have you got to say about Truth?

B: First we'll have to define it. For instance, do you think it could be an expression of personalized ambition, say, or perhaps of frustrated ego? I don't know. I'm asking you.

A: You're frightening me. I know, though, that Truth cannot be an expression of anything, or a projection of what is a basic concept. Moreover, there are a few tricky turns to this word Truth. What about popular truth: two and two equalling four, for instance?

B: Or that the world is round?

A: Yes. And you know that there is no real basis for these truths, is there? What but human reason is to say that things equal to the same thing are equal, and in fact, each other? Such a ridiculous premise has no place in our advanced hierarchy of values. We deal only with what is true. And what of those conflicting truths, where one man knows that there is a God, and another knows there is not?

B: True (if you'll pardon the expression). And I suppose we can go on all night dreaming up instances of the thing. But have you ever seen Truth? Do you think you are capable of perceiving Truth?

A: I can't say that I have seen Truth, surely. That is a bit to ask. But I do have an awareness of it, a groping knowledge that it is.

B: But we still haven't defined it. We can't go on till we've arrived at a definition.

A: Well, take this table, and those glasses, for example. Do you sense Truth there? Surely you cannot deny that Truth is there, in that drink, in a book, or in a sunset. It is all around us, and in every instant.

B: Yes. But what is it?

A: Why, then Truth is an intangible Everything. And tangible too, I should imagine.

B: Certainly. And since it is Everything, then it is Nothing at the same time. Wonderful! Truth is both Infinity and Nothing. Here's an awakening indeed.

A: Let's recall an assumption that we assumed was invalid, and say that since Everything and Nothing are Truth, then Infinity and Nothing are synonymous! Therefore, by destroying Nothing, we create Everything. Wonderful, indeed.

B: I'll go along with that.

A: Here! We grow absurd. Another beer should fix us up.

B: I'll go along with that too. But the fact remains that Truth, we discovered, was a state of complete nothingness. Humanity, and the universe in general, have certainly 'progressed' to a state somewhat removed from nothingness. And it seems to be getting further from it. And hence the further they get from Truth. I liken Truth to Nothingness in this case, because it's easier. So little to work with, you know.

A: And every supposed advance removes from Truth. Every new person we meet, or every new idea we incorporate only makes us more fictitious and less like ourselves in the basic form.

B: Quite true. And the reason pleasure-seekers come to ruin is because they use the wrong methods in searching for Good and Happiness, which are the same things as Truth. Rather than a process of extraction from the material world, whether through knowledge or works, they need reject all that they can, and so revert to their former simplicity.

A: Modern happiness-finding schemes are out then. The perfect rejection to put an end to all rejection would be death, of course. The Flood, and the Black Death, and the H-Bomb, then, are far from being tragedies, but the most helpful things imaginable. Complete mass destruction!

B: Of course it would be better if we had not been at all. But even that's not impossible nowadays. I'm pooped, my friend, but at least we've got a different slant on things. We've not wasted time.

A: Right. Where's that damn waiter!

art, music, drama, and things

ON WAX

In the history of jazz, there have been relatively few bands of importance. Two of the half-dozen impressive bands of the modern period are represented on new records. The Stan Kenton Band swings through six standards and one original on the Contemporary Concepts LP. Limelight, the original by Gerry Mulligan, is the best side on the LP, owing both to Gerry's inventive swing writing and Carl Fontana's trombone. The other six tunes are standards arranged by Bill Holman, the best of which are Yesterdays, featuring Bill Perkins, and Stella By Starlight featuring Charlie Mariano. This band does not seem to swing with a true jazz feeling.

The Woody Herman Band, although not so clean, represents the vitality in jazz to a better degree. As opposed to the frequently superficial quality of the Kenton band, the Herman herd have a depth and feeling. Woody's band can be heard to good advantage on a new LP called Road Band. Ralph Burns' I Remember Duke and Cool Cat On A Hot Tin Roof are both exceptionally good, as is Horace Silver's Opus-De-Funk. The best on Captain Ahab, a typical Herman swinger, as good as the band has previously recorded. Everybody gets a chance on this LP, but Dick Hafer, Charlie Walp, Cy Touff and Chuck Flores come off best. This also is a very good recording, and, as on the Kenton, you get the presence of the band on a good record player.

Speaking of presence and good recordings, High-Fidelity is a very overworked phrase these days. It suggests the ultimate in sound reproduction but a large part of the so-called Hi-Fi records are inferior in quality. This brings us to a new release on Audio Fidelity subtitled An Adventure In High Fidelity. It is the Music of The Bull-Fight Ring—The Brave Bulls! It is played by the "Band a Taurina" of the Plaza Mexico. This is the music played at the actual Bull-Fights, following the various phases and moods of the action. The music is not particularly exciting or interesting, although the trumpet work of Rosalio Juarez is pleasant. The sound is the star of this recording—it's magnificent.

Roma Butler at Hart House

A programme made up entirely of Lieder is an ambitious and praiseworthy undertaking, and I wish that more of our artists could show the presence of mind to plan their recitals, giving full preference to the musical schools and styles in which they feel most interested and most at home. Too often, when making up a programme, the artist seems to be inhibited by an idea, begun, no doubt, by his teacher, with the entirely proper view towards building repertoire, that the recital must include something of everything, as though the audience would otherwise doubt the performer's abilities.

Roma Butler, with the priceless heritage of four years' study with the late Emmy Heim, believes that the Lied is an art-form that can create, in its varieties, a programme by itself. In her recital yesterday, in the Music Room of Hart House, she not only justified that belief, but also most emphatically justified herself as a Lieder

Her programme consisted of four groups, each by a single composer. First were four songs by Schubert. Next, the lesser known Peter Cornelius, a devotee of Wagner, was represented by four of his Bridal Songs. From Gustav Mahler, Miss Butler sang three of the cycle, Des Knaben Wunderhorn, which, inspired by the folk poetry and song in the early-century collection of that name, showed a nice contrast with four other arrangements of folk-songs by Brahms.

Throughout the recital, Miss Butler showed a true appreciation of that subtle German quality, Empfindung, which must be inherent in any singer of art-song in that language. The word, hardly translatable into English, is the perception of spirit found in the art. Last night, it was expressed by Miss Butler to her audience in the countless nuances, shades and phrasing that make up fine interpretation of great music.

The Elephant And RUR

By CATIE BRESLIN

If you have visions of parading an elephant across the stage of Hart House theatre for your undergraduate show, forget them. It was tried for the UC Follies one year, and the enterprising directors discovered that the entrance to the stage just wasn't designed for this type of drama.

But almost anything else will go. In its thirty-six years of operation, the theatre has witnessed an infinite variety of college musicals, plays, drama festivals, and even operas, and this year is no exception to the rule. From September to May, there will be only six nights when the theatre remains empty. On the others, undergraduate imagination will be reaching for its limits.

"Offhand, I should say that undergraduate drama is in a more promising situation that it has been for two or three years," said Robert Gill, director of Hart House Theatre. "Even if a student takes no part in these activities himself, he still has a chance to see a modern play by Tennessee Williams, a Shaw classic or a Shakespeare—or a French play, or R.U.R., an interesting experimental drama from the thirties. All these should give him a chance to develop his own properly critical attitude."

"After all," said Mr. Gill, "living theatre has always been a part of our cultural heritage. It's certainly as important as music and painting."

Hart House Theatre, aside from being the focus of dramatic enterprise on this campus, is a unique organization among Canadian universities, in that it not only supports an excellent stage, but a professional staff of seven who maintain the technical and administrative aspects. And according to James Hozack, the Theatre manager, no college show has ever cancelled its booking—which considering the nature of undergraduate enterprises, is perhaps one of the most surprising records in the annals of the theatre.

The Magic That Is Cambridge:—

By KEITH WEDMORE

Cambridge has no stadium, no campus, no fraternities; if anyone alighted at the station and asked to be driven to the University, he would be told it did not exist...

Cambridge consists of twenty-two independent and self-governing colleges, each of its own singular flavour. Only three are occupied by women; of these, one has a dozen inhabitants and was opened last year (New Hall), and one was built some five miles from the town and university by its Victorian foundress for transparent reasons. Further, all the women "live in"—live within the high walls of their college, and are locked in at an appropriately early hour. The competition for female places is so strong that the victors are distinguished for their genius rather than their sociability; hence it will be seen that circumstance maintains what theory used to require: Cambridge is still a male University.

The river Cam flows slowly through the flat fenlands; in this damp, windswept part of East Anglia where the roads from Norwich, Newmarket and Ely meet, there grew up about the Twelfth Century, a number of houses of learning; these chiefly sought after by future clerics who required an alternative to Oxford (founded a century or so earlier, and now in dispute.)

THE BEGINNINGS

The colleges or hostels, were small; they contained usually a dozen Fellows and two dozen or so Scholars, and were founded by the great from the usual mixtures of charity and vanity. They educated priests: most of the ruling class were clergy, whether or not benefited; and Membership of the Church was a requirement of the University until the 1870's. Sometimes a school was founded at the same time, with the idea that it and its sister should, attended consecutively, between them supply all knowledge. Hence—most famous example,—King Henry VI's happy thought of founding, at once, Eton and King's. Not only Monarchs but Bishops (Jesus College) or wealthy physicians (Caius College) added to Cambridge. (At Oxford this generation has seen the growth of Nuffield College: paid for by the motor industry, conscience money Jesus Chapel and cloisters, the earliest surviving buildings of either university. Oxford has no King's Parade, no 'backs.' The for the ruin of a beautiful city.)

THE COLLEGES

The colleges grew and multiplied. The enormous expansion of the late Victorian period added not only many a student (Jesus grew from 50 to say 150 or 200) but unhappily many a building in the worst taste. Let it be said at once, that the standard of architecture at Oxford, as a standard, is higher: Cambridge has no uniformly beautiful college like Magdalen, nothing as irreproachable as Christ Church. It is hard to find an ugly building in Oxford University if easy in the town. But the really splendid colleges—the most breathtaking chefs d'oeuvre, are at Cambridge. Oxford has no King's College Chapel, no Trinity Great Court, nothing like the Early English beauty of term needs explanation. Many of the colleges back on to the Cam, with sweeping emerald lawns running down to the gentle river; and the view from there of the ancient walls, with the daffodils, primroses, and the Grammar School. St. Catharines is associated with rigger and hearty evenings at the pub; Queens' has a gentle musical tradition; Caius has a good reputation in medicine; Trinity Hall is the lawyers' college; Selwyn educates Anglican ordinands. Each has acquired traditions with which its men are associated; for, as men are known by the company they come from, as well as keep, so character and background in time become confused.

Notice the lovely and timeless college scenery, not out of mere curiosity or guide book earnestness, but rather because the beauty and the AGE somehow seep into the life of a man, and by adoption, change him.

HOW THEY DO THINGS

Each college contains a mixture of faculties — flooding by one faculty is avoided—and each college selects its own students. Each student has a tutor, who is personally responsible for his discipline, and general welfare; and a director of studies, who will prescribe his course, suggest his books, and recommend his lectures. The latter also chooses one or several supervisors. A student sees a supervisor, typically, by himself for an hour a week; and an essay is read or problems discussed. The better supervisors supply sherry at the appropriate hour.

Students are examined of a Summer, at the end of May; each faculty setting a Tripos Examination, in two parts, the spare year will contain one for good measure. You come up 'to read History' or 'to read Natural Science'—but the end of your science examination part one forms tripos examination to part of your good time to read something else if you wish. Hence 'Economics and Law' or 'History and English' are popular selections from the key board. (At Oxford there is only one exam. at the end of the third year; so it is not usually possible to change over, and you are more doomed to the choice of your infancy; on the other hand you have two gay carefree years, even though the last is sheer murder. The Universities average 6-12 suicides a year between them, incidentally).

an assistance to this, or not. Cambridge being a vague place, faculties flow into one another, and five o'clock lectures on abstruse subjects are often well attended by intruders. It was estimated that Professor Pevsner's history of architecture (with slides) had an audience but thinly drawn from the history faculty, considering the phenomenal attendance. Some lectures become informal and crowded, with students at the Master's feet as in the Twelfth Century Paris of Abelard—such, for example, was Sir John Sheppard's famous lecture on the Agammemnon, which he translated at sight and practically acted out.

MAGIC

Cambridge. The name is magic, and yet the magic has not been described. Life there is packed with events which, though sometimes dignified and magnificent, find no place in handbooks. Cock-tail parties; or evensong at King's, the showplace of Cathedral choral services, late perpendicular masonry, and rich blue feudal glass. The boat clubs, with their seventy boats and continual afternoon practice on the lower river; the societies, discussions groups, and clubs (there will be perhaps ten meetings a night). Punting on the Cam down to Grantchester, where Rupert Brooke had honey for tea; joining in the mad rush of cyclists going to lectures, gown flying behind them, scarf trailing into the wind, and notebook in the inevitable basket; Dinners in Hall, full and formal. Fellows at High Table, undergraduates in gowns, waiters in evening dress; and a sonorous latin grace preceding all.

The magic of Cambridge is the magic which each finds there for himself. It cannot be described. It lies in the freedom to discover who you are in an atmosphere of perfect experiment. The attention which at other places, or at other times is devoted to specified activity, is here, though intense, variegated. What you will, that you do; and unless you hit the proctors over the head with a beer bottle, you may work any matter out to your own untrammelled satisfaction. You may become President of the Union; edit Varsity; captain the Boat Club; you may, at this or some other game, win a "blue" and the honour of wearing the famous light azure-blue scarf.

You may do nothing. You may go to Caths; be a "good chap," read Economics and drink with the Rugger Team. You may be a poet and blossom into verse in the many weeklies. You may pursue the desires of your heart, and the ambitions of your soul, with the friends of your choice; which must be the aim, as it is the joy, of university education. Above all, you will be a Cambridge man.

There passed from this earth, on April 18 of this year, a man who laid the foundation, along with his colleague Planck, for a revolution in physics of the most profound importance. This man was, of course, Albert Einstein.

Early speculations regarding the nature of the universe were often attempts to force the universe to conform to a mythology or an anthropocentric pattern. Newton observed more acutely and conceived the set of laws that now bear his name. These were thought to be an explanation of the phenomena with which they dealt because they subsumed a wide diversity of occurrences under a few general headings and enabled scientists to predict future happenings. We must remember, however, that Newton's laws are seldom, if ever, obeyed precisely due to the interference of such forces as friction, but these departures from the ideal state have always been easily accounted for.

The abstract model of the universe provided by Newton and his followers was in a couple of instances so inexplicably out of accord with the absurd facts that Einstein felt it necessary to scrap the whole system. One of these disturbing observations which Einstein successfully accounted for was the deviation of the planet Mercury from its predicted path around the sun.

Newton made liberal use of the concept of "forces" in his system. It is possible that such an idea, though widely current in science today, may derive from earlier times when animism was not in such disrepute as it is now. "Perhaps," Einstein seems to have reasoned, "there are no active forces, only a structure of the universe which conditions all phenomena."

Now the mathematicians can devise a large number of universes. We all build our own universe about ourselves, but only in the case of a few of us does our constructed universe come at all near to corresponding with the real universe. The mathematical physicist must choose, of all the possible universes that he can construct, mentally and on paper, with his superior knowledge and skill, that one which corresponds most closely to the observed facts.

We shall likely never know what the correct universe is, since all we can do is build better and better models for ourselves as our fund of facts grows larger. Einstein's model is a purely mathematical one that cannot be conceived materially. The problem of the nature of truth confronts the scientist as it does the philosopher, and as it did Pilate on a historic occasion 2000 years ago when he asked, "What is truth?"

Special means they haven't quite the heart to send you down, and you may take another inferior sort of exam in due course—which will give you an Ordinary, not an Honours, BA degree. Firsts are rare; in Law or History, 2% or 3% get them; most men get what is known as a '2-2' (lower second). This is satisfactory, as it is average, and the average is a good one.

LECTURES

Lectures are optional but often brilliant; you may select or omit as you wish; in law they are customary, in history less so—that faculty even provides competing lecturers in the same subject at the same hour; a salutary custom. Your main work is your work for your supervisor; the lectures are

Sulla Of RUR

Sulla has problems, but she doesn't even know it, and never will. This, as a matter of fact, is the main point of RUR, the Karel Capek play to be produced at Hart House next Thursday, Friday and Saturday by the UC Players' Guild and the St. Michael's College Music and Drama Society. The play is concerned with the threat to man's soul of the soullessness of automation, and with the redemption of man through his own works. The play will be directed by Leon Major. Sulla, who is, incidentally, a robot, is played by Jeniva Berger.

UBC Posts Stolen Arrests Are Made

Vancouver, BC. (CUP): Students were arrested and goal posts stolen after the last football game between the University of British Columbia and the University of Western Washington.

Six UBC students were arrested and twenty others warned by police, after the game. The University of Western Washington is located in Bellingham, Washington, USA.

Five of the students arrested were later released with warnings. One, however, was charged with the possession of liquor while being a minor, intoxication, obstructing a policeman, and resisting arrest. He was finally released on the payment of ninety dollars bail.

Four squad cars of the city police were called out as a result of the students' shouting in the street. The hotel was later closed to all students.

The goal posts used in the game (the property of the city of Bellingham) turned up on Monday morning, on the Canadian side of the border. They disappeared on Saturday night, and when found, were broken into numerous souvenir pieces.

The UBC Athletic Director said he was making a report to the President, and that the matter would be discussed at the next Athletic Committee meeting.

Augustana College Raise Fees To Erect Student Union Building

Rock Island, Illinois, CUP — Augustana College, boasting a new Fine Arts Building, and celebrating the completion of plans for a new women's dormitory, has now turned its industrious head toward the future erection of a new Student Union Building.

With $200,000 needed, and the Building Expansion Fund exhibiting a mere $200, the Student Union Board stepped forward to present a solution. A unanimous vote of that body raised the price of the Student Activity Ticket from $16 to $30. The $14 rise is expected to produce $28,000 per year, or a five-year total of $140,000.

Absolving the alumni from any responsibility, the Board of Control issued a report stating that recent alumni could not afford to help out, and that older graduates had lost intimate contact with the school, thus leaving the onus completely on the students.

Treasure Van Returns To Uoft Shows Many Foreign Handicrafts

Treasure Van returns to Toronto. For the fourth year World University Service will sponsor an international bazaar at Hart House, November 28 to December 1. This year India, Greece, Jordan, Egypt, Japan, Mexico and Canada will all send handicrafts.

Featured will be filigree jewellery from India and Greece, wooden trays from Kashmir, specimens of jade, ivory, gold and brass. The mystic Manchadi seed which, according to legend, will bring 10 times the gods' good luck to the one who owns a seed and 100 times the gods' luck to the one who gives it away, will occupy a prominent place among the exhibits.

Treasure Van is an attempt to finance and publicize the work of WUS — an organization of students and faculty members of 37 countries of the free world. The WUS program consists largely of financial aid for universities of the world in the form of scholarships, seminars, and actual money and equipment. Treasure Van endeavours to bring a small bit of the wide world to the Canadian student, hoping he will learn something of different cultures through their handicrafts, and become interested enough to visit these countries at some future time.

This summer WUS was able to conduct a seminar in Japan which was attended by 70 students and faculty members from the world over. Since 1953 there have been some 30 overseas students studying in Canada on WUS scholarships.

R. A. Preston of RMC Speaks To Students

"Kingston, the Limestone Citadel," will be the subject of a talk given by Dr. R. A. Preston, Royal Military College lecturer, to the Modern History Club tonight.

Professor Preston lectured at the University of Toronto in the History Department, after obtaining his Ph.D. from Yale. During the war, he served in the R.A.F., after which he taught at the University of Wales. At present, he is an executive member of the Kingston Historical Society.

This is a first of a series of three lectures on aspects of Canadian History. The meeting will be held in Falconer Hall at 8:00 p.m.

Second speaker in the series is Edwin C. Guillet, M.A., author of "The Lives and Times of the Patriots," "Pathfinders of North America" and "Toronto." He will reminisce about famous people and places that have figured in his 25 years of Canadian historical writing, at a meeting on Thursday, November 17.

Winner of the Robertson Prize in Canadian Constitutional History while at U of T, Mr. Guillet is a former historiographer for the Ontario Department of Education and historian of the Ontario Educational Association.

Lyman B. Jackes, considered one of the most articulate nationalists in Canada today, will give a slide-illustrated talk December 6 at 8:00 p.m. in the Music Room, Victoria Students' Union. His Globe and Mail editorial three years ago resulted in a CBC television series and a CPR-sponsored cross-Canada tour, both aimed at showing some of the contributions our Canadian forefathers made to the world.

Lacking Meds News Medsmen Angry

"Newspaper Difficulties" were explained by Wendy Michener, co-editor of The Varsity, to the Medical Society Assembly last night.

Miss Michener recommended that medical students contribute more news to The Varsity. "Tonight we have only six stories marked in our news book," she said, "but I know that there are at least sixteen newsworthy stories that should be covered this evening."

Al Davidson (IV Meds) stated that The Varsity was understaffed and that only one or two medical students worked for the paper. He suggested the Medical Society Public Relations Director could "handle the job of medical news quite capably" and that news should be channelled through him in the future.

been invited to present the prizes at a meeting to be held Friday, November 4 in the West Hall, University College at 10 a.m.

The meeting, for first year Spanish students (including high school matriculants), will feature a discussion on the purpose of studying a language, Spanish in particular.

The students of all years who attained the highest Spanish marks on the final exams will be presented with prizes donated by the Dominican Republic, the Republic of Uruguay, and the "Circulo Hispanico" of Toronto.

Professor E. Goggio, Head of the Department of Italian, Spanish and Portuguese, will speak on the purpose of studying Spanish.

SMC Debates Vs McMaster

A debate to commence at 8:00 p.m., in Brennan Hall at St. Michael's, is the first of a series of home-and-home exhibition debates between McMaster and St. Michael's, and will pave the way for future debates on an inter- varsity level.

Upholding the resolution "That the Government should not subsidize university education" will be Charles Purvis (II SMC).

He is supported by Dick Mastrolonato (II SMC) who stated "there are too many cases where the taxpayers' money is simply wasted — example — women students, who never produce in the end, anyway."

Believe It Or Not, They Really Can Engineer Exceeds 40 Beer Boast

By LAWRENCE COHEN

"We are, we are, we are the Engineers.

We can, we can, we can demolish forty beers..."

"Bur-r-p..." added Carl Ramjit, as he downed his 64th glass of beer, "twas nothing." Ramjit, along with 65 fellow Engineering students, entered a marathon beer guzzling race sponsored by the University of Manitoba Engineering Faculty. At the end of 12 hours he had consumed a total of 2½ imperial gallons. Eighteen other students managed to pass the 40 beer mark, while one student staggered to the 5th glass.

Most of the Toronto engineers greeted the news with their usual indifference: "...Is that all?" was the general feeling.

However, less enthusiastic artisans say that the engineers are nothing but incapable braggarts. The whisperings say that the engineers showed their true colors when they refused to bring out their famous cannon for their annual boom. In fact, a petition is being circulated to challenge the engineers to either prove their worth or else change the wording of their song.

Jim Vasoff, Producer of Skule Night offered to pay the expenses of any Toronto engineer who could equal or beat Ramjit's record. Jim went to express his confidence in the Skuleman's drinking ability and his hope that he might meet any serious contender under the "proper arrangements."

When challenged with the prospects of a beer-drinking contest, several engineers voiced their confidence. Paul Kyselka said that he could make a 'valiant attempt' at downing 40 beers. He also said that a four of less amateur drinkers could easily manage the 40.

Bill West, the SAC representative from engineering, felt that all engineers should be able to demolish at least 40 beers. He felt that it was not merely

Most Varsity Students Agree Stern Disciplining Necessary

Students recently polled by the Varsity favoured disciplining of rowdy football fans by University authorities by a narrow margin of 17 to 14.

Following a story concerning action taken by the Queen's Alma Mater Court, students were questioned about their views on the feasibility of such action here.

Most students not favouring individual disciplinary action felt that it would be impossible to identify offenders accurately. A number of others suggested that rowdiness at Toronto games was not serious enough to warrant such action. One student impatiently asked, "Are you trying to run a clean-up campaign?"

Typical of the comments against University action was a statement by M. Wynston: "Students are mature enough to discipline themselves. Such action would be an insult to their intelligence." Hank Walstadt said: "That wouldn't solve the problem. Appeal to their reason, because by prosecuting we defeat the purpose of these juveniles."

Supporting the view of the majority of those questioned, one student said: "When one gets to University he should be on his own to behave, but if he is too juvenile to do so, he should have his bottom spanked." Another student, Mary Linton said: "Yes. If you can get them all without picking wrong ones."

A far more unanimous opinion was found when students were asked if they favoured the traditional practice of tearing down goal posts after a game. Of 34 questioned, 25 indicated disapproval.

The 9 students who did not object to the destruction of goal posts all felt that this was part of the game and that it is usually nothing more than a harmless and relatively inexpensive expression of university spirit.

gall to bet against Benny.

Which is why when he loses and finishes paying off through his nose and throws in the tip of it for interest, he goes West for, but this does not help and so he is now becoming a lush-well.

And now the fellow is figuring to get even with old Varsity by outguzzling even the Toronto Engineers, but he comes up with only a dank effort because these boys cannot only drink like fish but then they really do it up red by walking like pisatorial princes afterwards.

I am looking across the aisle and seeing a pack of Skulemen jolling about a table. The waiter approaches leading a line of flatcars each of which carries an aperitif ala Skule—one hundred gallon vat of Blue and White Joy Brew, with pickled cherries too.

Since I wish to see whether these laddies are able to drink it all, I act very nonchalant so they do not notice me at all as I slither under their table and cock an ear to their talk.

Standards Coming! Western Repentant Sends COD "Gift"

Varsity's long-lost goal posts are coming home!

The "indestructible" standards, battered down nearly a month ago by Queen's students at the football game here, have travelled a long road since, first to Kingston and then to London, where they were brought by Western students two weeks ago.

Jim Vipond, sports editor of The Globe and Mail, received word Wednesday night that the $350 posts were being expressed from London. He said he informed Warren Stevens, Athletic Director of the University, who promised to pick them up on arrival here.

When University of Western Ontario students invaded Kingston two weeks ago they captured the travelling goalposts and took them as souvenirs to London.

Apparently they are ready to give them up as a peace offering, after U of T President Sidney Smith suggested intercollegiate football games might be suspended because of rowdiness among spectators.

It is reported they were going to present them at half time of the game tomorrow, but decided against risking another incident on the field.

It was not clear why the posts were sent to Vipond. "I'm as much in the dark as you are," he said, when questioned last night.

The posts have led to some trouble during their travels. At the Queen's game last week, some Varsity students made an attempt to take the Queen's standards, and despite the fact that there was little violence, seven persons were injured.

Donald G. McNay, a former student at Queen's, now living at Windsor, Quebec, was fined $59 Monday in connection with the cutting of Kathleen Cameron, fifth year nursing science. She was hit by a flying beer bottle and suffered cuts to the head.

No further report has been received on the two students who were partially blinded by lime dust during the fracas. They may have suffered permanent injuries.

SAC Statement

At its last meeting the Students Administrative Council approved the formulation of a request to the student body, to be published in The Varsity, concerning student behaviour at football games. This request is two-fold; first, that students refrain from the extremely dangerous and destructive practices of tearing down goal posts and of throwing bottles from the stands; secondly because of possible expense involved, but especially because of the danger to life itself. This part of the request is directed to all students and is obviously intended for our own benefit.

The second part of the request is directed to all serious-minded students who enjoy the healthy fun which football games provide for us all.

These students are asked to do all in their power to discourage and, it is hoped, prevent completely all practices which take away from the real fun of the games, and, in particular, the two mentioned above.

It is the sincere hope of the S.A.C. that the student body will hear this request and act upon it.

Jim Kirkwood, Emmanuel 11, S.A.C. Athletic Commissioner.

The principles embodied in this message have the official endorsement of the Students' Administrative Council.

A graduate of Concordia College, Ft. Wayne, Indiana, Dr. Pelikan received his bachelor of Divinity degree from Concordia Seminary in 1946, the same year in which he earned his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago.

Since 1953 Dr. Pelikan has been a member of the Federal Theological Faculty of the University of Chicago where he holds the chair of Historical Theology.

BLUES' FORECAST: TROUBLE AHEAD

We'd Like To KO Blues-Metras Varsity Might Put Up Argument

"There's nothing we'd sooner do than knock off the Varsity Blues right in Varsity Stadium," Jovial John Metras is quoted as saying just the other day, and we can believe him. The Western Mustangs, winless in five starts in Intercollegiate football, and under the guiding hand of the outspoken Mr. Metras, will invade Toronto tomorrow afternoon to do battle with Bob Masterson's Blues in the closing game of the league schedule. All the Metrasmen can do is throw a monkey wrench in the works, while the Blues, facing possible elimination, will have their work cut out to prevent such a disaster.

"The greatest team in 40 years" — that's what they've called this year's Mustangs — are winless for the first time since they entered the Intercollegiate Union in 1932, and it's hard to picture them finishing the season in that category.

But the Blues need this one badly to insure a berth in next week's Intercollegiate playoff in Kingston. Should they lose to the Mustangs and if McGill beats Queen's in Molson Stadium, the Varsity's will be out of the running for the Yates Cup. All that is needed is a win over Western, or a Gael victory over the Redmen.

With the team back at full strength after a season of continual major and minor injuries, the picture looks pretty good for the Blues. Masterson has been helped by the return of Rich Bethune, who will see a lot of work at right defensive half along with Phil Muntz at the left. Dave Cresswell will be used to spell Muntz on defense, leaving the Cruncher fresher for those long runs on offense.

Wally Bulchak, who ran so well in place of the injured Jack Rogers against Queen's last week, was re-learning the full-back spot last night to spell off

Don Cheeseman. Peter Maik has a bruised side and will be used sparingly on offense.

Quarterback John Girvin will miss this one for the Mustangs, as will halfback Doug Aitchison and guard Bruce Ward. Girvin has taken to bed with infectious mononucleosis while the other two are ailing in the legs. Speedy halfback Neil Desborough could do the Blues a lot of damage with his shifty broken field running. Desborough ran back two McGill kickoffs 90 and 95 yards for touchdowns last Saturday in London.

Freshman Art Turner will again go with Dave Langhorne at the quarterback slot. Turner tossed a touchdown pass to Bryan Young against the Redmen last week and is an excellent ball-handler.

There's no doubt that the Blues will need all they've got to take the Mustangs tomorrow afternoon. Western won't be happy without a win, and even though the Blues dropped them 20-2 in London in the league opener six weeks ago, the Mustangs could be troublesome right here in our own back yard.

Meanwhile in Montreal, McGill will be fighting for a slim chance at a playoff berth. They must beat Queen's and at the same time have the Blues lose here. The experts can see the Redmen doing just this so it's safe to say the Blues have their backs against the wall.

Harriers Aiming To Regain Title

The Varsity Intermediate Harrier team will be attempting to win back the Intercollegiate title that they lost last year when they toe the starting mark Saturday at McMaster.

Last year the Blue team was forced to take second place to a speedy OAC quintet, losing by a narrow margin of two points. This year's team appears stronger both in balance and depth. Three of the five men have competed in senior harrier ranks in previous years. Bill Gelling, Mal McLeod and Gord Hueston will provide the experience and are ably backed up by newcomers Jim Stewart and John Hetherington.

Entries have been received from OAC, McMaster, Waterloo and Western, as well as Toronto.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

The date was November fourth, 1924, and the place was a small town in central Indiana which, for lack of a better name, its founders had called South Bend. History was being made in South Bend that day, as a small band of college boys, some twenty-two strong, marched to the residence of the chemistry professor to lodge a protest.

The scene unfolded on the campus of a then-little-known Catholic college named Notre Dame, and the great events of that day were to be forgotten in the turmoil that followed as Notre Dame wrote itself and South Bend into an immortal page of football history two days later when the Fighting Irish whipped the Army 13-7.

But very little has been said about the small bit of skull-duggery that went a long way to producing that victory. In addition to the little band of twenty-two there were numerous undergraduates, graduates, interested citizens of South Bend, women, and even small boys. The "Seven Mules" were there, the almost invincible line of Knute Rockne's football team. Only three of the immortal "Four Horsemen" were present, as this delegation had advanced upon the chemistry professor to protest the failure of the fourth horseman, a rather precious fullback who had passed a term test in Chemistry only the day before.

This was nothing short of catastrophic, especially with the vital game with Army only a day away, and the professor in question was being castigated from all directions for having failed Joe — we'll call him that to save investigation — on the eve of the team's most crucial game. The failure meant that Joe couldn't go to Philadelphia to play Army, and such a disaster might well have resulted in a heavy loss for Notre Dame but for the events we are about to relate.

It seems that the professor, after being subjected to threatening notes and an unceasing verbal barrage for the better part of the day, relented, and offered to test Joe again on his knowledge of chemistry, just to be sure that a mistake hadn't been made in the tallying of marks. Armed with this news, the football team in a great Joe up a good part of the night in the dressing-room, stuffing his head full of equations, formulas and all the other abstractions of chemistry. Now, suitably prepared for the important test by his team-mates, Joe was escorted in a big easy chair in the professor's study to take the exam. While his supporters around the room, already listed, were grouped the professor's front lawn, cheering Joe as he went through his ordeal.

"Now, Joe," began the professor. "I just want you to do twenty per cent in this test and you can go to Philadelphia to play Army. Is that clear?"

Joe granted a reply and the professor proceeded. "I'm only going to ask you two questions, Joe, do you understand that?" Encouraged by Joe nodding his head, the professor launched into the first question. "What does the chemical formula H₂O represent?" The professor smiled at the thought of Joe ripping holes in the Army line tomorrow in Philadelphia.

"Uh," stammered Joe. "Sulphuric acid."

"No, I'm sorry, Joe, that's not quite by answer. I've got a question for," said the professor. "But never mind, here's the second question. What is the chemical formula for water?"

Joe thought for a moment and then, just before he answered, he said "I dunno."

"That's right, Joe, you don't. You answered the second question correctly. You got fifty per cent and you can go to Philadelphia to play Army!"

That was the event that helped push Notre Dame to the top in college football, and for history's sake it was the very beginning of the process so often talked about today that mighty word if you're an athlete of sorts. Athletic Scholarship.

We understand that this august rag is printing a forum today on this very question, and we're told we should say something about it. What can we say other than that we don't have them here, and that it's rumored that they have them everywhere else. Shall we quote from the other college dailies who have levelled their bony fingers at us in the past? Shall we speak of the McGill Redmen of 1949 who missed the Yates Cup in a sudden-death playoff with Western. Shall we talk some more about the McGill Redmen of 1955 who could win the Yates Cup for the first time in several thousand light years? Or shall we talk of the greatest team since Balfour and Leadley down in Kingston who began the season without a quarterback and who may end the season in the same position? Or shall we fill reams of paper about Ohio State and the Big Ten?

Or shall we just forget about the whole thing, since we could never hope to prove the existence of such scholarships. Let's just forget about it because even if we could, we wouldn't want to prove it. Besides the problem has no social significance.

Blue Notes . . . Rugger Blues have two testy ones against the Hornets and the Irish Seconds this week-end. Soccer Blues host is Western tomorrow. Trinity Black Panthers face Huron College this afternoon in a renewal of their annual feud. Beat Western.

Victoria Dumps Skule In Cellar Create Three-Way Tie For Top

By JOHN VOJTECH

Sporting a powerful ground attack, Victoria handed a 12-0 loss to St. Skule in a football game played yesterday on the back campus. The victory tossed Victoria into a first place tie with Trinity and St. Mike's. For Skule, the loss entrenched them more firmly in the cellar spot, a position they have not seen for many a year.

Frank Ebenhardt once again led the Red and Gold attack as he commanded his team faultlessly. The way that Vic started the game, an observer would have thought that the scorekeeper would have need of an adding machine. Vic got down into Skule territory twice in the first quarter, but were unable to get anywhere nearer the goal line. The third time, Ebenhardt brought his team down to the one yard line from where Steve Moriarity bulled his way across for the first major. Norm Williams converted.

With Vic again parked on the Skule one yard line, Frank Ebenhardt sneaked over for the score. Norm Williams again converted. This ended the scoring, but not the game by any means.

Whenever Vic needed a few yards, they could always count on Ebenhardt, who took off on many jaunts around the end. Paul Newman and Ron Bertram also pulled off sizeable gains for the Red and Gold. For Skule, Harry Nightengale quartered the team well as he received good running performances from Gord Crandell, Ken Selby and Al Wong. Selby, once he got going, was difficult to stop, especially when Skule was being hemmed in in its own end. Al Wong, a speedy mite, ran off large gains both in the Skule backfield and when he received kicks.

Interfaculty Summary

In box lacrosse action yesterday, SPS II rolled to an 11-2 victory over Vic I as Fisher led the way with three goals. Coswell, Shipley and Rosebrugh had two apiece while Lansky and Watson counted singletons. Kerr and Stothers potted goals for the losers.

In soccer games on the Front Campus Trasewick picked up the only score as Trinity "A" defeated St. Mike's 1-0. Another 1-0 game saw Vic I blank SPS Srs. as Hart booted home the winner.

Pre Meds II defeated Vic I in volleyball 15-5, 15-8.

Whoever will take the Marilyn Bell honors for her college is anyone's guess at this moment, for the results of last night's preliminary meet leaves the final result in doubt. All the races were keenly contested and Saturday night's swimming contest at the Hart House Pool promises to be one of the best ever. We are sorry we haven't the results of the synchronized figures, but this reporter's deadline was too early for such information.

Results of the racing events are: 50 yd. Free style: Jean Crowther, Mary Crowther, Ada MacPherson, Sandra Grant, Anne Oakes, and Jan Sewry. 60 Yard Back stroke: Jeanie Cunningham, Sue McLaughlin, Nancy Doubt, Sandra Grant, Joyce Relyea, and Wilma Augustine. 80 Yard Breast stroke: Mary Crowther, Barb Gluck, Rosemary Vernon, Elizabeth Latimer, Joanne Housley and Anne Stevenson. 100 yard relay: PHE I, OCE, Vic, Trinity, St. Mike's and PHE II. 150 Yard relay: PHE I, St. Mike's, POT, OCE, St. Mike's II and Trinity.

Saturday is a big day for sport on the campus. Not only is there a football game in the afternoon at the Varsity Bowl, but in the morning at the early hour of 10.30, two female squads will compete for the unofficial ladies' football crown, on the back campus. On the front campus, a combination Trinity-UC lacrosse team will meet the gals from Western at 11. If neither female football nor lacrosse interest you (personally I don't see how you could possibly miss either), why not drop into Hart House, Saturday night, at 7:30 for the Interfaculty swim meet?

The Baby Blues, bolstered by a bad leg yesterday, and will quite likely see action Don Bagworth and Dan Mucci will play for the Intermediates, with the former running out of the left half slot and Mucci slated for fullback duty.

Although the Baby Blues racked up twenty-eight first downs to Ryerson's five in the first tilt they showed a great inability to get the ball across when in scoring position. As has been the custom all season, it was the hard-running backfield which produced most of the yardage. Running plays accounted for the three touchdowns scored, as Tim Reid and Bob Dann led the way. In that game with the Rams, the Intermediates completed only six out of fifteen passes and had two interceptions.

Baby Blues Meet Ryerson

However, with a person with the experience and football "guy matter" of ex-pro Toogood running the show, there is no telling what the Rams may have in store.

modern man

The present age of man represents a novel development in the human history.

In all previously recorded history, the main object of human life has been to conserve and to protect what already had been established. All human endeavour centered around the idea that it was best to preserve and perfect that which already existed. Philosophy, religion, art, economics, all revolved around this one central core of conservation.

But within the last century a great change has come upon the world. The old idea of conservation has been dropped, and replaced with the new concept of dynamics. Objects, institutions, religions are no longer revered for the marvel of their existence. Instead, everything appears as a steadily onrushing stream of progress, no one part of which is of any great significance because it will be replaced by the next within a few instants:

All humanity has begun to believe in progress — or in change at the very least.

In economics, this change has been accompanied by the beginning of mass production and the increasing tempo of technological change.

An automobile is not a work of art, as a Roman chariot is; it is a model that one year from its production is outdated. Similarly, all everyday objects of human consumption have been subject to a constant process of obsolescence.

In the field of science, theoretical revolution after revolution has so shaken the established existence that today no self-respecting scientist holds any but tentative opinions on the basic truths of the universe.

In art, in philosophy, and even in religion the succession of changing modes has become so rapid that a recent history of any of these subjects would seem as a flashing kaleidoscope — with each new theory or practice barely underway before another — newer, better, and shinier — has jumped up to take its place.

A sharp cleavage has also occurred in religion. There is far less difference between a man who believes in a Christian God and a man who believes in a pagan God, than between a man who believes in God, and a man who does not.

Ours is an age of unbelief.

Why should this be so? A good part of the reason must lie with the vast revolution in human experience that has taken place. Man has lost his faith in static things, but he has not lost his need for faith in them. He now realizes that the world around him is a transitory thing, but he cannot adjust his mind to this realization. He needs something to cling to, yet he knows there is nothing. The result is that there is a great psychological split between what man knows and what he wants to believe. Man becomes insecure, and because he is insecure, he is afraid.

Man still passionately desires to believe in God, but the rapid and accelerating pace of human progress has weakened his faith in all things absolute. Even with God, a better model will be out next year, so he waits before he buys.

Man becomes cynical. He lacks belief in anything. His world is changing: he does not understand it or like it — although he refuses to admit it — so he retires to the shell of indifference.

This is Modern Man.

Canadian Politics:

Convenience, Compromise and Confusion

CANADIAN POLITICS are seldom sensational, but often interesting. Here Robert Brown, Varsity Co-Editor, analyzes recent developments in the Canadian political scene and concludes that pragmatism is still the central theme in present-day politics.

These last few months have seen some interesting developments in Canadian politics. Aside from a few scattered federal bye-elections, the main focus was centered on provincial elections in Ontario and Alberta.

The Ontario elections last June resulted in an overwhelming re-endorsement of Frost's Conservative government, despite such minor embarrassments as a first-class roads scandal, and a third-rate political scuffle over "The Dempsey Affair."

But far more intriguing than the actual fact of the PC win are the reasons behind it. The question asked by disheartened politicians of the CCF and Liberal camps was—why did the Ontario electorate wish to return the Frost stand-pat government?

The really important question is—why not? The province is prosperous,—or reasonably so—Canadians do not demand the moon with a ring around it. The haunting spectre of last winter's unemployment had abated—with no thanks to Frost, to be sure—but that was beside the point—and by June confident brash Ontario was striding "forward" again.

Under circumstances like these, a Canadian opposition party must offer some compelling reason for turning the rascals out. And the CCF had no such reason.

The Liberals depend mostly on the roads scandals and on the queer affair of Dempsey—which rather backfired on them due to Federal Revenue Minister McCann's almost unbelievably stupid bungling of the affair.

The Liberals secured only moderate gains from their campaign, illustrating again the old maxim of Canadian politics that it is far harder to make a campaign issue out of something for which the government is responsible — like the highway scandals — than about something for which it is not — like bad weather, poor crops, or an international depression.

Some Liberals were heard to cry after the results came in that the electorate apparently didn't care whether the government was honest or not. But this should have caused them no amazement: in the last federal general election the Conservative opposition had equally bad luck with the Defence Department's scandals.

It was the CCF that received the rudest shock in the Ontario elections. For a party that is going somewhere, the CCF are taking an intolerably long time to get there.

Although they increased their seats in the provincial legislature by 50% (from two to three) their percentage of the popular vote actually declined.

Some CCF'ers came up with ingenious—to say the least—explanations for their defeat. But the Toronto Daily Star probably put their finger on one aspect of the matter when they commented editorially that if the CCF wanted electoral victory, they would have to broaden their program to appeal to more people than the underprivileged and oppressed — there are simply not enough of them left in Canada to elect a government alone.

The CCF seem to have great difficulty in recognizing the central theme of Canadian politics, and indeed of the Canadian nation. Canadians are essentially pragmatists.

They do not go for theories, slogans, and the "class struggle." They are deeply interested in where the next meal is coming from, to be sure, but they care nothing for the theory of gastronomy. The CCF will have to offer a more palatable and less doctrinaire dish if it is ever to have any success in Canada.

Other Canadian political parties recognize this dictum, and take care to tailor their policies to the wishes of the people, rather than try to convince the people that some other program is better. The Liberals, in power for almost 30 years, are the great masters of this art of following the electorate around.

The Alberta situation was somewhat the same as in Ontario. A government long in power—opposition charges of corruption and mismanagement — and the return of the government.

Again, the Liberals made considerable but by no means striking gains, while the CCF lost ground. An example of the way that the Canadian electorate likes to befuddle the Socialist theorists was to be found in the election returns of one of the coal-mining districts in Western Alberta—one of the most depressed areas in Canada.

The Social Credit candidate was returned with an increased majority by the heavily unionized and heavily unemployed electors, while the CCF man trailed far behind. Sic Transit Theoria in Canadian politics.

The recent Spadina bye-election—only a stone's throw from this campus—resulted in the election of Conservative Charles Rea to fill the long-time Liberal seat of the late Senator Croll. (Although Croll is not dead, "late" seems like an appropriate term to apply to any Canadian Senator.)

The PC's crowd that the victory was part of a cross-Canada trend: more probably it was a tribute to the personal popularity of Croll and a reflection of the traditional bye-election weakness of the party in power. Whatever the opposition may think, the Liberals are at present a shoo-in in the next federal election; there is no possible alternative.

The last few months have also produced one other political oddity—the Quebec branch of the CCF party has changed its name to "Social Democrats." This change and the policy split which it reflects is highly significant, for it reveals that even in the CCF—the most doctrinaire of all Canadian political parties—the traditional Canadian virtues of Convenience, Compromise, and Confusion are placed before political theories and rationality.

In Canada, Politics is Practical.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Surprisingly Incoherent

The Editor, The Varsity:

I am surprised that you should have accepted for publication the letter by Mr. E. G. Goodin, concerning the meaningfulness of a former article. In a violent criticism of this article Mr. Goodin seems to have sunk to a new low of incoherency.

May I quote—"the facts regarding European women are in direct contradiction of the facts and if anyone can be proud of what is suggested to be North American tradition then his ability to make a valuable judgment is very questionable."

I suggest Mr. Goodin should make sure of his facts, and decide what it is he has in mind.

Does the vocabulary of a Varsity student writing to the press include the phrase "have not got a clue"? Isn't this considered slang in our intellectual beehive?

I suggest that to increase the intellectual level of the contents of The Varsity, one write good clear English and not incoherent slang.

Profanity! Blasphemy!

The Editor, The Varsity:

Please permit me to pass comment on "The Figleaf" in Wednesday's Varsity.

Who is the author of such a piece of premeditated profanation? What is he attempting to accomplish by writing such a blasphemous and gross discourse. Is this work purposely irreverent and obscene or does it carry a deeper meaning, unintelligible to the ordinary reader?

I think Adam should issue an explanation of his article. For if it is as foul as it first appears to be then it is really obscene. A condemnation of the author and the Editor of The Varsity would be in order. If, however, there is a plausible explanation (which I doubt), I offer my apologies for casting any slur upon the author's intentions.

An Excellent Move

I think that the institution of athletic subsidies at Canadian universities would be an excellent move. That is, I think talented athletes should receive financial reward for the time, effort and risk involved. I would add two provisions. One, that no academic concessions be made to such athletes, or in other words, that under no circumstances should a university lower its standards. Two, that there be some supervision of the amounts involved to avoid wild bidding for promising players.

I see no reason why a person who is gifted in some sport shouldn't be allowed to receive financial assistance in obtaining a university education. Other people who sacrifice time and energy for important university activities are compensated, the editor of The Varsity, for example. The fact that football players and such persons receive no official remuneration is exploitation of the worst kind.

From a practical standpoint, football pays the way for the whole athletic program. The players devote, at the very minimum, five evenings and an afternoon each week, risk permanent injury and increase their study burden and the benefits accrue to the remainder of the student body who participate in a prepaid recreational and intramural program.

FORUM

I Cannot Justify It The Question

A university in Canada is an institution of higher learning and should be limited to those who wish to further their education. Consequently, I cannot justify a policy whereby a boy who is limited to Athletic qualifications only be encouraged to enter university and subsidized while he is putting in time at an institution of higher learning.

However, I do approve of helping boys who are qualified to handle university work, but are not in a position to fully finance their education through part time work during the session and by summer employment. Many times a three or four hundred dollar loan will permit such a boy to eat three meals a day and complete a college career.

The student who is academically sound, of good character, and has ability in sports is the type of boy I personally admire. I feel that all universities should have loan funds to help such needy students, and I would be the first one to recommend a loan for the all-round type of boy who is unable to continue his studies without such assistance.

Harry E. Griffiths,
Director of Athletics, McGill University.

Outlawed

It's strictly against the tenets of Canadian universities.
J. P. Loesmore,
Sec'y, U.T.A.A.

DO YOU THINK students should be subsidized for their athletic ability?

What are your reasons, and how would the system be run? Students and staff officials and other informed people were asked for their opinions.

Teams Add Prestige

Athletics are an integral part of a university. It adds prestige if we produce consistently championship teams. The only way to produce a championship team is to subsidize athletes. With an enrollment of 11,000 it is a disgrace if we lose to a small university like Western. Football receipts pay for all other Varsity sports and we should attempt in this way to get better football. Possibly there wouldn't be so many drunks at the games if the football were better. The university should scout high school teams and have its alumni all over the country watching.

Hugh McDougall, HSMC

Education or Entertainment?

I am not in favor of athletic scholarships. This is not on the basis of envy for those whose bodies are better co-ordinated and trained than mine. Rather, my dispute is based on the aims of a university education.

cal training before they can become permanent staff. Bursaries for needy students be they athletic or not, but not money for men on the basis of their bodies.
MM, H Triu

Good Publicity

If the university is primarily for the training of the mind, and if the benefit of the university stems from the ability of the minds it has to deal with, then athletics must occupy a secondary place. Athletics train the mind to react, rather than to think. These days, their prime purpose is entertainment. Athletics' place in university is, then, a non-essential one; no employer makes his new employees take a year of physi-

Yes, students should be subsidized. Many students need financial help to go to college. Athletic ability just is intellectual ability, merits assistance. Athletes contribute to our University. The University gains good publicity when its teams do well. A "B" or "C" average should be maintained. Scout for good players from the high schools.
A member of the Basketball Blues

State Policy

There is no justification, by any means, to accept this as a normal element of a university. But it is a practical question, not theoretical. Since the university permits athletics to be a source of revenue, it then the athlete is in a different position than the rest of the student. Athletics are now a much a part of the program as literature. I am in favour of facing the facts and establishing a stated policy. That is: either subsidize or not, but do it in the open. Only such athletes as can afford time away from studies should be accepted and all those that make the team should automatically be given a limited subsidy.
Rev. J. Dorsey, SMC

$200 For Blues

I'm for them. A lot of other schools are doing it. As long as they don't bring in Americans, it's all right. We're actually paying to play football to the tune of $200 we could have made during the three weeks of summer camp.
Don Smith,
Co-captain, 1954
Varsity Blues.

If Bona Fide . . .

If you mean should athletes have their tuition and board paid by an interested graduate, the University, or an endowment fund, I believe I would say yes to the first, no to the second with reservations, and no to the third.

There have been cases on this campus of a student attending with the financial aid of a grad not related to him. This appears to be perfectly alright if the student is a bona fide student. You must remember that there are perhaps 1,000 students who attend this college every year whose tuition is, is paid by a grad, and only ten or so may have any athletic ability at all. This ability can easily be construed as being coincidental.

The system should be run . . . well it's hardly a system. If you have a system you find the coach etc. shopping for players, and the thing breaks down as in the US.

John Wilson, III Trin.

A Solution?

Summary of an article in the March 1954 Atlantic, by H. W. Stokes, Dean of Washington College

"Conceived as education, athletics are inexplicable, corrupting and uncontrollable: as public entertainment to be provided by educational institutions, athletics become comprehensible and manageable."

College athletics should relinquish the traditional "game for the game's sake" fraud that is peddled to the public and publish openly the reality of commercial athletic contests.

Then colleges would evade the duplicity, camouflage and crass dishonesty that permeates and taunts collegiate athletics. Professional administration of a professional sport would free presidents and faculties from this unnatural diversion and allow them to concern themselves with their true vocation—education.

Athletes would be sought openly; allowed to remove themselves from academic obligations and follow their chosen trade. By the admission of this novel concept, the underhanded pressures and stresses would be removed. Universities could pursue the primary duty—intellectual advancement.

Simultaneously, colleges could offer John Q. Public high-class entertainment unblemished by scandal, ill concealed professionalism and false amateurism.

Vs Rich Parents Discrimination

There's no greater harm in athletic scholarships than there is in the ability of wealthy parents to send their sons and daughters to college.

Apuleius

The university seems to tend to discriminate against football players. Football stops the needy student from working through the year. Therefore, I'm for them.

Phil Muntz, Varsity Blues

Put It In The Open - To Avoid Duplicitry

By MAL CRAWFORD

The following is a condensation of a series of articles written in the fall of 1951. By the then Sports Editor of The Varsity.

An occasional look at the headlines, magazine titles, or movie pages should suffice to make the most casual observer aware that college athletics are in the most uncomfortable position of their stormy history. Not until this year has there been such widespread condemnation of the whole system of heavy athletic programs with subsidization of athletes in major intercollegiate sports. The press has played up the sensational aspects, and periodicals have hit the stands carrying everything from vehement articles explaining why Cuyahoga State Teachers dropped football, to weighty editorials calling upon American youth for a complete reassessment of its values.

Two recent events have set the situation in screaming relief. Last winter a series of basketball scandals broke, revealing that college players were accepting money from gamblers for throwing their games. Then in May came the news that practically all the West Point football and basketball teams had been breaking the honour code in order to pass their exams. Gently mentioned was the impression that team members in colleges were a sort of gladiator class, thoroughly corrupt, taking a free ride through college without the academic responsibilities of other students.

Colleges, faced with rising costs, are cutting out intercollegiate football right and left. Many small college reputations depend to a great extent on their football or basketball success, and not being able to compete with the biggies in the inflationary scramble for good teams, they suffer in more than just their athletic departments. Many are finding they cannot stand the pace.

But many colleges whose prestige and financial position have been established by famous football or basketball teams have been able to raise or maintain high academic standards. Some have in this way become ranking universities. Gate receipts have enabled them to afford higher paid staff and facilities, and the name itself serves to attract students. The so-called athletic scholarships to achieve teams of the necessary quality, and which seem to result inevitably when sport becomes business too, are not usually taken out of the funds of the university. Usually alumni organizations provide a fund for the purpose.

A greater problem created by the attractiveness of sport as a solution to these ills arises from the financial expediency of catering to people who want to be college boys or girls, but not university students. A large number of American universities have degraded themselves academically with physical education courses featuring twenty hours a week of sports and one hour of academics, or courses in Canasta, fly-casting, and other aspects of higher learning.

Instead of compromising the standards of the universities directly, it can be done by doctoring the marks of players to give them the standing required by the league—the indirect approach. This is an even greater offence than the other, since as well as lowering academic standards by encouraging poor students at often allows persons who have no right to be at a university and will gain little benefit from being there, to take the places of bona fide students. Such a case came to light this year at William and Mary University in Virginia. Instances of this sort are rarely heard of, but are easy to conceal. While professionalism or subsidization may not be the causes of the most spectacular scandals which come to light, the problems they cause and are caused by are nevertheless very great.

Canada has had little experience with problems of this sort. Football is important only in the four big colleges of Eastern Canada, which all have academic reputations sufficient to dispense reliance on high class football teams.

WUA of UC Decides Openly To Use Democratic Process

Open meetings will be revised —not abolished, it was decided by unanimous vote at an open meeting of the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College held yesterday.

Democratic principles were upheld by the meeting, which decided the electorate of the association must have a say on important issues. In the future at least four such meetings will be held a year.

Approximately fifty people attended the meeting, held for the first time in the Junior Common Room. Encouraged by the attendance, it was decided future meetings would continue to be held in the JCR at four p.m.

Since the WUA voted funds for the renovation of the JCR it has been made possible for them to have joint control of the room. Previously meetings had been held in the Women's Union.

Plans to streamline the meetings will continue. One or two main controversial issues will be discussed at meetings and executive reports will be kept to a minimum.

The meeting also mandated the SAC rep to approach the Council regarding an investigation of the University Bookstore. Prices and efficiency of the Bookstore were under fire.

A plan to integrate non-residence girls more fully into the life of the college was also discussed. Final decision of definite plans was left to the next meeting.

Royal Canadian Institute Hears Discourse on Antarctic Penguins

Antarctic Penguins will be the subject of the second lecture of the Royal Canadian Institute science series to be held tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

Dr. William J. L. Sladen, Medical Officer and Biologist, The Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey, will speak. The talk will be illustrated with lantern slides and motion pictures in natural colour and sound records.

Dr. Sladen is to deal particularly with the life history of the Adelle Penguin and trace it from the time it returns to its breeding haunts in spring, until the fully grown young depart at the end of the season.

Illustrated will be the landing of the parents in tempestuous seas, predation by the Skua, the recognition between parents and chicks, even when the chicks are in 'creches' of 100 or more, and the social organization of the birds.

Dr. Sladen spent three years in the Antarctic. Since his return he has been working up the results of his medical researches there.

Necessity, Mother Of Great Men

"Great men do not make great times," said Dr. R. A. Spencer Wednesday afternoon, "but great times evoke great men." Dr. Spencer, a history lecturer, was addressing a Flavell House audience of over 100 on the subject "Personalities in History."

He pointed out that whenever a great man has been needed in history, one has always been found.

Turning to the study of history, Dr. Spencer stated that the historian must look through the events of history, rather than merely looking at them, and that history must be read actively and not passively.

"The historian must think the thoughts of the people with whom he is dealing," he added. He then discussed the pros and cons of the biographical approach to studying history, concluding that the correct method lies somewhere between completely biographical and non-biographical approaches.

Dr. Spencer concluded by discussing the individual's role in determining history.

Mac Debaters Defeat St M: Students Do Need Govt. Aid

University students do need government aid, debaters at St. Michael's College decided last night.

Visiting debaters from McMaster University, Hamilton, successfully defeated the St. Mike's team and the resolution that "The government should not subsidize University education." The final vote was 18-12.

McMaster successfully ripped into the proposal and showed that government aid was necessary to maintain the culture and greatness of our country.

"Endowments of some kind have always been needed to support universities," said Rodger Inglis of McMaster, "and to-day they are needed more because of increased costs of living." In 1920, 18 per cent of costs were met by endowments, while to-day it is only 8 per cent. In view of such a situation, Inglis maintained, government support is a must.

Speaking for the government, Charlie Purvis (II St. Mike's) supported the right of educational institutions to their independence in academic matters. "Education is above and superior to government; it is the life-blood of society and so must be independent Duplessis, that Habitant-Himmler, that Peron with a French accent, must not be allowed to continue to have Laval U. professors fired because they criticize him."

Bruce Hartley, of McMaster speaking for the opposition, stated that Canadian culture could not be maintained if the government withdrew its present support. "At present, the universities are recruiting-grounds for the armed forces and government posts.

"Government is the people," said Dick Mastrodonato (II St. Mike's), "and the people pay the taxes — to reduce the tuition they pay for their children." The help that is given, is given haphazardly, he said, and so "there are countless parasites feeding on the government, taking a pleasure-cruise of three years."

$75,000 Is SHARE Campaign Objective

The University's annual SHARE campaign opens fire this Monday as student canvassers tackle a $7,500 quota.

Money collected in the two-week drive will go to student relief projects sponsored by World University Service. Forty per cent of the money is earmarked for four projects in Pakistan, Israel, Indonesia and Japan.

Carl Anderson, SHARE campaign chairman said last night:

"This is the only fund-raising campaign permitted on the University of Toronto campus which goes to aid students directly. It is our opportunity to contribute to the welfare of students in all parts of the world.

"We should remember that for these students the problems are not of luxuries or "extras" but of existence itself."

He said the highlight of the campaign will be a dinner in Hart House. Father Jerome D'Souza, Indian delegate to the United Nations, will be the speaker.

"Father D'Souza is a priest and a dynamic social leader in his own country. We only have 300 tickets for sale."

H.H. Will Provide Lasses' Lunches

For the first time this year the Great Hall of Hart House will be open to members and the ladies of their choice for a pre-game luncheon.

From 11:45 until 1:30, prior to the Western game tomorrow, a cafeteria style luncheon will be served. As has been the custom prior to football games non-members of the House may have lunch in the Great Hall, and they too may bring ladies.

Students Are Growing Smarter Veterans' Record Is Challenged

Staff members of the University of Toronto feel that students are actually becoming smarter.

This was the consensus of several professors interviewed in connection with a report from Yale that student marks are rising so much it was necessary to reduce the honor list.

President Sidney Smith commented: "The present record is even better than that established by the veterans immediately after World War II. This is probably attributable to a lower enrollment."

"I am not as impressed with the vets' record as I was ten years ago," he said. "They studied too much. A reasonable amount of other activity is desirable."

But Professor E. S. Carpenter of the anthropology department felt that the veteran's record in all respects was the best yet.

"After World War II a new spirit was noticeable," he said. "More interest was taken in classes and greater relaxedness was evident. The students thought there was a real purpose to be achieved in their studies and worked hard toward it."

The discussion arose after Yale reduced the honors list from the students gaining more than 80 per cent to those in the top one-quarter of the class. The change was felt necessary because more than half of the 800 students qualified in the second term last year.

Said Professor D. C. Williams of the psychology department: "I suspect that students are smarter, but on looking back I don't see how they could be."

guy is crooked as there is more plans than one, which is evident from the number of toasts which they are drinking. When they can hold their breath no longer and come up for cigar smoke the second whispers furtively from the foam.

"The only thing wrong with our brilliant plan is that maybe the Westerns are wising up to it and instead of being drowned in these great vats, they lap them dry and get inspiration to play above their head against the Blues and so maybe they come within a touchdown or two of winning, which would be humiliating to say the least, which is the most."

There is being momentary panic until the third, an intellectual-type skulie, cries out, "Don't panic chaps. We'll see this thing through," and from the decisive way he is swishing the suds from his chops with his curly little tongue, we just know he is right.

Which is how I make my scientific type deductions and call Saturday's game. By a coincidence it is coming out that Varsity wins by a mere triplets the right, but the duty of every red-blooded engineer to uphold the age-old and hallowed tradition.

Perhaps the contest should be restricted to those entering first year engineering, and the fledglings who failed the test should be transferred to another course.

Not only that, he saw a fellow at the McGill game who chugga-lugged half a gallon in the end zone. This is absolutely true, he said, as will be testified by the hundreds of fans who looked on in amazement.

The Varsity itself has its own champions: early in 1951, Freddie Fischel, an architect, and then Varsity sports reporter, was said to have drunk six pints in a similar contest in less than three seconds each. Some claimed that it would be absolutely no contest; while others lamented the fact that their budget didn't provide for beer since they weren't of the executive class.

Members of the engineering society quipped that it was far too expensive trying to prove something that is generally known as a fact.

Artsmen were frankly skeptical of the engineers' practical ability; they had few reservations about their own, however. Johnny Harasti (UC) claimed he drank 24 pints the other night to prove that he was of age, before he could get into the local tavern. Doug Stewart (IV Trinity) exclaimed, "Engineers, hell! I know artsmen at one college who think they live clean if they drink less than half as much again three evenings a week."

Medsmen were unavailable for comment; the reporter couldn't gain admittance to the KCR.

BLUES, GAELS IN FINAL

Muntz Murders Mustangs

Varsity's Phil Muntz charges around end in the first quarter of Saturday's finale against Western. Bryon Young moves in for the tackle with Bob Irwin and Ray Johnson coming from the other side. Muntz was best man on the field with a 10.3 average as the Blues crushed the Mustangs 38-6.

—VSP by Stan Klosevych

Western Crushed 38-6 Muntz, Rogers Sparkle

By JOHN WILSON

The once proud Western Mustangs fell before a merciless Blue offensive Saturday afternoon and absorbed their worst drubbing since years before the war, 38-6, in Varsity Stadium.

Succumbing completely to the Varsity onslaught the Mustangs appeared thoroughly inept in the later stages of the game, while the Blues, playing up to their early season brilliance, were personal authors of Western's worst season ever, setting the stage for what is sure to be a Canadian gridiron classic this Saturday in Kingston.

Leading by a shaky 13-6 margin after a slow first half, the Blues exploded for four touchdowns, one unconverted, and two singles in the second thirty minutes, without an answer from the Mustangs.

Don Johnston, Gene Chorostecki, Jack Rogers, Fred Smale, Dick Risk, and Peter Maik all grabbed majors in the seemingly unending parade to the Western goal line, with Maik adding five of six attempted converts. Ed Skrzypek's booming punts went for singles on three different occasions, as the Mustang backs conceded a point anywhere from five to 25 yards behind their own goal line.

Freshman quarterback Art Turner, filling in for the injured John Girvin, was one of two lonely lights in the Mustang offense, scoring an unconverted touchdown in the second quarter, and adding a single just before the half. Only other outstanding performer for the helpless Mustangs was fleet Neil Desborough.

Beer Guzzling Mark Falls Three Gallons Not Enough

Varsity has the new student boozing champ!

And this is what Tony Bomben, the Toronto engineer who established the new record, had to say: "I could drink ten more bottles right now. 'Cause I'm rolling."

The second year Chemical Engineering student polished off 33½ pints of beer in five hours, 12 minutes to break the former record held by Carl Ramjit of the University of Manitoba. The latter took more than 12 hours to drink 2½ imperial gallons.

Bomben's total came to an amazing 3.14 gallons.

"My mouth feels like the bottom of a bird cage," he said when he had finished. "Or as if 10,000 Indians walked through my mouth with dirty feet."

Bomben was the only person drinking for the record, but he was provided with official timers and counters, and a large gathering of witnesses and admirers.

It was estimated his consumption would amount to more than 5½ gallons of Manitoba beer, because of the latter's lower alcohol content.

Jim Vasoff, III Engineering, described Bomben's struggle to set the record. He started at noon yesterday after no breakfast, tossed off ten bottles in the first hour, then paused for a ping-pong game in which he defeated a sober engineer 21-6.

He slowed down in the second and third hours, drinking eight bottles each interval. The play-by-play account said he went for a walk after the twentieth bottle and slowed considerably on the 26th.

He bounced right back, however, to chugalong the 27th. From then on it was easy, and when finished he was reeling but sur- (Continued on Page 8)

SHARE Underway Drive Begins Today

Next Wednesday balloons bearing the colours of the various faculties will be flying from the top of Hart House. They will indicate the progress each faculty is making towards their objective in the annual SHARE campaign.

The World University Service carries on a similar campaign in universities throughout the world to aid students in various phases of their university life from books to beds.

The University of Toronto's objective is $7,500 with part of this money earmarked for special projects.

In Japan 2,000 students suffering from tuberculosis have a sanatorium with only 33 beds. SHARE funds will aid in building a larger T.B. centre.

In Israel, Pakistan, and Indonesia, where quarters are so crowded that 5 and 6 students share one small room, the funds will go to provide more adequate housing facilities.

"WUS helps those who help themselves," said Carl Anderson, chairman of the SHARE campaign. For instance, in Israel the students of the Haifa Technion guarantee to provide the land, labour and furniture, he said. WUS funds will provide the building material.

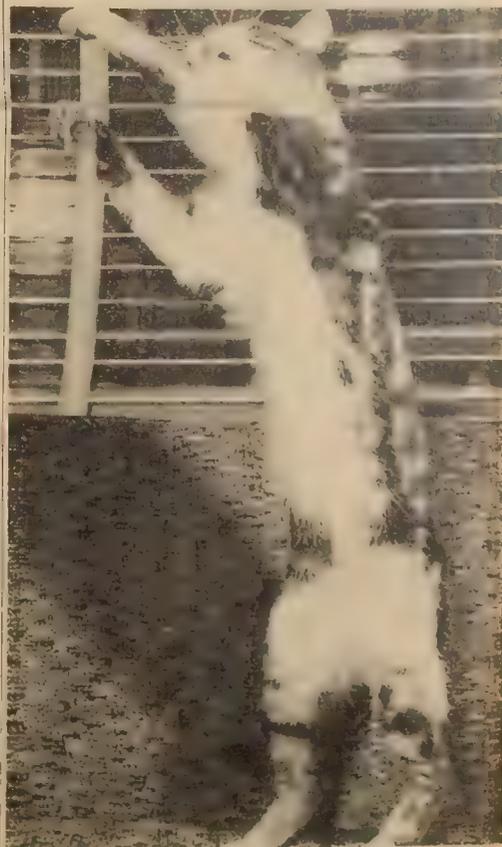

"We hope that each student and member of the faculty will contribute $1.00," stated chairman Anderson. Representatives of the WUS will be responsible for personal canvassing within each faculty.

Remember, he said, income tax receipts will be given for contributions of $1.00 or more.

Big event of the two week campaign will be the SHARE banquet at Hart House, Monday, Nov. 14. Guest speaker Reverend Father Jerome D'Souza, Indian delegate to the United Nations will speak on "Asia in Transgression."

Tickets at $1.00 can be obtained from EAC reps and at the SAC office. The banquet is open to both sexes.

Paper Darts Fly - But Not Bottles As Fans Behave

Paper darts, fashioned out of programs, took to the air instead of beer and whiskey bottles here Saturday as 11,000 "well-behaved" college football fans turned up at Varsity stadium to watch University of Toronto Blues lambaste Western 38-6.

At the game's end, as fans flooded the field, the wooden goal posts at the north end took their customary topple groundward, but it was mainly an all-Varsity affair. Western fans didn't get near them.

The scuffle was mild compared to last week's so-called "shenanigans" at Kingston in which seven students were injured.

At half time, Engineers let a blast out of the pint-sized Skule cannon but only the noise was big. The ritual was carried out in mud field, well out of range of spectators.

Dark Room For Cloak Room

Stan Klosevych, ace Varsity photographer, Saturday night, was stampeded into the Hart House ladies' cloak room by 50 irate females.

When halted at the door by a lady attendant, Klosevych protested vehemently at this maltreatment of a man in a male sanctuary.

His pleading was in vain and the herd of women—accompanied by the photographer and the attendant finally ended in a morass in the middle of the floor.

Klosevych's last comment as he bit the dust was:

"By God I've never had so many women carry me off before." Accused by several other Hart House members of starting the stampede Klosevych replied: "I certainly did not. I was standing there like an innocent lamb when these she-wolves attacked me."

"I suggest they use one door as an entrance and another as an exit in future. Who knows: maybe the next man will decide to stay."

Kingston In Past And Future Described At History Meeting

Kingston as a port and naval base featured the address of Professor R. A. Preston, a former staff member of the University of Toronto, at the meeting of the Modern History Club in Flavelle House.

He described the strategic part Kingston had played in the War of 1812 as a strategic naval base and shipbuilding centre. He told an amused audience how the war had developed into a shipbuilding race between the United States and Britain, until there were actually ships up to three-mast sized and 100 guns. He said, that after the war the ships were left to rot until in 1838 they were sunk in the Harbour.

Professor Preston went on to tell how Kingston had increased as a commercial port for the transportation of grain and had become by 1841 the central point in Ontario. The repeal of the Navigation acts was in the Professor's opinion largely responsible for Kingston's decline in prosperity.

Professor Preston closed by saying that in the future with the coming of the seaway Kingston may become a great port again.

"Talk And Talk" Speech Subject Of Philosophers

The U of T Philosophical Society gets off to a talkative start tomorrow night as Dr. G. Edison, Head of the Trinity College Department of Ethics, presents a paper entitled "Some Talk About Talk."

Dr. Edison has been associated with the University and Trinity College in particular both as undergraduate and as member of the staff. His main interest in philosophy lies in studies of Aristotle and modern logic.

His lectures emphasize the importance of deciding whether or not philosophical ideas are really valid, and this is the tone his address is expected to adopt.

He is firmly convinced of the value of philosophy and feels that although the sciences may have made progress which appears more spectacular, nevertheless philosophy has kept pace with them.

"When philosophy seeks to model itself on the physical sciences," he said, "it is frequently given to talking sheer nonsense. The analysis of language in particular, although of great importance, is certainly not the whole story."

The meeting starts at 8:15 Tuesday in Croft Chapter House, University College.

PHE Girls Take Swimming Win

Another year and another Interfaculty Women's Swimming Championship for the girls of the School of Physical and Health Education. PHE splashed themselves to swimmers' victory with 42 points, followed by St. Mike's with 25, Victoria, 17, POT and Nursing, 13, O.C.E., 11, and St. Hilda's, 5.

Although no Interfaculty Swim records were broken the meet was a success and was exciting from start to finish with many close finishes in most of the events. The girls who swam

Saturday night were winners from heats held on Thursday night at the preliminary trials, except for the divers who did not compete Thursday evening. At that time, however, the finals in the synchronized events were run off and the "Esther Williams" who gained first, second and third placings for their colleges demonstrated on Saturday the routines that won them standing.

In the synchronized solo, the results are: 1st, Barbara Heenan; 2nd, Carol Heider and 3rd, Margaret Stott, and in the Synchronized duet: Mary Lou Nash and Joan Davie were first, followed by Ada Macpherson and Pat Elsiey and Margaret Stott and Pat Humphreys. In the School figures, Barbara Heenan, Nancy Doubt and Barb Gluck were 1, 2, 3, in that order.

In the diving competition, Patti Evel was the star on the board with 87.9 points. Second place went to Rosemary Whealy of Trinity.

Results of the racing events are:

50 yards Free Style: Mary Crowther, J. Crowther, and Ada Macpherson.

50 yards Backstroke: Sue M. Loughlin, Nancy Doubt, and J. Cunningham.

50 yards Breaststroke: Mary Crowther, Barb Gluck, and Joanne Housley.

Individual Medley Race: Joan Cunningham, Barb Gluck, and A. Macpherson.

150 yards Medley Race: POT and Nursing, and Trinity.

100 yards Free Style Relay Race: PHE 1, St. Mike's and Victoria.

Congratulations are in order to all the participants for their "Marilyn Bell efforts," but especially would we like to extend our congratulations to the Executive of the Women's Swimming Club, especially President Barb Gluck and also the staff supervisor, Miss Jackson for the excellent swim meet that they organized; without them, the meet would not have been the great one that it was.

Forestry Loses To UC Redmen

By HOWIE MANDELL

University College closed out the league schedule in winning fashion Friday afternoon by coasting to an 18-0 shutout over Forestry.

The first time U.C. got their hands on the ball they marched down into Forestry territory but were held on the Woodsman's 35 by a hard-charging Forestry line. Here Sid Weinrib's attempted field goal went wide but it was long enough to give the Artsmen a 1-0 lead.

Danny McComb added to the U.C. score early in the second half when he barged over from the 12 yard stripe. The score was set up after Ziggy Goodman, McComb and Bob Nadin ran the ball for 45 yards on three plays. Weinrib's convert was good.

The kickoff following the touchdown was fumbled by Forestry and U.C. took possession of the ball on the Forestry's 38. On the next three plays U.C. drove to the 21. Then with Garry Vipond throwing a beautiful block Bob Nadin scampered over the goal line. Weinrib added the extra point.

Marv Talsky completed the Artsmen's scoring in the third period when he plunged over from the two yard stripe.

Goodman, Weinrib and Talsky were U.C.'s best while Bob Armstrong again stood out for Forestry.

2 Cody Awards Of $350 Each To UC Students

Winners of the two Maurice Cody Scholarships were announced yesterday.

Donald F. Forster (Political Science and Economics) and Tom C. Hammond (Modern History) will each get scholarships of $350 awarded on the results of a competitive examination held at the opening of the session.

The exam was based on three papers: The special topic was the Guaranteed Annual Wage, and the two other papers dealt with Canadian history prior to 1850 and Canadian history to the present time.

Don Forster serves on the UC Literary and Athletic Association and the NFCUS Scholarship Committee.

Contacted after the award and asked what he intend to do with the $350, Forster replied, "That's a question I'd rather not answer."

Tom Hammond is from fourth year UC.

Blue Ruggerites Win, Lose

Toronto University rugger Blues defeated Hamilton by 16 points to nil on the back campus Saturday afternoon, but lost 3-0 to Irish Seconds yesterday in a weekend doubleheader.

The score in no way illustrates the closeness of the Saturday game or the cracking pace which it was played. Hamilton's always looked dangerous and the Jones brothers were as formidable as ever. The Toronto pack led by Andy Baines were at their usual fine form and after a forward dribbling movement from their own twenty-five Baines dived on to the ball for the first try of the game. Jacquifailed to convert. A few minutes later Hamilton was penalized but Bill Chadwick was unable to make the difficult penalty kick. Just before half time wing forward John Shindler and John Hill combined in an effective move down centre field and it was only by a frantic dive on to the ball by Hamilton that a further score was prevented.

A second movement in centre field brought the Blues more success and a clever close passing movement between the forwards resulted in Andy Baines giving the ball to Mike Laughlin who touched down right between the posts leaving Chris Jacques an easy kick to make it 8 points for Toronto as the half time whistle blew. Soon after half time the three quarters were moving quickly in their own half and a long kick ahead by Chris Jacques was caught by Stan Leper who raced over for the corner for a further try which was unconverted.

In the dying minutes of the game a scrum on the Hamilton five yard line resulted in their furly forward, Bob Wilson, landing on the ball to give Toronto their final try. Bill Chadwick rounded a nice afternoon's play by converting to put Toronto in the lead by 16 points to nothing.

If any deserves praise for an afternoon's clever play it is Roger Hurst who saved the day for Varsity countless times as a fullback. Varsity now seems a certain candidate for the Toronto league finals, with four wins and one loss.

NATIONAL CAT WEEK

The Case For The C

A worthy cause

We, the editors, are happy and proud to present you this page in honour of a most worthy cause: National Cat Week.

We hope that you will be touched as we have been touched at the suitability of devoting a week to this time-honoured creature which has now been in existence many millions of years, and which has always been woman's best friend.

Let us remember, during this week, all the cats we have known and loved: the Champus Cat, Mehitabel the Cat, the Cheshire Cat, Old Possum's Practical Cats, the Cat o' Nine Tails, the Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, the Cat that curiosity killed, the Tom-cat, the Hep-cat, Puss 'n Boots, the Pussy in the well, the Brinded Cat what has mewed thrice, Astrophe's Cat, and our favourite, the cat who is away while the mice do play.

We pause for a word from our sponsor.

Tabby's cat food is the Most Good with milk or buttered toast
Serve in wine or under glass,
Tabby's cat food is the real cat's meow.

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, get your Tabby's cat food now. Give your feline a special treat. In years to come, he, she, or it, will remember National Cat Week with gratitude as the first time he, she or it, tasted Tabby's nippy cat Food.

We return you to our editors.

In conclusion, we urge you to devote your energies tirelessly to the cause of cat week, as you do so laudibly for Education week, SHARE week, Book week, UN week, Mother's and Father's Day, and all other worthy causes.

Let us remember — lest we forget.

Meow!

This is the breed of cat known best to 11,000 University of Toronto students — the hep kind.

This official statement of the American Feline Society, Inc., New York 3, N.Y., in The Varsity office recently marked "FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE." We hasten to publish it as it is written by Robert Lothar Kendall, President of the Society, Inc., and is the original: "CATS DESTROY SONG BIRDS? — BUNK!"

Of all of God's lesser creatures hindered by fallacies, old wives' tales and misinformation, the Cat ranks first as a victim of man's thoughtless abuse, vilification and maltreatment.

It is always popular to believe that song birds, so highly valued for their insectivorous nature and musical attributes, are destroyed by cats.

This oft-repeated charge simply is not true. The facts, as gathered by the various wild life organizations, state highway department technicians and biologists and individual investigators, prove otherwise.

Here, for example, is a sample report, covering the dissection of 193 cats killed in highway accidents, describing their stomachs' contents:

Mouse meat	38.1%
Young rabbit	25.6%
Rat	11.4%
Table scraps	6.9%
Turtle and fish	2.7%
Pork	2.4%
Grasshoppers	2.4%
Chicken	1.5%
Bulk matter (including cat food fillers)	1.8%
Grass, herbs, hair and liquid	7.2%

100.0%

One notes the complete absence of bird meat or even feathers!

On the other hand, it is extremely unpopular to mention that the nation's sportsmen slaughter untold thousands of birds to increase their skill of marksmanship, seldom bothering to identify while aloft these tiny winged creatures. Later, when the evidence of such wanton destruction is discovered, tabby is blamed and, if he happens to be in sight, is subject to instant dispatch or horrible maiming, depending upon the degree of skill of the second gun-wielder.

Too, cats are decimated in considerable numbers by small boys who have developed unbelievable accuracy with slingshots, the more modern zip gun or the conventional air rifle.

Again, a factor seldom considered is that the general inroads of civilization, the gradual reduction of fruit trees, the paucity of safe nesting locations and the lack of interest in nature and her wonders by a generation of TV addicts and sports car enthusiasts, all have contributed enormously to reducing the number of birds in all categories.

During the past few years, numerous anti-cat measures have been introduced in municipal and state legislatures, in the guise of "bird-protection" or "tax" bills. The latter, of course, appeal to tax-hungry officials, always on the prowl for new forms of revenue with which to meet the ever-mounting costs of government.

While all humane and animal welfare groups protect the animal and all cat clubs (actually, chambers of commerce for the cat industry) add to his prestige and popularize him, none puts forth the enormous and widespread multifaceted effort expended by The American Feline Society, Inc., New York 3.

This is, indeed, the world's largest cat organization and is manned exclusively by non-salaried people in all walks of life. It operates through 143 member societies and 43 field volunteers, spread from Massachusetts to Hawaii and from British Columbia to Costa Rica; also in Europe. It services and protects American

In its seventeen years of existence the Society has produced 12th to second page, has entered the literature, TV and radio, and magazines and newspaper boards (usually, with a whiskered face) to tell us that we can have 300 cat book titles.

While the Cat is not destined to be enjoyed as a deity and one hopes, will be the deaths he died in the Middle Ages, he deserves for a place in the annals of modern civilization, cease sniping at him. Moreover, he'll be a great asset to create his purr-fect

... And The Case

Robert T. Morris, an American critic of the following discussion of cats in his book "The Third Era in Journalism" (The Stratford Press)

Let us assume that forty reporters were to be placed upon some question they could really understand: The Errant Cat, for example. The errant cat is costing millions of dollars' loss to this country annually. It nearly wiped out the remnant of the heath hen until public-spirited citizens in Massachusetts subscribed funds ample for giving salaries to men who would take the miscreant in charge. The chief fount from which the errant cat flows is the farmhouse where God-fearing people allow female cats to adopt principles of free love.

Other cats besides errant cats are destructive. Human life in our cities is tragically lost every year because of the midnight yowler that kills in a year more people than are killed by lions and tigers. Hundreds of people on the verge of suicide need only a few hours of sound sleep in order to gain control over the impulse. The final act is committed in the small hours of the morning to the tune of a doleful negative note in minor key proceeding from the backyard which pierces the window panes and renders sleep impossible.

Hundreds of people sleep in their beds. Suddenly, a noise arises that is eyed indignantly. The patient gets up his arms and dear body's mother. Hundreds of people with unrequited love has finally found a fashion. Out of the air. Eats convulsions takes the far away. A pair of tears are in the closet.

Anyone Seen A Mouse?

I'm passionate about the things

I'm a lover of cats of the avidest kind. I'm a reincarnated Egyptian. My affections embrace the entire feline race. I adore cats of every description. I adored them in verse; I adore them in prose, From the kink in the tail to the satiny nose. No tabby's too shabby; no manx too truncated, No kitten too friendly, no cat too aloof. No possible Persian could cause an aversion. There just aren't any cats I have hated And here of my passion is proof. I will stand in the street while they roll on my feet, They can rip up my hose with their claws. It doesn't displease when they scratch at their fleas, Or have kittens in one of my drawers. They can leave their spare hairs on the seats of the chairs, They can pilfer their milk from my jug. And it's really quite nice to bring moribund mice And play catch-as-catch-can on the rug. Be they stinky or crazy, prolific or lazy, Homebodies or heading for violent ends. It can't be prevented. On cats I'm demented. The one breed I detest is my friends.

The Cat In History :

Man, Dig That Crazy Mixed-Up Cat!

By W. R. CHADWICK

The American people have, once again, in their great hearted simplicity, allowed a childlike, quixotic inner nature to peep through their dollar hardened exterior. First, it was a bunch of whooping cranes which defeated the whole American army in a fight for some strategic ground in Colorado, and now, cats. It seems Fathers and Mothers are only remembered for one day each year, whereas cats are now to be honoured for a whole week. Yes, Nov. 6-12 is officially to be known as National Feline Week.

Cats. How on earth does one sing a paean in praise of pussy? My own experience with the creatures is limited to the indestructible kind continuously dynamited by wretched little mice in movie cartoons, so, I decided to follow the Varsity's dictum of 'when in doubt, conduct a survey.'

I went first to a smoky, pseudo-art, subterranean coffee room, where the inhabitants firmly believe the sun rises and sets, as indeed it literally does for some of them. In a dim corner was a likely subject. He was gazing with an adoring mystic smile at the butt of a Du Maurier in a dish of green Jello, and murmuring, "A thing of beauty is a joy for ever."

"Excuse me," I whispered, "What do you know about cats?" He very slowly focused his eyes on me, and within 7 or 8 seconds a sweet smile had fully formed.

"What?"

"Cats."

"Whereabouts?"

"No, cats. National push the pussy week is almost upon us, and I want to know something honourable and good and clean about cats."

"Ah," he breathed, "Go to Baudelaire; he's full of cats."

I quietly retired, baffled.

From there, I crossed to the other side of the tracks as it were, and somewhere in the vicinity of College St, came upon two members or S.P.S. One of them had three empty bottles of beer at his feet, and was in a state of total intoxication.

The other one was in the process of draining a bottle of rye, and, although I afterwards learnt that such exhibitions are usually done with a mixture of ginger ale and water, I was very impressed at the time. He too, was a little under the weather. I approached the pair from down wind, and turning to the more sober of the two asked him what he knew about cats. He looked at me quizzically for a moment, and then, stooping down to do up the zipper on the left hand trouser leg of his strides said,

"Sorry Mac, haven't driven one of them things since two years."

As well, Canada does need roads and bridges.

As a last resort, I sought out a medical student, and managed to catch up with one of the less haggard members at the noon hour. He was eating a banana on his way to a lecture, and as I ran alongside him, I heard him mumbling over and over to himself something about "10 hours a day, 10 hours solid." "What?" I shouted at him, "do you know about cats? The real McCoy."

"Know a story about a one eyed cat," he roared back. "Seems there was this drunk in a tavern, who was trying to demonstrate that he was sober to the bouncer. "Jush t'prove t'you tha' I'm not drunk," he said, waving his hand in the general direction of the entrance, "See tha' cat comin' in th'door, ish ony got one eye."

"That cat's going out," said the bouncer, and bounced him." So saying, the medman disappeared behind a stethoscope and ended the interview.

From all this, it seems that the cat isn't fully appreciated on the campus, and I think it would be a beautiful idea if, during National Feline Week, each one of us sits down in the quietness and privacy of our rooms, and in a spirit of humbleness, and of sincere yet joyful gratitude, have a sort of stocktaking of the benefits that cats have brought to each one of us individually, and to the human race in general.

Our Feline Friend's History

By JANET EAGLESON

The name "cat" applies to any carnivorous mammal of the family Felidae, although it is given more specifically to Felis Catus, the domesticated cat. Some species of cat is natural to all regions of the world except Australia. Felidae are characterized by their retractible claws.

Cats may have been domesticated by pre-historic man, but were definitely tamed by the ancient Egyptians about the 13th century B.C. The Egyptians used them to protect grain and for bird hunting. Hunting cats were often trained to swim after their quarry. In ancient Egyptian religions, cats were often associated with various divinities including Ra, the Sun-god, Isis, the moon-goddess, and Pasht, the goddess of love. Cat mummies, carefully embalmed, have been found in both temples and pyramids.

Cats are also associated with gods in Norse legends, especially with Freyja, the goddess of love.

Phoenician traders brought Egyptian cats to Italy well before the time of Christ. From there they spread to the rest of Europe and the African-Egyptian strain cross-bred with the European wild cat. This combination is the ancestor of our tabby cat today. At first laws were enacted in Europe to protect cats. The first record of a cat in Great Britain is a law issued by Howel-Dda, a prince of South Wales, in 936 A.D. to insure their safety.

In the Middle Ages cats were lowered from their former exalted position and became objects of fear, scorn, and cruelty because of their association with witches. The superstition about black cats being bad luck also comes from this association.

Cats can be divided into two categories, short-haired and long-haired. The short-haired variety originated in Africa and Europe while the long-haired came from Persia and Afghanistan. Although Angora cats used to be very popular in the U.S. and Europe, they have been replaced by the Persian.

Although tailless Manx Cats derive their name from the Isle of Man, they are actually most common in the Far East. Long tailed cats are seldom seen in places like Malaya and the Philippines. No one really knows how they got to the Isle of Man, though many feel it was due to a mutation. The ideal Manx cat has no tail at all, but rather a depression covered by a tuft of fur where the tail should be. Because of this tuft of fur and their extra long hind legs, many New Englanders call them "rabbit cats" and say they are the result of cross-breeding.

This is felt to be biologically unlikely, because cats are exclusive about breeding with other species, much less other families, unlike dogs.

Siamese cats are considered remarkable. They are the result of a mutation several thousand years ago, which has been cultivated by careful breeding. However, Siamese cats tend to have kinky tails and crossed eyes, defects which breeders haven't been able to eliminate as yet. Unlike most cats, Siamese usually have blue eyes, though some do have yellow ones. They were imported to the U.S. and Great Britain in the late 19th Century. Since 1924 breeders have been experimenting to try and develop a long-haired Siamese by cross-breeding them with Persians.

Tortoise-shell cats are usually female, while sandy or yellow ones tend to be male. Science isn't really sure why, but it has to do with the relationship of color chromosomes and sex chromosomes.

Cats are supposed to possess a sense of humor, a good memory, and high powers of concentration. They are generally thought to be more intelligent than most other mammals, including dogs.

The antiquity of cats is shown by their name. The word "cat" appears in many languages, though the form may be slightly different, as in the French "chat" or the Spanish "gato."

Much to the annoyance of dog lovers there is an old legend relating that it was a cat which was given to Adam and Eve to comfort them when they were banished from the Garden of Eden.

songsters start

"Since singing is so good a thing, I wish all men would learn to sing."

William Byrd wrote the above lines in the 16th century in an introduction to a series of songs. He gave several reasons to prove his contention about singing. Among these he stated "it is a knowledge easily taught, and quickly learned, where there is a good master and an apt scholar."

In the case of a newly revived group, The Hart House Songsters, the matter of a "good master" has been well looked after. Bill White, Personnel Manager with the John Inglis Company and a well-known musician, has offered to lead the group.

As for the "apt scholars", Mr. White is looking for people who like to sing but who think they cannot. The group will be very informal in nature. Mr. White intends to do simple harmony without any sheet music or piano accompaniment. He has proved his ability in this type of thing time after time with large groups of servicemen and women during the war and with "y" groups and many others all over Canada.

Mr. Byrd also said "The exercise of singing is delightful in Nature, and good to preserve the health of man." Whether this is true or not we cannot say, but we do know there are many men on this campus who would like to have a chance to sing songs which are perhaps a bit too ambitious for the noon-day Sing-Songs, but do not have the time nor the inclination to join the Hart House Glee Club.

The Songsters plan to meet every Thursday from 5.00 to 8.00 p.m. in the Music Room of Hart House. Drop in to listen and we guarantee that before long you too will be singing like you never before knew you could.

Mr. White will be taking the regular Sing-Song in Hart House today to demonstrate how he plans to run the Songsters.

Ballet Extended

The University Extension department is giving a little attention this year to another kind of extension — ballet extension.

Anatole Chujoy, editor of Dance News, opened the six-lecture course with a discussion of choreography as seen in classic and contemporary ballet.

Ballet he defined as dance composition, and choreography as the art of composing a dance. The term classical, in ballet, he pointed out refers to anything within the tradition. A ballet may be classic and romantic at the same time, a situation which cannot arise in any other art.

Choreography in the Marynsky Theatre at the height of the classic period last century was performed on a huge canvas. A choreographer could use up to 400 dancers in one ballet, with the most extravagant setting and 6 or 7 staff composers in the pay of the Zar, all at his disposal.

The most important considerations at that time were the pleasure of the court, and the prestige of the ballerinas. The general outlines for the full length ballets; then in style, were fairly standardized. The ballerina must have her solos and pas de deux and the chorus must do a waltz or two while she was changing costume and getting her breath.

Almost coincident with the revolution in Russia there was a revolution in ballet. Many of the old company were scattered about Europe with no state institution to foot the bills and greatly reduced facilities.

This led to a breakdown in the traditions with a consequent series of innovations culminating in the present Balanchine school of choreography. First-rate composers were asked to collaborate, one-act ballets were composed for the first time, secondary dancers became more important and the stories became simplified or symbolic, and the stories used were either symbolic or very simple in structure.

The present emphasis, Mr. Chujoy said, is not on the dancers, but on the dance. The dancer himself is often the central character, and the "meaning" of the dance is akin to that found in music.

The next lecture in this series will be given tonight by Janet Baldwin, a Toronto ballet teacher.

Caledon Meet For UN Club Past Reviewed

Delegates from five Canadian Colleges are expected to attend the fourth annual Caledon Conference of the United Nations Club, it was announced last night by Allan Townshend, UN Club spokesman.

The weekend, to be held this year from November 10 to 13, will have as its theme "Review," and will be concerned with an attempt to clarify the achievements and deficiencies of the UN in its first ten years of life. Also to be discussed are the present problems of the UN and possible solutions to them.

The location of the weekend will be Caledon Hills Farm, a country property of Hart House, located forty miles from the campus.

"A full and interesting schedule will create a cordial atmosphere for discussing and exchanging ideas on the UN," said Townshend.

Those wishing application forms should call Townshend at WA. 2-0319. The deadline for the application is Wednesday, November 9. It is to be sent to the United Nations Club, 113 St. George Street.

David Lloyd, leading tenor of the New York City Opera Company, performed at Eaton Auditorium last Thursday evening under the auspices of the Dewi Sant Welsh United Church. Throughout the evening Mr. Lloyd demonstrated his tasteful musicianship and full technical mastery in a wide variety of styles. The programme consisted predominantly of high quality, lesser-known works from the classical, romantic and modern periods with some Welsh and English folk songs at the close.

The programme opened with Handel's Sound and Alarm from Judas Maccabaeus, a dull rendering that suffered from the thinning of the piano arrangement of the original orchestral accompaniment. This was followed by Hayden's She Never Told Her Love, beautifully and sensitively performed, as was Beethoven's Adelaide which followed.

Mr. Lloyd next turned to seven songs from Schubert's Die Schone Mullerin, all well performed with good ensemble between singer and pianist.

More modern songs followed, by two of the best American writers, Charles T. Griffes and Charles Ives. Both were in a real sense startlingly original. The Griffes was entitled An Old Song Resung, the "old song" being the well-known carol I Saw Three Ships. The Ives piece is a setting of the lyrics of a traditional cowboy song called Charlie Ruffedge. This is a tale of the cowboy's death following a fall from his horse, and around the theme Ives has built one of his characteristically rugged structures.

In Tom's Philosophy Aria from Stravinsky's The Rake's Progress, Mr. Lloyd showed his mastery of operatic style in a fully dramatic presentation of the rake's philosophy of life.

The programme continued with folksongs, maintaining the same high standards of technique and interpretation—particularly interesting were the Benjamin Britten arrangements of The Ashgrove and of Oliver Cromwell. The former demonstrated excellent use of bitonality (i.e. two keys at a time).

From here on, Mr. Lloyd's choice of songs went to lower levels. However, he redeemed himself, especially considering the predominantly Welsh audience, with a well-paced, sincere rendering of the Welsh battle hymn known in English as All Through The Night.

Marie Milburn and Great John A. Explored

The Exploring Minds programme Sunday evening (CBLT 6.00 p.m.) was billed as "the first of two documentaries about Canada's first prime minister, John A. MacDonald and the development of Canada from 1844 to 1855." Ostensibly no half-hour or hour-long programme could deal adequately with both of these topics. Professor Creighton has been a brave man to try. Drawing on material from his famous two-volume biography of Canada's first prime minister, he presented background information and dates from the narrator's armchair, while Robert Christie, as Sir John A., took over the screen when a momentous event in Canadian history reached its climax and an excerpt from a momentous speech, by Sir John A. was needed to point up dramatically the current state of affairs.

These speeches delivered by Robert Christie were presented in a lively fashion; how closely they succeeded in aping John A.'s actual mannerisms, I will never know, but assume that Mr. Christie took his cue from impressions recorded by people who had actually heard the man, and accept them as such. TV graphic artist Graham Caughtry provided simple but effective black and white drawings as backdrops for Christie's performance, now of the old House of Commons, now of the Upper Canada Legislature, and finally of the offices of Mac-Donald and Charles Tupper.

Two sidesteps from the presentation of strict constitutional history were made; one (commented by very successful drawings by Caughtry), the reading of a letter from one of the delegates on a mission to England to further the realization of Confederation, which described a day at the Derby Races. The second (minus flashbacks), the reading of a letter by John A. to his sister, describing his audience with Queen Victoria after Confederation had been completed. ("I went into the reception room first," he told his sister, "since I was head of the delegation.")

In this kind of documentary it is difficult both to appeal to the interest of the average viewer and yet present a programme that is 'worthwhile and informative.' Familiar as we are with the type of 'great-man' programme that concentrates on personality, even to the extent of describing what the great man ate the night before he did whatever it happened to be that he did to make himself famous, it is still incontestable that a static presentation of facts and dates does not make for good TV watching, and I think this particular programme would have been more appealing if it had dwelt more on the personality of John A.

Perhaps I was expecting something that the programme did not intend to give, but the successive presentation of whiskered Canadian politicians reading their letters and speeches left us with a still-life impression: this is not the way of successful television programming. However, I still like Exploring Minds (confused though I am whether the name of the programme refers to the viewer's mind as something supposed to be doing some exploring or to the programme material that has been explored) and I'm still going to tune in next week for the second part of the Creighton documentary.

Dentantics Major Draw

Dentistry students at the U. of T. gave Henry the Eighth an inferiority complex, then worked around it to produce "Dentantics '55," one of the best College shows in several years. Three skits, an introduction and a finale, all in a spirit of pleasant parody, form the skeleton of Dentantics, with a stuffing of wit and good playing to give the flavour.

The characters of Shakespeare, it seems, have fallen into popular disfavour, having been displaced by folk of Hollywood and TV. To regain a place in the limelight the Shakespearians resolve to study their competition, thereby to discover the secret of success. The obvious place to conduct said study is the "city there is, called York," and clearly the man to send is Hamlet — who "knew poor Yorick well."

By using this device to introduce the different skits of Dentantics '55, the drill-hall men avoided the common falling of College shows. In the past few years most of these shows have presented either a loosely-connected series of skits or one long, sometimes tedious, play-type production. Good writing, matching fine songs and some magnificent hamming made the introduction number an important part of the show, indicative of what followed.

The Dentists, for their parodies, cut into two successful movies and one highly-rated TV show — Not As A Stranger, Mr. Roberts and The Honeymooners. It was a surprising range of subjects for parody, for it is difficult to parody comedy and two of the subjects were definite comedy, one at least very good comedy. It was proof of the quality of the writing in the show that even the comedies were successfully handled, so skillfully in fact that a new comic angle was derived for each.

Looking to the future, a slight frown replaces the smile of satisfaction on me this show elicited. Of the stars, the writers, directors and set-designers who made this year's Dentantics a hit, most graduate in the spring. This year's "Franklin T. Pull-over," Mucus Larsh's father, and Henry VIII, Dave Engel, his "straight man," Sid Kirson, Mucus Larsh himself, as well as Mr. Roberts; and many of the other top-notchers will be gone before next year.

A spark remains though. Used only for an entre-acte number this year, folk singer Jerry Gray was a show-stopper. It would probably be possible for the Dentists to build a complete show around him.

For this year, though, a satisfied clap for Dentantics '55.

ROSSUM'S ROBOTS INVADE CAMPUS

The day of two — college, three-letter dramatic productions has arrived.

This Thursday evening R.U.R. — a "fantastical melodrama" hits the boards of the Hart House theatre for a three-night stand.

Karel Capek's timeless, placeless setting provides another opportunity for St. Michael's and University College stars to combine in presenting a show.

Last year, directed by Leon

Major, the united forces staged Brigadoon, drawing excellent notices from campus and downtown critics.

Once again Major is in the director's chair and has lined up a cast of 20, headed by Les Lawrence and Patricia Masse. Major and Lawrence have done considerable work together, including a summer's work at the Jackson's Point Red Barn theatre.

Hailed by New York critics as a "momentous" play, R.U.R. is a dramatic "thinkpiece" concerning the problems of the impact of automation on the life of modern man. The initials R.U.R. stand for Rossum's Universal Robots, man's created, soulless beings, mechanically more perfect than man himself.

One critic has called it a "super-melodrama, the melodrama of action plus ideas, a combination that is rarely seen on our stage."

The work of designing sets for the production has fallen into the hands of Wilf Pegg, a veteran of many shows at the Crest Theatre, the Peterborough Summer Theatre, Canadian Repertory Theatre and Hart House.

Guiding genius of the production is producer Dave Dunsmuir, with Wally Russell technical adviser.

Let Bull Rampage In Co-eds College

Guelph, Ont.—(CUP)—It wasn't the proverbial bull in the china shop . . .

It was a real, frisky, 1000-pound bouncer that students at the Ontario Agricultural College here turned loose in MacDonald women's residence, Thursday night.

And Dr. Margaret McCreedy, principal of MacDonald Institute was not a bit pleased with the belated Halloween prank.

She called it, "the filthiest trick ever," and promised that no stones would be left unturned in efforts to track down the offenders.

It all happened this way: A group of Ontario Agricultural college students slipped up the front walk of MacDonald Institute late Thursday night and ripped off the main doors shoving the frightened beast inside.

The bull frisked about the room, a newly-furnished library on the main floor, knocking over tables and chairs and lamps. Meanwhile women students sleeping above failed to hear the commotion.

In the morning, a cleaning woman found the animal asleep on a rug.

"This time, students have bitten off more than they can chew," Dr. McCreedy said. "We have had some tricks pulled on us before, but this was the filthiest."

Dr. McCreedy promised that students and teachers would work together to "make the culprits known."

The two front doors were discovered in the morning, piled on top of lumber at the rear of MacDonald institute. Dr. McCreedy reported. She said they were put back on immediately.

On Halloween night, male students of the Agricultural college poured hot tar on the front steps of the women's residence, forcing them to use other entrances.

Goalposts Come Home

Varsity's much travelled goalposts are examined by Jim Vipond, Globe and Mail columnist; Bob Masterson, and Warren Stevens. Skule Nite Cast To Visit McGill Increase Fame

Members of Skule Nite have been invited again this year to the McGill Winter Carnival. Last year part of the Skule Nite cast took part in the McGill show, and their fame reached even Australian university newspapers.

This is the first year in which McGill has attempted a show with representatives from several Canadian and American universities taking part. The Skule Nite cast will represent the University of Toronto.

Skule Nite is on at Hart House next week, from November 16 to 19.

Must Know Religion Smith Tells Group

Winnipeg, Manitoba (CUP): There is barely enough religious study being done and there is an intellectual need for such study, said Dr. Sidney Smith, University of Toronto president, last Thursday. As guest speaker he was addressing the annual commencement of United College, University of Manitoba.

"It is possible to graduate in some universities with a sound knowledge of Greek and Roman mythology and know nothing of the Christian foundation of our civilization," said Dr. Smith. Unless a student knows about religion he can not be expected to comprehend all literature, Dr. Smith said, for religion plays a large part in literature.

Dr. Smith, a former president of the University of Manitoba, told students and faculty that he was much in favour of denominational colleges. He said religion was responsible to a large degree for our democratic way of life.

Dr. Smith also told the assembly in the Knox United Church that preparations should be made now to take care of the expected increase in university enrollment within the next few years.

"Strong colleges make strong universities," he emphasized. He said that these colleges must be able to meet the demands of the future.

The Manitoban commented in an article announcing Dr. Smith's visit that he was one of Canada's most distinguished scholars, and under him "The University (of Manitoba) enjoyed one of its greatest periods of co-operation and untroubled administration . . . Today he is the driving force behind the University of Toronto."

PC Leader Pushes National Health Plan

A new plan for National Health Insurance was presented Thursday to a meeting of the Progressive Conservative Club.

Dr. Phillips, Ontario Minister of Health, said that the Conservatives were not collaborating with the Social Credit Party who are also promoters of such a scheme.

He remarked, "I couldn't use a language here to say what I think of the Social Credit Party."

Dr. Phillips said the plan is meant to protect the family unit and the individual from running into financial embarrassment due to a long period of hospitalization.

It was first fostered by the PC's just before the last provincial election; but the party hesitated to mention it at that time as they felt it would be construed by the people and press as a ruse for gaining votes, he said.

Dr. Phillips explained that what the PC's want is a comprehensive plan to provide for such things as diagnostic and maternal care.

The doctor spoke of Premier Duplessis as "a great politician, an actor and a comedian" and seemed to be quite undismayed by his stand of refusing to go along with such a Health Plan, should it be adopted by the Federal Government.

prisingly coherent.

Professor Ferguson of Pharmacology said there had been cases of death from alcoholic poisoning after a litre of brandy, but none as far as he knew from beer drinking.

Vasoff termed the achievement a vindication of the engineering faculty.

Bill West, SAC rep from Engineering, said Bomben's was a "great feat." But B. A. Warren, president of Emmanuel, tried to douse the flames of achievement with "The Varsity is making a big fuss about nothing."

"Beer-drinking contests are definitely not front-page material," he said.

Falsies, Peanuts at Vic

"Geneva has changed nothing," the topic of Tuesday night's debate in Alumni Hall, Victoria, has generated some spirited controversy, according to the debaters.

On behalf of the Government, Mac Claridge (II, Poli Sci & Ec) said that since Geneva Russia "has been so conciliatory as to make current East-West friction peanuts compared with the recent hostility between Queen's and Varsity."

(II, Poli Sci & Ec), "The iron curtain goes up and down like a woman's skirt. Their attitude since the Geneva Conference has been as deceptive as a pair of falsies and twice as dangerous."

Don Stevenson, (IV, Poli Sci & Ec) another government supporter, made the cryptic comment that "If a hockey game had no rest periods the players would kill themselves and the fans would become nervous wrecks."

UofT Enrollment Up 400 More - Evans

Enrollment at the University of Toronto stands at 11,270 and by the end of this month it may be up another 150, University Registrar Joseph C. Evans said yesterday. The figure represents an increase over last year's registration of nearly 400 students—or about 4%.

Sharp increases were noted in registration at the university's four arts colleges and in special part-time courses for teachers.

According to the Registrar's figures, there are some 4,547 arts students enrolled here of which some 1,068 are part-time students registered in special courses for teachers.

In the four arts colleges, the enrollment was up 460 over last year and the increase in students registered in teachers courses was

Fences Felled By Unknown Football Fans

Student vandals did an undisclosed amount of damage last Saturday night as they wrecked two fences on the campus.

The students tore down a fifty foot stretch of fence behind the Navy League of Canada Office, 109 St. George St., and also wrecked a fence at St. Hilda's College, Trinity.

Bob Dutton, Trinity Hall Porter, said that he saw the students smashing down the fences late Saturday. Dutton said that there appeared to be about twenty of the students—and added, "I didn't think that I should go any closer to them."

He said that the students appeared to be led by about five or six ringleaders. He was not close enough to them to identify them as Varsity or Western supporters, he said.

Mr. Shaw, of the Navy League, said that the whole 50 foot length of board fence behind the League office had been demolished.

"Twenty certainly made a real job of it," he said. He was unable to estimate the amount of damage, and said that he also could not tell whether Varsity or Western students did the damage.

Lucky Students Announced To Go On USA Weekend

The names of the students selected for the Cornell Weekend have just been announced. Hugh Little, Co-Chairman of the EAC Weekends Committee, said that the winners had been picked from over 90 applicants — "a record number."

The students selected are: Cathie Breslin (III St. Mike's), Ann Hossack (III Vic), John MacLeod (Grad. Stud.), Allan Millard (IV UC), John Switzer (II Law) and Ron Wintrob (I Meds).

SHARE

So far, 74% of the SHARE campaign objective has been met. This year's goal is $7,500 and it is hoped that each student will contribute $1.00, said a SHARE spokesman.

Big event of the two week campaign will be the SHARE banquet at Hart House, Monday, Nov. 14. Guest speaker Reverend Father Jerome D'Souza will speak on "Asia in Transition."

Each rep is asked to turn in his faculty's collection to Bruce Wallace in the Engineering Stores from 1 to 2 p.m. day.

Not Even Pop In Stadium As 2,000 UofT Expected

Police will be on hand Saturday to make sure that no one carries liquor or soft drinks into the Queen's stadium for the intercollegiate play between the Varsity Blues and the Golden Gaels.

At a special meeting of the Queen's Alma Mater Society as a result of recent vandalism at games, the Society decided that anyone caught drinking in the stadium will be fined or arrested by either city police or Alma Mater Society. It will then be fined in the AMS court. Fines will be between $30 and $200. This includes Varsity students, added the Society.

Extra city police, as well as twenty-five Alma Mater Society constables will guard every entrance. Since the ruling has been made a condition attached to the purchase of tickets, police will be able to ask that the contents of suspicious-looking parcels be revealed.

The Queen's Journal reported in a telegram last night that pop is running high, as the Gaels look for their first championship since 1937. Thirteen thousand students are expected to cram into the stadium, and there are not enough tickets to go around.

Tickets went on sale to Queen's students Friday, and more than 2100 were sold in less than eight hours. The ticket offices have been swamped with requests, and letters requesting reservations have been piling up, reported the Queen's Journal.

In one day, seven or eight hundred tickets have been sold here, an increase over the five hundred sold on the first day of sales last year, and well over a thousand Varsity students are expected to attend the game.

Student vandalism has been the concern of both Toronto and Queen's officials. President Sidney Smith considered the possibility of the cancellation of college football games, and the Students' Administrative Council published a statement in last Friday's Varsity, requesting the students to refrain from tearing down goal-

Virgin Birth Possible - Lancet

London (Exchange) Scientists have confirmed the possibility of virgin birth.

An article in the Lancet, a British Medical Journal, brought up the point when reviewing a talk recently given by Dr. Helen Spurway, a lecturer on biochemistry and eugenics at University College, London.

Spontaneous parthenogenesis or virgin birth has been evident in the case of rabbits and it appears that there is a possibility of such a birth among humans, the article said.

The journal reported that traces of virgin birth could be expected to occur in the first query would be about one in 131,072,000,000 or one had that for the birth of sextuplets.

Recognition of most cases of virgin birth would be unlikely, for occurrences would often be among women who were living with their husbands.

The offspring of virgin birth would probably be female, or less likely an abnormal male. Scientific tests on the infant could proceed with certainty such a birth by examination of his physical makeup.

Absolute proof of a virgin birth would be the ability of a mother to take a skin graft derived from the child without breakdown and with indefinite persistence of the graft, the journal reported.

The Lancet also said that possibly some of the unmarried mothers whose obstinacy is condemned in old books on forensic medicine, or cited as a curiosity by their contemporaries, may have been telling the truth.

Languages Needed

Students who want to pass need a good term mark, Professor E. Goggio, Head of the Spanish Department, warned Friday at a meeting for first year Spanish students. The term mark will count one-third of the final exam mark, he said.
 Prof. Goggio pointed out some advantages of studying modern languages. A knowledge not only of language but also of historical, cultural and social background enables us to understand new immigrants now pouring into Canada by the thousand, he said.

 Besides benefiting the teacher and the literary man, modern languages are an asset to the artist, the scientist and the engineer, he added.

The meeting concluded with a presentation of prizes. Of those donated by the Republic of San Domingo, the first year award went to Miss Wensley, second year to Miss High, third to Mr. Schiefen and fourth year to Miss Porter. The second year general award of the "Circulo Hispanico" of Toronto went to Miss Bergamin, Miss Leitch received the first year prize of the Uruguayan Republic, Wendy McQueen, the second year, Miss Russell the third year and the fourth year prize went to Mr. Wickett.

Metcalf and Miss Porre received the awards of the Southern Ontario Chapter of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese.

conservatism or creativity?

There is only one thing on this campus that is in a more deplorable state of disrepute and disregard than NFCUS. And that is creative writing.

Exactly one course in writing is offered by the University, and that is only available to a select number of students in fourth year honour English who are recommended by the department.

Some arts colleges have no professor assigned to teach this course, let alone a professor particularly qualified to teach writing.

If the load on present English staff is too great, it would seem possible to have at least one professor in the whole university qualified and prepared to teach the course.

In some arts colleges students are discouraged from enrolling in the course, because under the present set up it would involve missing a course in modern literature.

This, unfortunately, rather typifies the attitude towards creative writing that comes from the professorial staff. It might be argued that a scholarly education in English Literature is the very thing that would squash the creative instinct. Though this is not necessarily true, there is little evidence to support the statement that a BA degree, or honours English is the best preparation for writing.

Toronto also remains one of the few Canadian Universities, without an all-university literary magazine. "The Varsity" can offer one issue a year, but this is hardly enough to stimulate campus writers.

There are a few clubs on campus run by students interested in writing that manage to get staff support. But again this is insufficient.

The University of Toronto has a rather unique opportunity to give leadership in the cultural field as in other fields.

Yet conservatism and cautiousness are the handmaidens here and opportunity is rejected as an undesirable suitor.

Gaels Last Title In '37 Lansky Chesseman Out

The Blues and the Golden Gaels will see off this Saturday afternoon in Richardson Memorial Stadium in what promises to be the most colorful battle yet for possession of the Yates Cup and the Intercollegiate senior football title.

This Saturday will be the first time since 1937 that Queen's have met Varsity in a post-season play-off. That fall the Gaels edged the Blues 7-6, after a season in which the two teams had split home-and-home encounters 9-3 and 3-0. It was the last time the Gaels won the coveted Yates Cup, and marked the end of college football supremacy for the Tricolor.

McGill won the title the following year, and then began the uninterrupted rule of Western and the University of Toronto that was only threatened for the first time last season. In all, the Mustangs won the championship seven times, while the Blues came home with the Yates three times in the 16-year period. There was no competition during the war.

But now Western have become also-rans, completing their first winless season since they entered the union in 1929. The Blues are always strong contenders and should remain so over the next few years. The Gaels, who will have almost the same team returning next fall, should continue as a threat, if not as champions.

Queen's will be at full strength for Saturday's tussle, although the condition of all-star centre Gary Lewis is doubtful. Lewis missed the closing game with McGill. The Blues will be without fullback Don Chesseman, and wingback Gerry Lansky when they meet Queen's, but otherwise the two teams are perhaps the best matched in many long years of Intercollegiate competition.

For Varsity coach Bob Masterson it will be a shot at his fourth Yates Cup, and for Frank Tindall the possibility of his first title since he became head coach at Queen's. So once again the chips are down, this time on strange ground for the Blues. It'll be a pleasure to whip them right in their own back yard.

Vic Gals Top PHE 12-2

By FLO MIDDLETON

The world series has nothing on the Women's Interfaculty Softball finals held yesterday at the Trinity bowl, when a sharp Vic squad downed PHE 1, 12-2. It was a true final with the best of ladies' ball being found in both teams, and as could be expected the pitching, fielding and batting was tops.

With Mary Foster at the mound and Bev Davidson in left field, the PHE gals had no opportunities to show their might in the first inning. Bev caught Sylvia Kerr's and Marc Haines' last hits to have the side quickly retired.

Joy Taylor started the heavy batting for Vic and her drive into centre field brought Jackie Wickware and Pru Smith home, to start the scoring. Joy got home and then Bev Davidson stepped out to end the inning with the score 3-0 for Vic.

Keeping up her first pitching, Mary Foster easily retired the side in the second after allowing two hits. Vic came to bat and not content with their lead, they continued to connect with Mary Lou Nash hitting the first homer of the game. She was followed across home plate by Pru Smith, Mary Foster and Joy Taylor.

The third inning saw the continuation of Vic dominance, both in the field as PHE went down one, two, three, and at the plate, with that starry athlete, Mary Foster hitting a home run with the bases loaded to increase the one sided Vic score to 11-0.

In the fourth and fifth inning PHE proved to the world that they had some spunk and that they did not deserve such a one-sided shellacking. Marg Haines, the PHE pitcher had only one run against her in the fourth as her infield tightened up and tossed excellent ball. In the fifth, PHE got their lone two runs.

This gives Victoria a third consecutive win in the women's interfaculty softball league. However many of last year's team members back, the Scarlet and Gold nine showed the strength and team play that makes a truly great team.

Jr. SPS Stays Unbeaten

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Wally Adams scored two touchdowns to lead SPS Jrs. to a hard-fought 13-5 win over a stubborn Dents team yesterday. The win moved Skule into a first place tie with UC, but the former have one game in hand.

Adams provided the game's biggest thrill by running the 2nd half kickoff back 85 yards for a major. Taking the kick on his own 15, Adams started slowly up the centre and then, following his blockers, cut over to the left sideline. Some fine blocking by Joe Whitmore and company enabled the ex-Malvern star to race down the sideline into the clear. Whitmore converted, Lally's interception on Dents' 25 yard stripe set up Adams' second score. Barchum took Clements' pass to the six, from where Adams skirted the right end for the TD. Whitmore again converted.

The Engineers had started the scoring in the first half when Jim Fawcett was rouged on Merv Zasitkovich's punt.

Dents marched up the field from their own 35 in the fourth frame to score their only points. Ray Laine climaxed a series of ground plays by plunging over from the eight yard line to make the final score 13-5, since the extra point was missed.

Fred Zorzi, Chuck Laywine and Nels Thompson sparkled on defence for Skule while Jim Fawcett was the shining light for the Dentist defenders.

Rohacek, Ken Harrison, John for Skule. The Irish were in Short and Don Ashly played well trouble, perhaps due to the fact that they are so confident of winning that only eighteen players show up for practice sessions. They almost lost yesterday's game on account of lack of condition. That's a dangerous sign!

Irish All Alone On Top Edge Senior Skule 7-6

By JOHN VOJTECH

With less than three minutes left in the Skule-SMC game yesterday, the Irish scored a touchdown to win the game 7-6. A forty yard pass tossed by Frank Kieley was caught on the Skule six yard line by Buddy Fletcher as four SPS defenders stood by. Leo Mcguigan smashed his way over for the major and Frank Kieley converted.

On the third play of the game, Gord Crandell picked up an Irish blocked kick on their ten yard line and scooted across the line for a major. Ken Selby converted. Kieley, for the Irish, fielded his team well as he tossed long passes, one a fifty yard effort to Bill Priestner. Curt Russell kicked a single early in the second quarter as Selby was rouged. Russell's kicks kept the Irish from being hemmed in their own end.

Ken Stanton aroused the crowd in the dying minutes of the encounter as he intercepted a Skule pass on his ten yard line and ran the ball to the SPS thirty. Jack Fenn and Leo Mcguigan ran off good gains in the Irish backfield. Curt Russell, Jim McKinnon, Jake Huschitt, Jack Andrews and Phil Wood played well for the Irish.

Al Wong will be out for the rest of the season as he injured his knee. He played a good game before retiring. Ken Selby and Mary Larcen kept the Irish at bay with their fine plays. Ed

"It looks to us scientists like the end," said Dr. Gall. Dr. Fabray added that "the human machine was terribly imperfect. It had to be replaced sooner or later as it no longer answers the requirements of modern engineering."

What's news at Inco?

Fleet experience suggests that savings in battery inspection, and maintenance costs are as important as the long life, temperature and power output characteristics of this new Sintered Plate Nickel-Cadmium Battery. Because this battery does not fume it can be located inside the truck cab or in the back of the bus.

Once a year water is added. Holds its charge in storage. No damage if discharged. The full story is below, and should interest every fleet operator.

NEW BATTERY LASTS 15 YEARS! INCO NICKEL PLAYS IMPORTANT PART

Designed for tough conditions, the new Nickel-Cadmium Battery is capable of successful service at 65° below zero and at 135° above. It has extra starting power and low maintenance costs. Inco aided in development of the special materials that made this remarkable battery possible.

Here are Facts About the Sintered Plate Nickel-Cadmium Battery

Ques. Will it operate in extreme cold and heat?

Ans. Types are available which will start an engine at 65° below zero F. Can be charged at 65° below zero F. These batteries will not freeze until the temperatures drop below 75° below zero F., and will not be damaged even if they are frozen. At the other extreme these batteries will operate successfully at temperatures as high as 135° F. without damage to the battery.

Batteries are compact because thin, flexible nylon and plastic separators are used.

Ques. What type of battery is it?

Ans. The new Nickel-Cadmium Battery is an alkaline battery, employing potassium hydroxide, rather than acid, as the electrolytic compound.

Ques. What is the Nickel-Cadmium Battery suitable for?

Ans. The Nickel-Cadmium Battery can be used in any type of service where the conventional type of storage battery is employed. No modification of the charging system or of the electrical system is required.

Ques. How about storage?

Ans. The Nickel-Cadmium Battery can be stored either charged or uncharged without damage. If stored charged, it will hold its charge for a very long time. At low temperatures there is practically no loss of charge. This means that the battery can be left out all winter and it will be ready for work in the spring. With this battery, fleet operators need no "battery room". Cycling of batteries in stock is eliminated.

Ques. How does it compare in size and weight with other batteries?

Ans. In a truck or bus a Nickel-Cadmium Battery half the size of a conventional battery will give twice the starting power at low temperatures and is much lighter.

Ques. Does it give off fumes?

Ans. The Sintered Plate Nickel-Cadmium Battery does not give off noxious or corrosive fumes. It can safely be installed under the rear seat of a bus, away from the damaging effect of salt and gravel.

Ques. Can heavy-duty types be obtained?

Ans. They are giving good service starting railway diesels and operating railway signal systems and in many tough jobs.

Ques. Will they soon be available in Canada?

Ans. Canadian-made batteries are already available and in use in limited quantities in Canada.

Vic Debate -- Geneva OK

Something Changed By Big Four Parley But It's No Munich

"Geneva has changed something" decided the Vic Debating Parliament last night, as the topic "Resolved that Geneva has changed nothing" was defeated 16-9.

Speaking for the government Bill Maxwell and Bill Babe claimed that the Geneva Conference did nothing to further the cause of world peace and settle essential differences between east and west.

"It was a good propaganda show," said Bill Maxwell. "Geneva had nothing to do with the change of attitude of the Russians. It was a prearranged plan."

"Russia and Red China hope to use this relaxation of tension to strengthen themselves internally. The west cannot afford to let its position be undermined by false hopes and a feeling of false security," said Bill Babe supporting the motion.

The resolution was opposed by Don Stevenson and Mac Claridge.

"Geneva was the first and most significant attempt since the end of the war to combat the main causes of war: fear, pride and ignorance," said Stevenson.

"This is no Munich," he added. "We are negotiating from strength. Geneva is the recognition of the need for east and west to agree to differ."

Claridge said that Geneva resulted in a strengthening of the U.N. and a lowering of the iron curtain barrier between the Soviet bloc and the west. He cited the "spirit of Geneva" as signifying a change from cold war to cold peace and the realization that war is no longer practical as an instrument of policy.

In summing up their case the government asserted that no important agreements were reached, at or since the conference at Geneva.

Babe accused the opposition of naive optimism, and demanded more proof of Russian sincerity in view of their past record of broken treaties and treachery. He said that since the introduction of the "new Russian look" the cause of the west has deteriorated.

Use of lengthy quotations by the opposition from such authorities as Voltaire and St. Paul drew objections from the government bench, but apparently impressed members of the House, who defeated the resolution by a vote of 16-9.

In spite of the "stimulating nature of the debate," the lack of comment from the House was commented on by speaker Robert Saunders.

McGill's James Seconds Smith On Student Riots

McGill (CUP): If another student rioting incident occurred, Dr Cyril James, the Principal and Vice-Chancellor of McGill University, would probably concur with Toronto in suspending the football league, Harry Griffiths, Director of Athletics at McGill told the McGill Daily.

He said that in his opinion Dr. James would agree to the suspension in such circumstances, and that the suspension would probably last a year or longer.

However he did not think anything would be done this year since the season is almost over. Mr. Griffiths said he did not think Dr. Smith was bluffing in his suggestion of a possible suspension of the League.

The McGill Daily quoted Dr. Smith as saying that "though the possibility of cancellation of games would have to be considered, the suggestion was not a threat."

"But if that is the only way to prevent development of hoodlumism that might lead to personal injury or death, we will have to do it," said Dr. Smith according to The Daily.

Nurses Challenge Forty Beer Men Not To Booze Bout, But To SHARE

Another challenge has been thrown to the engineers — this time from the School of Nursing.

The nurses made an unprecedented challenge to Skule to top the School of Nursing in percentage contributions to the annual SHARE campaign and in sales of tickets to the SHARE banquet to be held Nov. 14.

SHARE campaign chairman, Anne Mierzima, promises a date with a nurse to any engineering student giving over $2.

Said Engineering Society vice-president, Gordon Kelly. "We're glad of the competition; it's great for Skule spirit. The engineers are sure to win."

The challengers have produced the following poem:

The nurses said to themselves one day

"Let's challenge that hunch of Engineers,

The ones who managed forty beers,
To collect more money from all their men
Than us poor gals at S of N."
So come on fellows — give to SHARE,
To prove to all we really care!

Further consequences for winners and losers are to be announced later. The Skule cannon will not play a part in these.

NFCUS on Trial In Student Vote

Winnipeg, Manitoba (CUP): A student referendum on NFCUS is scheduled for the middle of this month at the University of Manitoba. Students will vote "yes" or "no" on the question of the U. of M. retaining its NFCUS membership.

'55 Directory Goes On Sale In Ten Days

The University of Toronto directory will go on sale in 10 days. Registrar J. C. Evans announced yesterday.

Some 2,000 to 2,200 copies, selling at $1.00 each, will be printed, an increase over last year's 1,600 which were sold within two weeks of publication.

This year, asterisks are to be placed beside the names of third year students who are graduating.

Cost of producing the directory — amounting to about $3,000 a year — is never covered by receipts from sales.

Except for being slightly thicker, due to increased enrollment, there will be no change in the appearance of this year's directory.

Complete With Chaperones

Sponsored Continental Honeymoon

BEVERLY RHODES, the writer of this article, was married this summer in England. Her honeymoon was sponsored by a variety of enterprises. Miss Rhodes (the former Beverly Finland, and now a student in fourth year English Language and Literature) here tells of her continental honeymoon.

London, England, June 4.— . . . And so the bride and groom left on their honeymoon, accompanied by two chaperones.

What! Chaperones on a wedding trip? Yes, indeed; two chaperones (later a third joined the gay party) were the string attached to the gift of a week's honeymoon in France.

All this resulted from a letter to Wilfred Pickles, who gives away things on his BBC radio-TV programme. The writer, my fiancée's landlady, requested "a nice honeymoon" for us in view of our away-from-home wedding. Four days before the Big Day, our own modest plans cancelled by the rail strike, we got the news of this marvelous (all expenses paid) launch trip up the Seine.

The funny situations that filled the week began immediately. Just imagine the happy couple seated comfortably in the back of a monstrous Rolls-Royce (laid on by Illustrated magazine), and there on the jump-seats the magazine's photographer and staff-writer. Before the car could pull away all four of us were showered with confetti. London Airport held another awkward moment for our photographer; somehow the reservations had been confused.

My husband, our journalist (Mr. Bruce), and I were checked off without incident; the photographer's name (Mr. Waldorf) was nowhere to be found.

Then the solution! My passport still read "Miss Finland" (and still does); the party of four appeared on the list as "Mr. (Continued on Page 8)

Nov. 24th Elections On Mock Parliament

Elections for this year's Mock Parliament will take place on Thursday, November 24, said Robert Fenn, President of the Political Economy Club, which is sponsoring the event.

The Mock Parliament was not held last year, although previously it was an annual institution on the campus. On election day, all students are entitled to go to one of the numerous polling booths around the campus, and cast their ballots for any one of the four parties participating: Progressive Conservative, Liberal, CCF, and LPP (Communist).

The seats in the parliament will then be allocated among the four parties on the basis of the voting, and debates will take place in a "Mock Parliament" held in the legislative chambers, Queen's Park.

Fenn said that all four political parties had agreed to participate in the parliament.

The Varsity will run a series of articles by the four political parties the week before the elections.

Game Info

Kingston (CUP) — All purchasers of tickets to this Saturday's final football game in Kingston will be expected to abide by the conditions attached to the sale of such tickets. These include the prohibition of any liquor, or pop bottles, in the Stadium.

These rules will be enforced by a special squad of police. Any Varsity student breaking them will be expelled from the Stadium; and any Queen's students found guilty of an infraction will also be subject to fines.

SMC Downs Saints 56-18

The spirited St. Hilda's basketball team went down to defeat last night when St. Mike's double blue netted a 56-18 victory. In the first quarter, St. Hilda's guards cramped the double blue style, but St. Mike's made a fine comeback to chalk up several points. St. Hilda worked the ball, breaking through St. Mike's defense keeping the game in their part of the court a good deal of the time.

However, the double blue was quick on the offensive, making the majority of their shots good. Their passes were fast and accurate, placing themselves in scoring positions. Dolly Molnor, besides setting the plays up for St. Mike's, was high scorer with her speedy lay-ups, racking up twenty-two points. Joanne Lappitto trailed with sixteen followed by Norma Walsh's eleven points. High scorer for St. Hilda's was Freddy Bull with ten points, followed by Mary Lynn Boys with four.

Vic Girls Edge PHE 1 28-24

P.H.E. I was downed by the Vic Freshie A basketball team 28-24 Monday night in one of the fastest and most spirited games of the season. Star of the Vic team was Jill Segong with 16 points and for P.H.E. I Jackie Davies was top-scorer with 11 points. Outstanding guards on the Vic team were Anne Waugh and Beth Hodgson. It was a close game throughout, but in the last minutes of play good form gave ground to a very reckless display of fouling which ended only with the end of the game.

State Teachers Engage Varsity Harriers Today

The Varsity Senior Harrier team is host this afternoon to the Buffalo State Teachers squad. The dual cross-country race will serve as Toronto's last warm-up before tackling the Intercollegiate finals at Queen's this Saturday.

The Buffalonians bring with them an impressive string of wins, including an earlier triumph over Niagara University, who defeated Varsity three weeks ago in their initial meet. However, the Blue team has greatly improved since then, and should prove more than a match for their opponents.

The Blue team will be strengthened by members of the Intermediate team who turned in a fine showing in McMaster last Saturday. Starting time will be two o'clock on the High Park course.

BLUES BATTLE QUEEN'S FOR YATES

Gee Brought Up From Seconds For Saturday's Gridiron Classic

Two and one half solid months, full of practice, strategy, injuries, ups and downs, ins and outs, and all the other little things incident to capturing an Intercollegiate football championship, will go on the block for the test this Saturday in George Richardson Memorial Stadium when the Varsity Blues and the Queen's Golden Gaels lock horns to decide the rightful resting place of the Yates Cup. The Blues, armed with the usual blessing, and supported by some 2,000 beery supporters, will invade old Kingston this weekend in search of their twentieth Intercollegiate title, while the Gaels will attempt to provide an opposition that will effectively decimate Varsity's, and bring them their first championship since 1937.

Just how strong the Gaels' bid will be will depend to a great extent on the talented right arm of one Gus Braccia, on the ability of scabbard Ron Stewart to find those holes in the Blue defensive blanket, and on the bench strength the Gaels can produce to outlast Varsity to the final whistle.

Word last night from the Queen's camp indicated that fullback Al Kocman, a strong defensive back, will be dressing for the final, while all-star centre Gary Lewis, out for two weeks with a bruised hip, is possibly a starter also. That leaves the Gaels without anything like the injuries that have plagued the Blues.

Missing both fullback Don Cheeseman and wingback Gerry Lansky for Saturday's tilt, Bob Masterson has brought Rusty Gee up from the intermediates for added manpower. Gee will see action at flying wing, replacing the injured Lansky, while Masterson has moved little Wally Bulchak over to fullback to replace Cheeseman.

The switch gives the Blues a backfield almost as pint-sized as the Gael squad of last season; when Gary Schneider, Stewart, and Kocman ran from the half line. With Muntz, Rogers, Bulchak, Maik and Gee performing, 6'4" Harry Wilson is the only person who prevents us from labelling the Blue ball-carriers as the pony backfield.

Interfaculty Summary

Trinity A's became almost certain candidates for a playoff berth in interfaculty soccer by defeating Junior SPS 2-1 yesterday afternoon on the back campus.

Weynerowski and Clarkson were the marksmen for the winners, while Kyakov counted a single for the Engineers. In other soccer action, Emmanuel won over Architecture by default.

Victoria Firsts walloped Meds II 9-4 in an interfaculty lacrosse game yesterday in Hart House Ken with four, Little with three, and Cosmick and Struthers with one each, paced the Scaplet and Gold attack. Loach scored two and Saunders and Van Nostrum added singles for the Doctors.

SPS A's defeated Architecture 15-8, 15-5 in a University league volleyball match yesterday. In intramural league competition Architecture defaulted to Law.

Seconds Aiming For Fifty Could Make It On Friday

Still aiming for the 50 point mark which has eluded them all season in games with the weaker clubs in the Intermediate league, the Baby Blues play host to the Queen's Comets here on Friday afternoon. As one of the players put it after they missed by only two touchdowns against Ryerson last Friday, "All the fellows wanted to hit fifty; we'll go all out for it against Queen's, that's for sure."

Unless Queen's has come up with some big changes during the season, the Seconds may very well reach their goal. In their first game of the season, the Baby Blues walloped the Comets 35-0, and the team has certainly improved since that opener.

Wingback Rusty Gee was top man for the Kennedy-men in that game with two majors, while Tim Reid and Bob Dann were authors of long gains and were, along with John Tattle and Gee mainly responsible for the 26 first downs they collected compared to just ten picked up by the Comets.

As the season draws to a close, the Baby Blues boast a very successful record. They have won four, tied one, and lost but one game. Their four victories were all by wide margins, while their lone defeat was by only two points. They lost that one to Western and beat them in the second game 21-0. The point record reads a very respectable 130 for and but 24 against.

Vic Silences Panthers 5-0 To Share Lead With SMC

By JOHN BROOKS

There were many fumbles on the Back Campus yesterday in the bitter cold weather, but it only took one Trinity miscue to throw away its opportunity to move into a first place tie with St. Mike's. Paul Newman took advantage of the bobble to race across for the lone game score as a much-improved Vic team blanked the Panthers 5-0 and, as a result, themselves share the top spot.

It was Victoria all the way, as the running of quarterback Frank Ebenhardt and hard-driving Ron Bertram tore apart the Trinity team. Dave Smith made a valiant effort to get Trinity back in the fight, but time ran out in the last half. Smith struck Dave Greenwood with a thirty-five yard pass on the last play of the game and that was one of the few things the Trinity fans had to cheer about.

Vic scored its game-winning major in the first quarter and came very close to adding another in the second half when Ebenhardt broke away only to be brought down by Dave MacGregor from behind with a clear field in front of him. In the last frame, Trinity fumbled on its eight yard line, but three line smashes by the red and gold failed as the Panthers' line tightened up.

An outstanding feature of the game was the kicking of the rival quarterbacks. Ebenhardt and Brook Ellis. Ellis especially stood out as the author of several forty to forty-five yard punts.

Trinity takes on front-running St. Mike's Friday, and a win will move them back into first place along with Vic and the double blue, while leaving SPS further behind in the cellar of Group One.

Queen's Golden Gaels placed five men on the mythical squad of all-stars released by the Canadian University Press last night. University of Toronto had three men, as did McGill, while University of Western Ontario had only one.

The twelve players were selected by a poll of the sports-writers of the four college newspapers involved, after the close of the regular schedule last Saturday.

Unanimous choices on the dream team were halfbacks Ron Stewart, of Queen's and Phil Muntz of Varsity, giving Stewart all-star status for the third year in a row. Mustard fullback Ralph Simmons was also a unanimous choice of

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Once again it's Wednesday and it's neck deep in the College press. We would like to take issue with Andy O'Brien, Vic Obeck, Mike Rodden, Jack Park, and any others we happen to think of in the next hour or so on a number of points that have recently been brought up regarding the state of Intercollegiate sport today, football in particular.

Let's begin with the versatile Mr. O'Brien who was asking in print just last week, "What is wrong with our college sport?" O'Brien seems to think that college sport is no longer spectacular and has "divorced to intermediate fare". He adds that not one senior hockey team could beat a top Junior 'A' club and it is on this statement that we will disagree with him. Last year's intercollegiate champions, the hockey Blues, were quite capable of beating a number of Junior 'A' clubs. At the very beginning of the season, when the Blues had practiced for maybe three weeks, and the Marlboros had been playing league games for well over a month, we recall the Blues tying the Marlies twice 2-2 and 4-4. As a matter of fact, the Blues were winning that second game until a disastrous last minute of the third period. If memory serves us correctly, Mr. O'Brien, the Marlboros won the Memorial Cup in subsequent action. How's that?

Now this fellow Obeck, to whom O'Brien addressed his question about college sport, has come up with four fundamental errors which we are to believe are being made at Canadian universities concerning the operation of sport, particularly football. According to O'Brien, Obeck is "possibly the best qualified man in Canada on the subject". Well, we've already taken issue with Andy O'Brien on one point, let's just examine what Vic Obeck has to say about the problem.

First of all, he seems to have discovered a feeling of "it's nice to be a good loser" that is prevalent on the college scene today. We can think of only one consistent, and possibly not-so-good loser in recent years in College ball—McGill. For the benefit of those of you who don't know, Obeck coached the Redmen a few years back. He doesn't any longer. We think that most college football players do play to win, certainly not at all costs, but a good deal more than some professional clubs we might name.

Then there's this business of watering down college sport because says Obeck some other colleges set up a "diminished" system of athletic education. Here we go again. Nobody has ever caught "it" so why worry about it? A Varsity football team is not set down besides the game, but College football is not the only sport that happens on the campus in the fall, and it is probably well for a few years yet. Just because the good people of Montreal and Toronto can't seem to get on to ways to catch the "it" performance we wish to be held to water, the game doesn't.

The ex-McGill coach goes on in the same vein about coaches whose hands are tied by the alumni, etc., and then suggests that the Canadian colleges aren't facing the facts on amateurism. Other colleges besides McGill have apparently been content to let their head football coaches run things their own way. Masterson, Metras, and Tindall all have long, and in the case of two of them, enviable records at their respective schools. And who would be rash enough in this 1955 season of Intercollegiate ball to make a fuss about amateurism in college sport?

Now Mike Rodden has said that the decline of Intercollegiate football began to decline with the introduction of the "backyard game". Again for the information of those of you who don't know, Rodden stopped coaching senior football about the time Walter Smeets began pitching the Montreal Winged Wheelers to the Grey Cup. How anybody could imagine that any kind of football suffered from the forward pass we don't know, but we are convinced that the kind of football played today in the Intercollegiate is better than that of ten, fifteen, or twenty years ago. And so without further ado we would just say: sour grapes, Mr. Obeck, and Mr. Rodden.

Hello Kingston! What's This . . .

We see in yesterday's Star that Danell quotes Jovial John Metras as saying that the Blues will beat Queen's Varsity if the better ball club "commented Metras, "but the Blues should stay on the ground where they belong." Okay, John if you say so.

Oh, yes, one more growth before we go. This fellow Park in the London Free Press is bitter because the Mustangs have never had a playoff game and here the Gaels get on the first time they qualify. Western could have had one several times, says Park but elected to play in Toronto. Very unjust. Where did they play the final game last fall Mr. Park?

By MERLE OVERHOLT

A squad of Western females invaded the Front Campus on Saturday morning armed with lacrosse sticks and goalie pads to find a similarly armed team of Toronto gals ready to stage an earth-shattering counter-attack. An excellent offensive and defensive attack brought the Varsity XII to a 4-2 victory over the Western Invaders.

Scoring three goals for the Varsity team, Caroline Cadbury was the star of the offensive team and a goal by Mary Nunn ensured victory for the Varsity gals. Molly McEalfe did an excellent job defending the Toronto goal by out-timing potential Western scorers. Mary McLeod and Kim Malcolmson playing cover-point and point respectively, displayed fine defensive action for the victorious team.

Molly Armstrong was the lone scorer for Western bringing in two goals in the second half of play. Another valuable player for the Western Invaders was centre Ruth Hutchinson.

The teams were closely matched and the game was definitely not a one-sided affair. The Varsity gals, coached by Blythe Brown, however, did show a superior degree of passing skills and team co-ordination. Mary Vicars, the chief organizer, did an excellent job in running the match. It is only regrettable that the game was not more widely publicized.

Elsewhere on the campus the tennis enthusiasts are hibernating to the Drill Hall every Wednesday afternoon from four to six with the onslaught of the cold weather. There will be instruction available for all who want it, but it is not necessarily the order of the day. The only prerequisite is . . . (Continued on page 8) the selectors. Simmons was on the team last year also. McGill's best end, and Intercollegiate scoring champion Johnny Bennett was a unanimous choice at one end, as was McGill's Buster Brown. Guard Bennett and Brown were largely instrumental in the Redmen's late season spurge in which they recorded victories over the Blues and Western. Gael tackle Jim Hughes was also a unanimous choice.

Redman quarterback Dick Carr got the nod for the pivot spot, but missed perfection by only one point. Giel end Lou Bruce and Varsity guard Bobby Waugh were both one point short of perfection. Waugh was on the team last season.

Other choices were Queen's centre Gary Lewis, Blue tackle George Eskin and Queen's Gary Schneider at the other halfback.

president's message

President Sidney Smith recently was elected national president of World University Service which is sponsoring the two-week SHARE campaign. Here he writes to the students and staff of the university as its president.

Once again I am happy to have the opportunity to write on behalf of the SHARE campaign. SHARE by name, and in spirit, seeks to fulfill the Golden Rule. I can think of no recent development in the University that gives more cause for satisfaction both among students and staff. SHARE brings together organizations, colleges, faculties and schools in the service of a great cause — the brotherhood of man. I hope that there will be a generous response to the SHARE appeal.

SIDNEY SMITH.

asia

More than half the people of the world live in Asia. A century ago they were regarded as a negligible factor in international relations, except as economic or political assets to be fought over by the Western powers.

Today, however, the peoples of Asia are undeniably important and often of central importance in the gravest international issues of our age.

No one can prophesy what their role will be tomorrow or the next day, except that it is certain to be far more important than today. While it may be an exaggeration to say that Asia will decide the fate of the world, it is no exaggeration to say that the fate of the world is in the hands of Asia; for in a rapidly shrinking world it is unlikely that there will be more than one fate for man.

It is all the more urgent, therefore, that the changes taking place in Asia should be properly appreciated, for the awakening of a giant continent is

When the world was huge and terrifying in its magnitude men could afford to be small and parochial but now that the earth's boundaries have contracted into the span of a single day there is only time for greatness.

An Indian student must sleep huddled in the shade of a tree. In Japan a consumptive, TB-ridden student is forced to go through his daily round spreading the seeds of death.

In terms of human misery and suffering the picture is bleak enough but when one reflects that these are students — students called on to suffer to a degree we cannot understand — the picture is appalling.

We can, if we choose, each turn the key in the lock of our own cell, close ourselves in on the smug, well-fed, comfortable world we call our own.

But once remember that these people tomorrow will inherit the leadership of Asia and that the world then — even more than now — will not be ours but theirs and we will know we can no longer afford the luxury of refusing to be our brother's helper.

To this end we give: that tomorrow's Asia will not fall heir to prejudice, isolation and bigotry inherited from today's poverty and need.

seminar students see sanitorium Canadian dollars helped to build

By JIM CARTER

World University Service is an international organization embracing the students of 36 countries in what has been called "a university-level Colombo Plan."

Through self-help projects the benefits of co-operation are manifested three fundamental ways. The first is through the provision of medical supplies, health facilities, books and journals, housing and instruments to university students in underprivileged areas.

In Japan, an extensive WUS program on this material level has already been carried out the most dramatic part of which is perhaps the 33-bed T.B. sanitorium near Tokyo which was completed and officially opened during the summer seminar this summer.

Apart from the immediate need this WUS project fills among the 20,000 tubercular students it also represents the first all-student san in Japan.

It is hoped it will be the beginning of a substantial government effort to supply the beds needed by the 3,000 to 5,000 students who require hospitalization.

Already the WUS san has attracted considerable attention from the public and government.

The Japanese students themselves raised through local WUS committees $11,250 for the project and also organized work-camps to help in its construction.

Similar work-camps administered relief to Kurme Medical College which suffered extensive flood damage in the Kyushu floods. It is significant that 55 of these students were from Tokyo. Community co-operation on such a scale is extremely rare in Asia.

More than $2,000 was provided by WUS international last year for text-books and journals specifically required by the Japanese committee. In addition, food and clothing were distributed in emergencies at Tsuda Women's College and Ningata University.

To help finance accommodation, supplementary tuition and pay tuition and examination fees a sum of $10,000 was allocated to Japan by WUS international.

This may seem like a small sum but it makes possible for no less than 200 students.

Of course, this again is essentially a nucleus program from which it is hoped more adequate governmental measures will grow. This generally is the nature of the material aspect of the WUS program in Japan.

The second level of the WUS program is the exchange of information among all member and some non-member nations.
